Re LUDLOW CHARITIES.

Attorney-General—Charity—Practice.

On the opening of a petition by Sir Charles Wetherell and Wray, on the behalf of the schoolmaster and others interested in the Ludlow Charities, praying that a suggested compromise of an information for the administration might not be sanctioned.

Twiss, for the Attorney-general, objected that the petition had not received the sanction of the Attorney-general, and claimed that a petition by the relators to confirm the compromise, which had the sanction and support of the Attorney-general, ought to be first heard.

The information had been originally filed on the relation of Lord Powis against the Corporation of Ludlow, to obtain for these charities certain lands which were held by the corporation, and which had been let upon long terms of years at nominal rents. After a time the leaseholders and the corporation came to an agreement with the relators, in the absence of the Attorney-general, and without his consent or knowledge, to pay to the charities the sum of 850*l.* a year, to obtain an Act of Parliament to sanction the arrangement, and to stop all proceedings in the information. On the matter being brought under the notice of the then Attorney-General, Sir John Campbell, he thought the lands claimed to be charity lands could not be identified.

Sir Charles Wetherell's clients opposed the bill in Parliament, and procured it to be referred to a committee of the House of Lords, when it appeared that to a very considerable extent the lands could be identified. The dissolution first of Parliament, and subsequently of the Government, which occurred in 1841, put a stop to these inquiries. The same parties again applied in the following Parliament for an Act of Parliament, and again without the consent of the Attorney-general. They were then heard before the new Attorney-general, Sir Frederick Pollock, and presented to him new evidence, when he thought they might present a petition to discharge the original order of reference to the Master, and pray for a fresh reference to consider the new terms of compromise offered. Upon that reference, which was to consider the propriety of the originally proposed compromise of 850*l.* the Master recommended that an increased offer of 1,200*l.* then made by the corporation and their leaseholders should be accepted by the charity, but he had no power under the order of reference to sanction it. The parties then again attended the Attorney-General, and a further increased offer of 1,500*l.* was suggested by the Attorney-General, and assented to by the corporation. The schoolmaster and the other clients of Sir Chas. Wetherell not being satisfied, he was again heard before the Attorney-General; but before anything had been done, Sir Frederick Pollock was appointed Chief Baron of the Exchequer. Sir Charles Wetherell's clients then presented a new petition, praying that no further proceedings might be taken with respect to the compromise which had been suggested. That petition had been presented without the sanction and against the wish of those acting at present in this matter on the behalf of the Attorney-General. Another petition had also been presented by the relators, with the sanction of those acting for the Attorney-General, to confirm the compromise of 1,500*l.* a year to the charities, and to direct what Act of Parliament should be applied for.

Twiss contended that the relator's petition must be heard first, and the schoolmaster's petition could only be heard in the way of defence, especially as it received the sanction of the Attorney-General, who was the proper officer to protect the interests of the charity.

The LORD-CHANCELLOR.—Is there any suggestion that the relators are playing into the hands of the defendants? The Attorney-General appears to have accepted the aid of Sir Charles Wetherell's clients until he had made a certain use of them, and then seemed to say, I have now got enough through you and I will turn you adrift.

Sir Charles Wetherell.—If the proposal for the compromise even can be made out, the ground upon which it was suggested altogether fails. It was said the charity lands could not be identified; but inquiry has demonstrated the title of the charity to the greater part of the lands claimed. Neither the Attorney-General or the Court can force a compromise upon those interested in the charities. We object to make the Court a party to any compromise until it has heard what is the actual state of the title of the charity.

The LORD-CHANCELLOR.—A former compromise was suggested, and the Attorney-General sat in judgment upon that suggestion, to ascertain if it was reasonable, and afterwards the parties came to this Court to carry that compromise into effect. Then it turned out that new materials existed, and new evidence could be adduced, and the compromise was at an end. It is not for the Attorney-General to express an opinion as to the new terms of compromise now offered without hearing the parties interested in the charities who object to that compromise. The former petition stood over until after the Master had made his report. I am of opinion that Sir Charles Wetherell should begin. The petitions should be heard together. Sir Charles Wetherell should state his case, then Mr. Lloyd, for the relators, may say his clients are desirous of a compromise with the sanction of the Attorney-General. The Attorney-General will then be heard in support of the relator's petition. I shall hear what Sir Charles Wetherell's clients have to say upon the old petition, and upon the reports of the Master under the former reference; and now as they present another petition in the same direction, and their efforts have been extremely meritorious and useful to the charity, inasmuch as every objection made by them has resulted in the offer of increased benefits to the charity, I shall hear them on that petition also. They presented a former petition, and now a second petition, which is consequential on the former. I shall hear them first.

Sir Charles Wetherell then proceeded to open the petition, and his opening occupied the remainder of the day.

CASH v. CASH.

Transfer of supplemental suits—Practice.

Walker applied for an order to transfer this cause from the Rolls to the Court of Vice-Chancellor Wigram. The decree had been made at the Rolls in 1834; and by an order dated 11th May, 1842, a supplemental suit was ordered to be transfered from the paper of the Master of the Rolls to that of Vice-Chancellor Wigram. In 1843 a fresh supplemental bill was filed and a decree in both supplemental suits was made by the Vice-Chancellor, reserving further directions. Upon making a motion before the Vice-Chancellor in the original cause, his Honour questioned whether the original cause had been transferred from the Rolls. It had been assumed that the necessary effect of the transfer of the supplemental suit was to transfer the original cause. Nothing could be now done at the Rolls. The Vice-Chancellor suggested that the matter should be mentioned to his Lordship.

Rolt, contrà. The original cause remains at the Rolls, and all the important business in the cause has been done in that Court. The notice of motion now given is entitled exclusively in the cause at the Rolls. It is only the state of the business in the different branches of the court, which causes suits to be transferred; and there is nothing in the present state of business at the Rolls to occasion a transfer from that court. It is more correct that the cause should be retained at the Rolls, as it will shortly come on there on further directions.

Walker, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The transfers of causes are made by the Master, though by my directions. In this case application upon the subject must be made to the Master of the Rolls, who knows all the merits of the question.

SAYER v. WAGSTAFF.

This cause was again in the paper to be spoken to, the effect of his lordship's judgment having been to refuse the taxation altogether, and to affirm the principle of the judgment of the Master of the Rolls; but the Master in the Rolls had, in fact, directed certain parts of the bill to be taxed, and it appearing from the judgment, as well as the short-hand writer's notes, that such reference was by consent,

His LORDSHIP thought some special direction necessary, but the counsel of both sides not being prepared, the matter again stood over.

Monday and Tuesday, Dec. 9 and 17.

SANDON v. HOOPER.

Mortgagee in possession—Repairs and improvements on mortgage property—Account—redemption.

A mortgagee in possession may perform the repairs necessary for the support of the mortgage property, and will be allowed to charge the expenses of such repairs against the property, before he can be redeemed, but without the consent of the mortgagor, express or implied, such a mortgagee will not be allowed sums laid out in alterations or improvements, although the value of the property may have been enhanced thereby; the rule being that the mortgagee shall not throw obstacles in the way of redemption by the mortgagor. And a mortgagee in possession will be held liable for any injury the mortgaged property may have sustained, by reason of his having pulled down cottages, and erected buildings of a different description. Where a mortgagee in possession claims as against a mortgagor, who has instituted a suit for redemption, to be allowed sums expended for lasting improvements, but adduces no proof of such expenditure, he will not be entitled to an inquiry on the subject, where the mortgagor has charged and adduced some evidence to prove that the value of the property has been depreciated by the mortgagee's alterations.

The plaintiff in this suit was the mortgagor of certain property, which, in 1830, had been mortgaged to the defendant, a solicitor, for 300*l.* In 1836, the plaintiff executed a further charge for 140*l.* which in part consisted of a bill of costs then due from the plaintiff to the defendant. The plaintiff sought to redeem, and the Master of the Rolls had decreed a redemption; but the defendant complaining that certain inquiries as to sums expended by him in permanent repairs and lasting improvements ought to have been directed by the decree, appealed to the Lord Chancellor.

It appeared that the defendant, the mortgagee, had in 1838 brought an action against the mortgagor, who was in possession of the chief part of the premises, and had obtained possession in 1839. In the same year the plaintiff gave notice of his intention to pay the principal and interest in six months, and at the expiration of that period tendered the sum of 440*l.* with interest; but the defendant claimed a further sum alleged to have been laid out by him in repairs and improvements, which swelled the debt to 882*l.* On the 18th of June, 1840, the present bill was filed. There was a charge in the bill that the defendant had improperly pulled down two houses, by which the property had been deteriorated in value; in answer to which, the defendant stated, that he had pulled down two dilapidated cottages, and had built a stable upon the site of them; that the cottages were in a ruinous condition, and totally unfit for habitation; and that with the privity of the plaintiff, he had expended a large sum of money in permanent and substantial repairs and lasting improvements. The plaintiff had examined several surveyors and other persons, some of whom stated that the property was of less value than before the defendant's alterations, and that the cottages used to be let for 10*l.* a year, whereas the stable would only let for 6*l.* The former tenants of the cottages also proved that they would have continued to occupy, had they not been turned out by the defendant. The Master of the Rolls held that the dilapidations were proved, and that the defendant was liable for any loss occasioned by the houses having been pulled down; that he had no right to "improve the mortgagor out of his estate," and that it was not a matter of course to an inquiry whether any money had been laid out in lasting improvements. The Master of the Rolls held also that the plaintiff was entitled to an inquiry as to the loss sustained in consequence of pulling down the cottages, and to the taxation of the bill of costs, which formed part of the consideration for the further charge, and that the defendant was liable to the costs of the suit.

Roupell and Stevens, for the appellant.

Jas. Russell and Chandless, for the plaintiff, the respondent.

Saturday, Dec. 21.

JUDGMENT.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This is a bill filed by the mortgagor for the redemption of a public-house and several cottages, which had been mortgaged to the defendant in 1830, for 300*l.* Afterwards, in 1836, there was a further charge. Subsequently the defendant brought an ejectment, and obtained possession of the premises. He then pulled down two cottages, and applied the materials upon property of his own, and built a stable upon the site of the cottages which had been pulled down. This was done without the consent of the mortgagor. I am of opinion that the defendant had no right to pull down the cottages; for it appears that they were not in such a state as to require to be pulled down. One of the witnesses examined by the plaintiff is a bricklayer, who was tenant of one of the cottages, and he said they might have been repaired for ten pounds. Both the tenants of the cottages state that they would have continued to occupy them if they had been permitted to do so. Several surveyors also were examined by the plaintiff, and some of them say that the property in its present state would not let for so much as it would have let for before the alterations made by the defendant. In this state of things the defendant committed an act of wrongful waste, by pulling down the two cottages and taking away the materials, and by building a stable in their place; and I am of opinion that he is chargeable with whatever loss the plaintiff has sustained in consequence of that wrongful act. How the Master of the Rolls decided was thus: he made the mortgagee chargeable with so much rent as the cottages would have let for had they not been pulled down, and he will have to pay the six pounds a year for which the stable has been let. This is not unfair, for he has so far permanently diminished the value of the property. Mr. Romilly says the mortgagee has built a stable, and ought to be allowed to deduct so much rent as it has produced from the sum he is charged with in respect of the cottages. But I do not accede to that, for the pulling down the cottages was a wrongful act. As the decree now stands, the mortgagor has an allowance of six years' rent, which, if he had remained in possession, he would have continued to have received for the future, besides the materials which have been taken off the property. I am satisfied the mortgagee has not been made to pay so much as he might have been charged with, and that it ought not to be referred to the Master to take an account of what has been laid out by the mortgagee. It was said that the sum which has been expended in lasting repairs and improvements enters into the loss sustained by the mortgagor; that the mortgagee has employed workmen in effecting necessary repairs, and also pulls down the cottages and puts something else in their stead. But taking the whole together, the mortgagee cannot take out the repairs and demand a reference to the Master to inquire how much of the sum he has expended has been for necessary and proper repairs, and how much in respect of his wrongful act, if upon the whole taken together there has been a diminution in the value of the property by reason of his alterations. The fact of the diminution of value appears upon the evidence in the cause as heard before me, and the defendant is, therefore, not entitled to any reference. Then as to the costs; the defendant refused to account when called upon, and therefore the bill became necessary. If the bill was necessary by the defendant's misconduct, the opinion of the Master of the Rolls was right upon that point. The decree must be affirmed with costs.

DEAN AND CHAPTER OF ELY v. BLISS.

Delay—Case for opinion of court of law—Statute of limitations—Tithes.

Lloyd asked that a case which had been directed to be sent for the opinion of the Court of Exchequer, and of which the defendant's solicitor had received a copy on the 17th of December instant, might be proceeded with forthwith. The case involved an important question on the proper construction of the Statute of Limitations with reference to tithes, but the case itself was extremely simple.

Phillips, for the defendants, asked that the matter might stand over until the first day of next term. The cause was heard in June last, when it stood over for the plaintiffs to prepare a case, which was only delivered to the defendant's solicitor two days ago. The solicitors had not had time to look at the case, and their junior counsel in the cause, Mr. Eagle, was engaged in the country on a tithe commission.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—If the matter stood over during the long vacation for the plaintiffs to prepare a case, and they had only sent it to the other side on the 17th instant, there could be no great injury from the short delay required by the defendant. It was ultimately settled that the matter should stand over until next term.

Re BURRIDGE, a Lunatic.

Lunatic's contract for necessaries—Sale of lunatic's estate.

Kinglake mentioned this petition, which was for a sale of a part of the real estate for the lunatic's maintenance. It had stood over to search for precedents, but no authority for the order asked had been found. The petitioner was a creditor of the lunatic's to the extent of 160*l.* for maintenance since the lunacy, and it was clear that a lunatic could contract for necessaries.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—There must be a reference to the commissioners to inquire whether there is any debt due to the petitioner; but no conditional order for sale, if any debt should be found, can now be made; but you must come back again when the commissioner has made his report.

Re BIRD, a Lunatic.

Practice—Personal estate the produce of real estate.

Wakefield supported a petition by the administratrix of the deceased lunatic to have a fund in Court, which had been produced by the rents of real estate, transferred. The heir-at-law had filed a bill claiming this fund, but his suit had been discontinued.

J. Baily, for the heir-at-law, did not now object to the transfer. Ordered.

Re WARRINER, a Lunatic.

Increased allowance to lunatic, on account of the sons of the next remainder-man in tail requiring to be advanced in life.

Wray supported a petition by the committee of the person and the estate of the lunatic, praying a confirmation of the commissioner's report, by which a proposal to increase the allowance for the maintenance of the lunatic from 400*l.* to 1,000*l.* a year had been approved of. The ground upon which such increase had been approved was, that the two sons of the lunatic's younger brother, who was the next remainder-man in tail of the real estate, were of an age to be sent to the University, and thereby their father would incur additional expense.

Re WATTS, an alleged Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Commission opposed by the mortgagee of lunatic's estate.

Practice in lunacy—Exhibits.

Wakefield and Wright appeared to support a petition by the wife of the lunatic for a commission. The affidavits on which they relied tended to shew that Watts had been for many years of unsound mind. He had cut off one of his fingers and destroyed one of his eyes, and justified those acts as literal fulfilments of the Scripture injunction, "If thy eye offend thee, pluck it out; and if thy hand offend thee, cut it off, and cast it from thee."

Anderdon and Bird, for the mortgagee of Watts's estate, opposed the application. They contended that the affidavits read did not form any real evidence of insanity. When Watts was in Reading gaol for debt in 1842, Mr. Mackay, a respectable solicitor, had advanced to him 500*l.* with the assent and at the earnest request of the present petitioner. On that occasion, in consequence of rumours of Watts's insanity, Mr. Mackay had, after much inquiry, taken a physician to visit Watts in gaol, and that physician had fully confirmed his competency. The security to Mr. Mackay was afterwards executed by Watts in the presence of the physician, the governors of the gaol, and a strange solicitor, who had been consulted on Watts's behalf, and all these persons were perfectly satisfied of his sanity. The avowed object of the petitioner and her son was to set aside securities which had many years ago been executed by Watts for the purpose of raising 8,000*l.* on a mortgage of his estate. There were affidavits of various relatives and other persons, who had long been acquainted with Watts, to shew that, though not a man of strong mind, he had always been treated as sane. He was not now under any restraint. The petition for a commission was merely got up for sinister objects. The mortgagees had been in possession since 1838, and they had recently obtained a decree of foreclosure. There was a letter from Watts to his wife upon the occasion of his receiving the subpœna in February, 1842, directing her what to do, which clearly proved him to be of sound mind. The acts of injury to his own person, adduced as proofs of insanity, were done under the influence of momentary irritations, and in consequence of the reproaches of his wife; besides they occurred many years ago.

Wakefield, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The petitioner will take the commission at her own risk; but before it issues, I should like Dr. Southey to see Mr. Watts. The mortgagees can attend, as creditors, the execution of the commission; the Court is at liberty to impose any terms on the person having the carriage of the commission.

On the 21st Dec. Anderdon again called his lordship's attention to this petition. His clients find that Dr. Southey intended to read only the medical affidavits before seeing Mr. Watts, and the only medical affidavit was that of Dr. Monro, who had deposed to Watts's insanity in support of the petition. The object of his clients was, that Dr. Southey might be instructed to read all the affidavits, and a bundle of Watts's letters which had been tied together and sealed, and one of them marked with a letter as an exhibit to an affidavit. This had been adopted to avoid the expense of making all the letters, which were very numerous, separate exhibits. At all events, that Dr. Southey might first communicate with a physician employed by those who opposed the commission, who, with Dr. Southey, might visit Watts. A question had also arisen as to the payment of Dr. Southey, who objected to move in the matter unless first paid.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—You must allow the secretary of lunatics to select such of the affidavits as he may think necessary for the perusal of Dr. Southey. The usual course is to send all the affidavits to Dr. Southey, who, on looking at them, will exercise his own judgment as to what he may think proper to read. The mortgagees cannot object to pay Dr. Southey in the first instance, as they expressly asked that some medical gentleman might attend Mr. Watts, in order to report upon the state of his mind. Dr. Southey will see Mr. Watts alone; I leave it to his discretion when, how, and in what place to see him. He will also read such of the affidavits as he may deem material. But unless the letters are properly made exhibits, they must not be placed before Dr. Southey.

The LORD CHANCELLOR (after inspecting the letters).—The letter referred to in the affidavit is marked on one of the papers only, and there is nothing to prevent any others of these numerous letters from being removed and others substituted. Nothing can be more irregular than this. But as it is better not to exclude any evidence, let the petitioner have copies of these letters, and then they may be laid before Dr. Southey.

Nov. 21, and Dec. 1.

SHEPHERD v. SHARPE.

Principal and surety—Fraud and misrepresentation by the debtor and the creditor—Legal defence—Injunction.

Where the case made by the bill was, that an acceptance as surety had been obtained by fraud and misrepresentation on the part of the principal debtor and the creditor, and the Vice-Chancellor had granted an injunction to stay the trial of an action upon the bill until the hearing of the cause in equity, on the ground that the case was one of suspicion; it was held on appeal, that the question of fraud and misrepresentation must ultimately be tried at law, and the injunction was dissolved so far as it restrained the trial of the action; but the cause was retained, with liberty to the plaintiff in equity to apply immediately after the trial.

This was an appeal motion by the defendant to discharge an order by the Vice-Chancellor of England, continuing the common injunction to the hearing of the cause. The plaintiff was the acceptor of a bill of exchange for 600*l.* in favour of the National Provincial Bank of England, of which the defendant Sharpe was the public officer. The other defendant was Belcher, the assignee of Walton, the drawer, the person at whose instance the bill of exchange had been accepted by the plaintiff. Walton, up to September 1842, had been the superintendent of a branch of the National Provincial Bank, at Croyland in Lincolnshire, where he also carried on another business on his own account. The Croyland branch was subject to a superior branch at Peterborough; and Budwick, the manager there, having reason to be dissatisfied with the accounts of Walton, reported to the bank in London that there were inaccuracies in Walton's accounts. Atkinson, an inspector, was then sent from London, and arrived at Croyland on the 12th of September, 1842. On the following day, the 13th, Walton resigned his situation as manager, and on the 14th of September the deficiencies in Walton's accounts were partly ascertained. These deficiencies arose from Walton having received moneys from the customers of the bank, and not having given them credit in the bank books for all the sums they had paid in. As these deficiencies were discovered they were partly made good by Walton, who continued to assist Atkinson in the branch bank up to the 24th September, at which time only about 400*l.* of the deficiencies then discovered remained due from Walton. On the 26th of September Atkinson and Walton went together to Spalding fair, in order to meet several of the customers of the bank, and then other deficiencies, amounting to upwards of 900*l.* were discovered. Atkinson then pressed Walton for some further security, and Walton said that Shepherd (the plaintiff), a friend of his, would accept a bill of exchange for Walton's accommodation. Atkinson and Walton then went to Shepherd's house in a gig, when Walton got out, and had some conversation with the plaintiff in his yard, but not within the hearing of Atkinson, who remained seated in the gig. A stamp had been procured at Spalding, and the plaintiff having consented to accept a bill, Atkinson was called into the house, and requested to draw a bill of exchange for 600*l.* payable six months after date, which he did, and the plaintiff accepted it. Walton afterwards indorsed the bill to Atkinson for the bank. On the 7th of October an advertisement appeared in the local papers, stating that Walton had resigned the bank agency at Croyland, and that another person, named Lawson, had been appointed. Various other deficiencies were afterwards discovered in Walton's accounts, and in December 1842 he was declared a bankrupt. In March 1843, when the bill became due, it was dishonoured, and the bank immediately commenced an action against the plaintiff upon his acceptance.

The present bill was then filed, alleging fraud on the part of the agents of the bank in procuring the bill after they had become aware of Walton's deficiencies, and praying an injunction to restrain the action at law. The plaintiff alleged that Walton had stated that he required the bill until he had collected some money due to him; and that Atkinson did not disclose the position in which Walton stood towards the bank when he obtained the plaintiff's acceptance. The fact that Walton had resigned his bank agency was unknown to the plaintiff until the appearance of the advertisement on the 7th of October. The Vice-Chancellor of England thought the case one of great suspicion, and granted an order to extend the common injunction to the hearing.

Walker and Toller, for the appeal motion, contended that the question in this was the same as that at law, namely, whether there had been fraud and misrepresentation on the part of the creditor and the principal debtor towards the surety. The case was one peculiarly fitted to be sifted before a jury, and on which the court of equity could come to no satisfactory decision. If even there was misrepresentation by the principal debtor to the surety, the creditor, taking no part in the transaction, is not responsible for such misrepresentation. (Stone v. Compton, 5 Bingh. N. S. 142.) In another case in which an action had been brought by the bank against another person who had accepted a bill for Walton, Lord Abinger, in charging the jury, said the person receiving the guarantee did enough if he was silent. If a debtor's friends like to come forward, there was no necessity for the creditor's telling them that he owes a sum of money, or is a dishonest man. There was no such law: and if there were, it would render a great many securities bad. But if there had been misrepresentation by the creditor, the security might be bad.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Atkinson must have known that the plaintiff was falling into a pit.

Walker.—Only two sums discovered to be due from Walton before the journey to Spalding had not been made good, and Sharpe swears that it was believed that he (Walton) would ultimately pay all his debts and deficiencies. The bank say Walton had resigned the day after Atkinson arrived at Croyland.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—If Shepherd had been told the real circumstances, he would have required a counter-security from Walton. Read the passage in the defendant's answer.

Walker.—"That Atkinson arrived and temporarily took the conduct of the business of the bank; and that on the 13th of September Walton resigned, and his resignation was accepted by the directors, and that Lawson was appointed in his stead; denied that the directors or their agents had removed him." The bank feared to publish the facts, lest other customers should dispute their accounts.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Why has not the plaintiff a complete defence at law?

Walker.—He has pleaded at law—1. That he did not accept the bill; 2. That Walton did not indorse it, &c.; 3. That the bill was obtained by fraud and misrepresentation of Walton and the Banking Company; and, 4. That the bill was received by the company with notice of the fraud.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Nothing can be discovered of what took place on the acceptance of the bill except from Atkinson; I do not see what further discovery the plaintiff can get in this court.

Romilly and Sandys, for the plaintiff.—The case before Lord Abinger was at Nisi Prius. Walton appeared in the bank, and, as far as appeared to the world, continued to take part in the business there. The mere silence of Atkinson in this case was a fraud. (Smith v. Bank of Scotland, 1 Dow.)

Walker, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I understand that Atkinson acted in the office, and that Walton came in occasionally. Suppose I should be of opinion that the defendants should go on to trial, and not proceed further. The plaintiff in equity must call Walton on the trial at law, to state what took place upon his first requesting Shepherd to accept the bill. Assuming there to have been a false representation made by Walton, but not any collusion with Atkinson, the case ought to be tried at law. It appears that Atkinson said nothing; he did not know what Walton had said to the plaintiff. Atkinson was present at the acceptance of the bill, as a witness to the transaction. If Atkinson had been present and heard any false representation, or imperfect representation, made, and did not set it right, he would have been fixed. The Vice-Chancellor thought Atkinson appearing with Walton, without stating that he was not then in the employment of the bank, a circumstance of great suspicion. It is, however, better that the case should be tried at law. I shall dissolve the injunction, so far as it goes to restrain the trial at law, but I shall retain the cause here. I shall allow the plaintiff to go on to trial, and then see what the evidence is. The plaintiff will have liberty to apply, and I shall reserve the costs. The plaintiff may apply immediately after the trial. I don't consider justice can be done in this court alone, and that I must at last direct an issue or an action.

Re ROBINSON, a Lunatic.

Arrear of allowance to committee of a deceased lunatic.

The property of the late lunatic had consisted of a life interest in 40,000*l.* personal, and a real estate of about 300*l.* a year. His wife had been committee of the person, and the whole of the income had been allowed for maintenance. At the time of his death there was an arrear of allowance due to the wife, who now presented a petition praying that such arrear might be paid to her without any previous reference to the Master to inquire who were the lunatic's real and personal representatives.

Wakefield supported the petition, the prayer of which was granted.

Re STUART, a Lunatic.

Practice—Default of committee to account—Interim committee.

Two committees of the estate of this lunatic had been appointed, both of whom were out of the jurisdiction, and they had rendered no account in the matter for twenty years. One of the sureties was dead, and the other could not be found. The lunatic's allowance was 2,800*l.* a year. Under these circumstances, a petition was presented, praying for the appointment of a receiver.

Romilly and Taylor supported the petition.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—An interim receiver or committee must be appointed for the purpose of acting in the matter of the lunacy, and enforcing the defaulting committees to account.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE, OXFORD, v. PRATT.

Practice—Contempt—5 & 6 Vict. c. 22.

The 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22, being an Act for "consolidating the Queen's Bench, Fleet, and Marshalsea Prisons," and for regulating the Queen's prison, among other things recites that the Fleet Prison was a prison for debtors and bankrupts, and for persons charged with contempt of her Majesty's Courts of Chancery, Exchequer, and Common Pleas; and that by an Act passed in the second year of the reign of her Majesty, intituled "An Act for abolishing Arrest on Mesne Process in Civil Actions, except in certain Cases; for extending the Remedies of Creditors against the Property of Debtors; and for amending the Laws for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors in England," arrest on mesne process in civil actions was abolished except in certain cases, and further provision was made for the relief of insolvent debtors, by reason whereof the prison in the Court of Queen's Bench was sufficient to contain all the persons who were then imprisoned within the said several prisons, or who would thereafter be taken in execution of process of the said several courts, it was enacted, that after the passing of the Act, the prison then known as the prison of the Marshalsea of the Court of Queen's Bench should be called the Queen's Bench Prison, and should be the only prison for all debtors, bankrupts, and all other persons who, before the passing of the Act, might lawfully have been imprisoned in any of the said prisons of the Marshalsea, of the Court of Queen's Bench, the Fleet Prison, or the prison of the Marshalsea, and of the Court of the Queen's Palace of Westminster; and after the passing of the Act no person should be committed from any of the said courts to the Fleet Prison, or prison of the Marshalsea, and that the persons imprisoned in the Queen's Bench Prison shall be there in the custody of the marshal or keeper of the Queen's Prison, from whichever of the said courts they shall have been severally committed.

After an order for committing a party to the Fleet, the former practice for breach of an injunction had been in force for several years, but had become inoperative by reason of the above statute, and the defendant had not, during that time, violated the injunction. A motion for an order to commit the defendant to the Queen's Bench Prison was, under the circumstances of the case, looked upon as unnecessarily severe, and therefore refused.

This was a motion on behalf of the College of St. John, Oxford, for an order to commit the defendant to the Queen's Bench Prison. It appears that an order had been obtained for the committal of the defendant to the Fleet about five years ago for a breach of an injunction to restrain him from cutting down trees in Bagley Wood; this order had been in force during that period; and the defendant had hitherto kept out of the way to avoid being served with the order, which became inoperative by the abolition of the Fleet prison. The present application was, therefore, to revive the former order, by directing that Pratt, the defendant, should stand committed to the Queen's Bench Prison.

Bellamy, in support of the motion, submitted, that unless the Court could conceive it necessary to read effect to the former order, which had, in the case, the defendant under the circumstances of restraint, and the college would be without guarantee against his returning to would have similar waste to that for which the former committal of his committal had been allowed, but the order, effects of which he had, by absconding and keeping out of the way, hitherto contrived to elude.

Wakefield opposed the motion as wholly unnecessary and vexatious; the defendant in his affidavit had stated that he had not, except upon one occasion, for the purpose of transacting some important business, been in Oxford during the last five years; that it was not his intention to touch the trees, and that there was no reason to believe that he would again be found guilty of interfering with them. The learned counsel thought that the college had shewn a vindictive and persecuting spirit, and there was no reason whatever in again calling for the interposition of the Court.

His HONOUR the Vice-Chancellor observed, that he thought the punishment which the defendant had undergone for the last five years, in thus being driven from his home and business through a dread of the order of the Court, was quite sufficient for the present. He should certainly like to have seen a little more lenity displayed by that learned body towards the defendant, and therefore refused the application.

Saturday, Dec. 14.

WINCH v. BRUTTON.

Will—Precatory words—Insufficiency of such to create a trust.

W. B. the testator, having stated his intention of making a suitable provision for his wife E. B. as well as for his daughter and grandchild respectively, gave and bequeathed unto his wife E. B. all and singular whatever property and effects he might happen to die possessed of, either in possession, remainder, or expectancy, for her own use, benefit, and disposal absolutely. In a subsequent part of the will the testator says as follows:—"And whereas I have hereby manifested abundant proof of entire confidence in my said dear wife by thus giving her the sovereign control over the whole of my property for her sole use and benefit, which she will duly appreciate accordingly; but in so doing I nevertheless earnestly conjure her, under the advice of my executors, to proceed forthwith to make ample provision by deed or will for our only child and grand-daughter." The testator then gave all the rest, residue, and remainder of his estate and effects to his wife.

E. B. the wife, died in the testator's lifetime, and after her decease the testator made a codicil to his will, giving thereby a legacy to his servant, but without otherwise affecting the dispositions therein:—Held, that if E. B. the testator's wife, survived him, the effect of the different clauses in the will would have given her all his property absolutely for her own benefit, without its being fettered with any trust in favour of the daughter and grand-daughter.

The testator, William Bridges, by his will, reciting that he was desirous of making a suitable provision for his wife, Elizabeth, as well as for his daughter and grandchild respectively, although by the Statute of Distributions they would be equally well taken care of; but that in order to manifest the deep affection and unbounded confidence he had and entertained towards his wife, and believing she would be actuated by the most maternal regard towards their child, the testator then proceeded:—"I do hereby give and bequeath unto my said dear wife, E. Bridges, all and singular whatever property and effects I may happen to die possessed of, either in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy, to hold the same unto my said dear wife to and for her own use, benefit, and disposition absolutely (except the bequest to my daughter), well knowing my sentiments as she does, and implicitly relying upon her attachment to our daughter and grandchild, moreover, believing she will act generally under the immediate advice and judgment of my executors hereinafter named. And I do further will and direct that my executors shall and do, as soon as conveniently may be after my decease, call in, dispose of, and convert into money, whatever share in the said copartnership business of a silk manufacturer I may be entitled to under and by virtue of and subject to a certain deed of copartnership arrangement executed between us accordingly; and likewise call in all and singular other my personal estate and effects whatsoever, and shall and do, after payment thereout, in the first place, of my just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and of the sum of 500*l.* to my daughter Elizabeth, at present the wife of William Winch (for her separate use), lay out and invest the produce of my said effects in the public stocks or funds, or upon government or real securities in England, in her own name, or jointly with my said executors, as may be deemed most expedient and agreeable to my wife, with the stocks, from time to time to vary or transfer, hold the same funds, and securities respective dividends and interest arising, and every part thereof, unto my said dear wife, to the absolute use, benefit, and disposal. And forasmuch as I have hereby manifested abundant proof of entire confidence in my said dear wife, by thus giving her the sovereign control over the whole of my property for her sole use and benefit, which she will duly appreciate accordingly; but in so doing I nevertheless earnestly conjure her, under the advice of my executors, to proceed forthwith to make ample provision, by deed or will, for our only child and granddaughter, and to take special care that her present husband shall have no control over her property in any manner whatsoever, either directly or remotely. All the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate and effects I give unto my said dear wife. And I nominate and appoint her, with my friends Robert Brutton and Robert Harrison, executrix and executors of this my will, allowing them to retain and reimburse themselves of all costs, &c. which they shall sustain or be put to in or about the execution thereof, my executors being only responsible for each other's acts.(a) And hereby, by revoking all former wills, I declare this only to be my last will and testament."

The testator's wife died some time after the date of the will, but before the date of the codicil, which was executed 15th July, 1843, whereby he gave a legacy of 400*l.* to an old servant, and confirmed his will in all other respects.

The testator died on the 17th August following, leaving his daughter Elizabeth, the wife of William Winch, his only daughter, and her daughter, the plaintiff Elizabeth Winch, his only grand-daughter, spinster, him surviving.

The testator's daughter had been separated from her husband during the testator's lifetime; and they had ceased to cohabit together. There was but one child of the marriage, the testator's grand-daughter, mentioned in the will.

(a) This evident inaccuracy was noticed by the Court.

The bill was filed by the grand-daughter, by her next friend, against the executors, and against her father and mother, submitting that there was a good trust raised in the will in favour of her and her mother, and it accordingly prayed that the will might be established, and the trusts thereof carried into execution, and that the rights and interests of all parties interested in the testator's estate might be declared.

The cause now came on upon a demurrer put in by Wm. Winch, for want of equity. The principal question to be argued was, therefore, whether the words of the will manifesting a desire by the testator to provide for his daughter and grandchild, coupled with the testator's confidence in his wife that she would carry out his wishes in that respect, were sufficient to raise a trust in their behalf respectively.

Bethel and Wright appeared in support of the demurrer, and contended that in all cases of precatory trusts, there were three things necessary in order to render them obligatory upon the Court. In the first place, the directions in the will must be much stronger than those expressions, which amount to nothing more than a confidence that the individual to whom the property is given will act according to the testator's wishes. Secondly, the expressions must be sufficiently intelligible to designate what the testator himself intended should form the subject of the trust; and, thirdly, that the words must in themselves be sufficiently distinct to point out the objects of the trust; that the expressions used by the testator, however they might show the great confidence he placed in his wife, extended no further, and that they imposed no restraint upon her actions, or controlled her power over the property in any way whatever.

Cases cited for the demurrer: Curtis v. Rippon (5 Madd. 434); Thorp v. Owen (2 Hare, 607); Lechmere v. Lavie (2 M. & K. 197; Abraham v. Alman (1 Russ. 509); Sale v. Moore (1 Sim. 534); Meredith v. Heneage (1 Sim. 542); Bernsey v. Witham (5 Sim. 23).

Wakefield, Stuart, and Grimshaw in support of the bill, contended that there was no better rule to go by in respect of wills than that laid down by Sir Wm. Grant in Constantine v. Constantin (6 Ves. 102), namely, that it is the duty of the Court to give effect to every word of the will, provided an effect can be given to it not inconsistent with the general intent of the whole will taken together; that in the present case, had the testator intended that his wife should have the sole benefit and control over his property, there would have been no necessity for the executors' interference with her in laying out and investing the moneys produced by the sale of his effects, in the public funds; and that the latter clause of the will directing the executors to reimburse themselves all costs, &c. sufficiently shewed the wife was not to take the property absolutely; that it is a principle of equity, where a trust is once erected it shall never fail for want of trustees; and that a further reason why the demurrer ought to be overruled was, that it assumed to be the separate demurrer of the husband of the testator's daughter.

Wood cited: Elibank v. Montilieu (5 Ves. 737); (1 Hare, 445), (1 My. & C. 401); Raikes v. Ward.

Bethel not called upon.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—This is, upon the whole, a simple case, although there is, upon the degree of confusion and uncertainty upon the ... some codicil. Now it is perfectly clear that the child of the mother has no interest. In this state of things the question depends on the language of the will and codicil, and here I make one general observation, namely, that there existed a confusion in the testator's mind as to what the law would be in reference to the Statute of Distributions. It is manifest, that in the first part of his will the testator gives every thing to his wife in express terms for her sole use and benefit absolutely. "Whereas I am possessed of or otherwise well entitled to," &c. [His Honour here read the whole passage.] Now it appears to me that the will would have been complete had it stopped there, for every thing except the bequest to his daughter is given to the wife; and the following words, "for her own use, benefit, and disposal absolutely," are quite consistent with that fact, that the testator was aware he had given every thing to her, expressing at the same time his entire confidence that she would act under the advice of his executors, "well knowing," he says, "my sentiments, as she does, and implicitly relying upon her attachment to our daughter and grandchild; moreover, believing she will act generally under the immediate advice of my executors." Now, it is impossible to spell out any thing in this part that shew the daughter or grand-daughter, or both, were intended to be the owners of that property which is given to the wife. The direction to the trustees to call in and convert into money his share in the business, and invest the produce in the public funds in his wife's own name, or jointly with his executors, as might be most agreeable to his wife, amounts to a complete dealing with the testator's property. Then again, to invest the same in his wife's name only, "to hold the same for her own absolute use, benefit, and disposal." This, and the passage immediately preceding, manifest a complete obligation upon the executors to invest the whole of the personal estate in securities in the name of his wife conjointly with their own, or in her name only, at her own option and desire, and indicate a clear intention that she should have the disposal of the whole. Then follows the clause wherein he says, "I nevertheless earnestly conjure her, with the advice of my executors, to proceed forthwith to make ample provision, by deed or will, for our only child and grand-daughter." These words give an unqualified power to his wife to make a provision in what manner she pleased. Now, can the ample provision to give by deed or will be said to pass no dominion over the property? I wish to have it made out, when such an absolute power is given to the wife, how the interposition of the word "conjure" can be construed as indicating an intention to have it settled upon a child or grandchild. Nay, the very construction of the sentence appears to me as indicating that a discretionary power was intended to be exercised by the wife as to the amplitude of the provision, but by no means tantamount to a gift of any part of the real or personal estate to the child or grandchild. But even suppose there did exist any ambiguity in the first part of the will, the latter part contains a sweeping clause, which gives every thing to the wife; so that the testator has himself provided for any ambiguity, by giving every thing to his wife. As to the clause allowing the executors to reimburse themselves, and that they shall be only responsible for each other's acts, it is very inaccurately expressed, because it makes the executors responsible only for the acts of one another; but it does not affect the clear residue of the whole of the testator's property. The codicil leaves the case just as it stood before, there being nothing more than the gift of a legacy to his servants, and a republication of his will by operation of law; but it does not affect one single word of the will. Perhaps the testator might have thought that after the death of his wife the law would make ample provision for his child. Demurrer allowed.

NEWBOLT v. PRYCE.

Will—Improper description—Misnomer.

A testatrix in her will bequeathed as follows:—"To my nephew, J. N. second son of the Rev. W. S. N. vicar of Somerton, Somerset." It appears, however, that the vicar of Somerton's name was W. R. N. and that he was brother of the testatrix's deceased husband, and that he had three sons, G. D. N. the eldest, the second son, R. H. N., and the third son, John R. N. Held, that this third son, although misdescribed by the testatrix as the second son, was nevertheless the party designed by the testatrix to take the benefit under her will, for her description of the name John made the veritas nominis overcome the error descriptionis.

The testatrix, Blanch Bridget Newbolt, widow, being possessed of considerable personal estate, by her will, dated Jan. 25th, 1837, bequeathed as follows:—"To my nephew, John Newbolt, second son of the Rev. William Strangways Newbolt, vicar of Somerton, Somerset, I leave all my funded property in the Three per Cents. of which I may die possessed." The testatrix then, having made certain other bequests, continued: "To my brother-in-law, the Rev. William Strangways Newbolt, vicar of Somerton, Somerset, I leave my most beloved husband's sisters, &c." The testatrix's funded property consisted of 2,800*l.* Three per Cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities. ... in the month of June, 1843, and from the Master's ... it appeared that there was no such person as William ... ways Newbolt, vicar of Somerton, Somerset, but there was a William Robert Newbolt, vicar of that place, who had been inducted into the vicarage in the year 1833, ... that no other person of the name of Newbolt had acted as vicar or curate of the parish of Somerton for upwards of fifty years previous to the date of the testatrix's will; that the said W. R. Newbolt was the brother of the testatrix's deceased husband, John Newbolt, under whose will she had become entitled to the above-mentioned stock, and that the said W. Robert Newbolt, at the date of the testatrix's will, had three sons, namely, George Digby Newbolt, born May 2, 1829; Robert Henry Newbolt, born April 29, 1833, and John Rice Newbolt, the plaintiff, who was born on the 10th June, 1836.

The bill was filed by John Rice Newbolt, through his next friend, against the executors of the will, his second brother, Robert Henry Newbolt, and the testatrix's next of kin, to carry out the trusts of the will, and that he, the plaintiff, might be declared to be entitled to the said legacy of 2,800*l.* Three per Cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities.

Bethell and Selwyn submitted to the Court, 1st, Whether the plaintiff being the person answering the first and most material part of the description (the name), although he did not answer the second part of the description, he being the third, and not the second son of his father, the Rev. Wm. Rt. Newbolt, could nevertheless take; or 2ndly, Whether Robert Henry Newbolt, who answered the description of second son, but not the name, would be entitled to the legacy; or 3rdly, Whether, under the circumstances of the case, the bequest be void for uncertainty. (Doe v. Hiscocks, 5 Mee. & Wel. 363.)

Stuart, for Robert Henry Newbolt, the second son, contended that with respect to him, the veritas descriptionis was complete, as he was the second son of the Vicar of Somerton; but that the plaintiff had no veritas nominis, because the bequest was to John, the second son—but of whom? of William Strangways Newbolt, when there was no such person; that the defendant, R. H. Newbolt, therefore, fully answered the description given by the testatrix; and as this description, which was perfect, had not been attempted to be displaced by any thing equally certain, his client was entitled to the legacy of stock. (Doe v. Hathwaite, 3 B. & Ald. 632.)

Wood, for the next of kin.—To render this a good bequest, it is necessary to strike out of the will either the name John, or the description second son, but there is nothing in the will to justify such a proceeding. In the case of Blundell v. Gladstone (11 Sim. 467; 1 Phil. 279; 7 Jur. 269(a), there was sufficient contained in the various parts of the will to enable one to collect the testator's intention, viz. "Lady Stourton, one of the sisters of the said Edward Weld," but in the present will there is nothing to enable the Court to decide upon the meaning of the testator with any degree of certainty.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR thought, that the person who was baptized John Rice Newbolt was sufficiently known and described by the name "John Newbolt," to make the veritas nominis to overcome the error descriptionis.

ROLLS COURT.

June, 3, 28, and 29, July 1, Nov. 13, and Dec. 17.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. MAYOR OF POOLE.

Municipal Corporations Act (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76), construction—Removal—Corporate offices—Compensation—Time.

The appointment of a new town clerk amounts to a removal of the old, under the Act, though the old one does not offer himself for re-appointment, or take any steps for that purpose.

Any office held by a town clerk which is appendant or appurtenant to, or usually held with, the office of town clerk, though not a corporate one, is an office for the loss of which compensation is to be allowed under the Act.

The five years for which the account of profits, &c. of any office is to be taken, are the five years immediately preceding the passing of the Act (9th September, 1835), and not the five years preceding the 1st of January, 1835.

This was an information filed by the Attorney-general on the 11th November, 1837, at the relation of the Hon. Wm. Francis Spencer Ponsonby and others, rate payers of the borough of Poole, against the Mayor, &c. of Poole, and Thomas Arnold, and Robert Henning Parr; and it prayed a declaration that the defendant, R. H. Parr, having voluntarily resigned his office of town clerk to the corporation, was not entitled, under the Municipal Corporations Act, to any compensation in respect of such office; and that the town council had not, under the Act, any authority to award him any compensation in respect thereof; but in case it should appear, or the Court should be of opinion that R. H. Parr did not voluntarily resign his said office, but was removed therefrom by the corporation, then that it might be declared that, according to the true construction of the Act, he was entitled to compensation in respect of his office of town clerk only, and not in respect of any other offices held by him, and that the town council had no right to award him any compensation in respect of any other office; also that 4,500*l.* was improperly and illegally awarded to Parr, for the town clerk ... and other offices; and that a bond given to Parr for that amount should be cancelled, or else stand as a security for what he might appear to be entitled to; also that a rate made on the 2nd and 3rd January, 1837, might be declared illegal and set aside or modified; and that Parr might be directed to refund to them two instalments of the rate paid to him, and restrained from demanding the 4,500*l.*

The information stated that Parr was appointed town clerk in 1833, and also clerk of the peace, and several other offices were also held by him; that on the 1st of January, 1836, he resigned the offices of town clerk and clerk of the peace, and Thomas Arnold was elected to the former office, and on the 1st of July following, to the latter; that on the 4th of August, 1836, Parr sent in his claim for compensation, under the Act, to the amount of 4,835*l.*; and that such claim included the profits derived from the office of clerk of the peace, and other offices, besides that of town clerk, for which only he ought to claim; that on the 5th of October, 1836, one-third of the town council then present objected to the claim on account of Parr's resignation, and the further consideration of it was adjourned from time to time, till the 23rd November; that in the meantime the burgess-roll was revised, and eighty persons previously excused were put on, their rates being paid by only the agent of Parr, and two-thirds of the town council being then on the Tory, or Mr. Parr's side, the award was made and the bond given. A rate was then made, and two instalments of it had been levied. It was now sought to get rid of the claim in whole or in part.

Various proceedings respecting the sum in question took place, which it is not necessary here to state. The money was ultimately ordered to be paid into court; and the matter now came on to be heard as to Parr's claim under the Act.

Kindersley (with him Follett).—The evidence as to voluntary resignation is conflicting. It is not necessary to make a formal resignation; Parr being present on the 1st of January, 1836, and taking no steps to have himself re-appointed, but tacitly assenting to the appointment of Arnold, is a resignation. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Your argument is, that if the town clerk is quiescent, there is an understanding or an arrangement that he is to resign; and therefore there is no compensation to be given under the Act.] Compensation implies something advantageous taken away; now this could not be of any advantage to him, for he could not, by the Act, hold the office of clerk to the magistrates and also clerk of the peace, and was obliged to elect. Parr himself admitted this before a committee of the House of Commons. [It was the Act of Parliament took away the one he could not hold; therefore, he could not conserve them all.] Some of the offices for which he has received the compensation are not a proper subject for compensation. Foot, his predecessor, did not hold the office of under-sheriff till some years after his appointment; and though it was the practice to hold the others, it was not a necessary consequence of being town clerk. Besides, several of the officers are not corporate officers, and the Treasury Minute drawn up on this point speaks expressly of "corporate offices." Then the whole matter was preconcerted between Parr and the corporation, and it was arranged that he was to resign and get the compensation in fraud of the rate-payers. The adjournments of the consideration of the claim were made fraudulently to get the burgess roll in such a state as to get more than two-thirds of the town council in favour of it, so as to prevent an appeal to the Lords of the Treasury under the Act.

Teed (with him Dickinson), for the Corporation of Poole, on the subject of compensation, cited Rex v. The Mayor of Bridgwater (1 Nev. & P. 466); Reg. v. Mayor of Norwich (8 Ad. & Ell. 633); Reg. v. Mayor of Carmarthen (3 Per. & D. 35; 11 Ad. & E. 9), &c. &c.

Turner (with him Freeling).—All the witnesses of the informant, except three or four, have subscribed to a fund for prosecuting this suit; and one question is, whether they are competent witnesses, or their evidence admissible. (Nockells v. Crosby, 2 Bar. & Cr. 814.) But supposing it admissible, their declarations are to facts not charged in the bill, and not in issue, and as to their understanding and belief only. One of them speaks of the general "notoriety" of the matters in reference to Parr, but nothing of the kind is in the bill. Such evidence should be rejected. (Shepherd v. Morris, 4 Beav. 252; Hall v. Maltby, 6 Price, 215; Mulholland v. Kendrick, 1 Beattie, 277, 1 Molloy, 359; Austin v. Chambers, 6 Cl. & Fin. 1.) [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—No doubt, if there be a declaration, and no charge in the bill to which it may refer, it is to be rejected; but the difficulty is, where a declaration is made and is said to be a foundation for inquiry, not of itself, but from its connection with other facts.] As to fraud, there was no such thing. The 80 persons put on the roll were in the same circumstances as other persons on it, and the magistrates had no right to strike them off. As to voluntary resignation, so far from there being any thing of the kind, Parr would not have succeeded against Arnold if he had offered himself, because Arnold had much larger family interest, &c. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—It was imperative to elect, there was no surrender of the office by Parr, and the only resignation was the not offering himself at the election.] Just so. As to the offices not being corporate offices, that is not at all necessary; all that is required is, that they be held with or appurtenant to a corporate office, which these are, except, perhaps, as to one of them. (Reg. v. Poole, re Edwards, 7 Ad. & Ell. 730; Reg. v. Mayor of Norwich, 8 Add. & Ell. 635; R. v. Mayor of Bridgewater, 6 Ad. & Ell. 339, &c.)

Kindersley, in reply.

JUDGMENT.

Nov. 13th.—The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The information prayed a declaration that R. H. Parr had resigned the office of town clerk of the borough of Poole, and that he was not entitled to any compensation; but if it should be thought that he did not resign, but that he had been removed from office, then it asked for a declaration that he was entitled to compensation for the office of town clerk, but not the other offices which he held in the borough. It also prayed that the bond for 4,800*l.* given to Mr. P. as a compensation for loss of several offices was not binding, but fraudulent and void, and ought to be held good for such sum only as upon reference to the Master should be found due. On the 1st of September, 1835, Parr was town clerk of the borough of Poole, and he held other offices connected with it, some of which were said to be incompatible after the passing of 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76. Thomas Arnold was elected town clerk, and in August following Parr sent in his claim for compensation for the offices held, which were town clerk and clerk of the peace; he also filled the offices of solicitor to the corporation, clerk to the magistrates, clerk to the corporation, solicitor to the under-sheriff, clerk to the commissioners of land and assessed taxes, clerk to the overseers and board of guardians, clerk to the commissioners for lighting and watching, solicitor to the surveyor of highways, solicitor to the quay committee, solicitor to the water-bailiff, and prothonotary of the Borough Court of Record. It was said that it had been usual to hold the offices for life, and accordingly he claimed 4,835*l.* On the 5th of October, 1836, the claim was brought before the town council, and one-third of the council present declined to receive the claim, and it was adjourned to the 14th of October, when it was considered, but not disposed of, and it was again adjourned till the 9th of November. In the meantime a revision of the burgess-list had taken place, and upon the election of town councillors, Parr's party was increased, and another adjournment took place till the 23rd of November, when the claim was admitted, and 4,500*l.* awarded in respect of all the offices. The reason for reducing the claim did not appear, but a bond was executed for the payment of the 4,500*l.* by instalments. It was said that the adjournments had been fraudulently continued to secure Parr the amount of the compensation, and relief was now asked on the ground that Parr had resigned. Admitting that there was improper conduct in the revision of the burgess-list, he (Lord Langdale) did not find that the adjournments of the town council were fraudulently continued, but he could not hear of such proceedings without disapprobation. It was not, however, proved that they had been procured by Parr for the purpose of obtaining an increase of the compensation, or to prevent the interference of a higher tribunal. The allegations of fraud also were not proved. Parr had obtained a judgment on the bond, but execution was stayed on the money being brought into court. The property of the corporation was held upon trusts, which gave this court control. There was no proof of the allegation that Parr had resigned. It was said that acquiescence in the election of Arnold was a resignation. It was clear there was no formal resignation. But it was asked that it might be inferred because of the appointment of another to the office, and because after the passing of the Act it could not be performed without a sacrifice. Mr. Parr found he could not compete with a rival candidate; but was he to be deemed to have resigned, and not entitled to compensation? No such consequence was intended by the Legislature. It was said that Parr did not propose himself, and that he had resigned by arrangement with Arnold; but four witnesses had been examined, and they shewed there was some excitement in the borough, but the allegation was not supported. Parr was entitled to compensation for the office of town clerk, regard being had to the time for which it was held, and other circumstances. He also claimed compensation as clerk to the commissioners of taxes; this he had not lost, and the amount could not be ascertained. He (Lord Langdale) would have been glad of an authority for his direction, but it did not appear whether the offices were connected and dependent on the principal office: this ought to be shewn. He, however, thought Parr was entitled to compensation for the offices of clerk to the magistrates, solicitor of the corporation, clerk of the peace, solicitor to the quay committee and water-bailiff, and prothonotary of the Borough Court of Record; but not for the offices of solicitor to the under-sheriff and coroner—they were not dependent on the office of town clerk, but were held distinct. Nor was he entitled to compensation for the offices of clerk of the overseers and board of guardians, clerk to the lamp and watch commissioners, or solicitor to the surveyor of highways, as no claim had been established. It should, therefore, be referred to the Master to take an account of the profits, &c. of the several offices for which compensation was to be given, for five years from the 9th Sept. 1835, of the value of the offices, and to state the compensation, with liberty to state special circumstances; and the bond would stand for what should ultimately be found due, reserving further directions and costs.

Dec. 17.—The case was again mentioned, to have the minutes changed as to the time from which the five years were to be reckoned; not from the 9th Sept. 1835, but from the 1st Jan. 1835, agreeably to the minute of the Lords of the Treasury; but his lordship did not think he had power under the Act, and refused.

Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

BRISTOL DISTRICT BANKRUPTCY COURT.

(Before Mr. Commissioner STEVENSON.)

Friday, January 3.

Re W. R. LEWIS.

Devastavit—Breach of trust by executor—Executor de son tort.

The facts of this case are shortly detailed in the report of the first hearing in p. 215, ante. The insolvent now came up for his final order.

Bachelor appeared to shew cause against it, and contended that the insolvent, acting as an executor, had committed a devastavit in paying a simple contract creditor out of the estate of his deceased mother, to the injury of the other creditors; that such a devastavit was a breach of trust towards the personal representatives of the intestate, as an executor was merely a trustee for them; and a breach of trust was included in the grounds of opposition enumerated in sec. 24 of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96. Secondly, by acting as executor de son tort, the insolvent has not only rendered himself liable to the debts of the deceased, but he incurred a debt to her personal representatives to the amount of assets received, and they should have been inserted as creditors in the schedule.

Homes, in support of the insolvent, suggested that these facts did not disclose any sufficient objection to the final order. A devastavit was not necessarily any objection, unless it was accompanied by some circumstances of fraud, or unless it amounted to a breach of trust. Here there was no suspicion of fraud; and it could not be a breach of trust, for that necessarily supposed the existence of a cestui que trust, but until letters of administration were taken out, there were no legal personal representatives. As to the second objection, the liabilities of the insolvent were incurred through ignorance of the law, and without fraud; those liabilities were all inserted in the schedule.

HIS HONOUR.—With regard to the devastavit, which is the principal point relied on, although it may possibly bear the term of a breach of trust, it is not such a clear case as appears to me to have been contemplated by the legislature. Unless something very gross appeared in the conduct of the insolvent in administering his mother's estate without letters of administration, such conduct alone without fraud is not sufficient to make me refuse his final order. The legal representatives may or may not be creditors; that may depend upon their taking out administration, and there being a surplus of the estate. The insolvent has stated the circumstances under which he administered his mother's estate, and that it was insufficient to pay her debts. He has given all the information required of him, and is entitled to his final order.

Final order granted.

Re LAZARUS ALMAN.

Shewing cause against final order—Restricting opposition to matters in which the opposing creditor has an interest.

This insolvent had petitioned the Court in April last, and obtained a final order in June. On his petitioning, he tendered the key of some premises to his landlady, who refused to receive it, and he was compelled to remain her tenant. On the rent becoming due, she sued him, on which he petitioned this Court a second time for protection, and the only debt in his present schedule was this debt for rent and the costs of the action. The insolvent now came up for his final order.

Hinton, solicitor for the creditor, stated that, previous to insolvent's first petition, he had fraudulently disposed of all his effects to defeat his creditors.

Homes objected that this ground of opposition could not be entered upon by the party for whom Mr. Hinton opposed. She had forced the insolvent to incur her debt since the first petition, and she was not entitled to any of the property which had, as Mr. Hinton said, been so disposed of. That property would belong to the assignees under the former petition, if Mr. Hinton's statement were correct, but the present creditor had no interest whatever in it.

HIS HONOUR.—I do not think that this creditor is entitled to enter into such a ground of opposition. The facts stated by the solicitor for the opposing creditor appear to me to constitute some grounds for an application by any of the former creditors to rescind the former final order, but they cannot now be used by the creditor for whom Mr. Hinton appears to shew cause to-day. Final order granted.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

SOME other projected measures of law reform will probably engage the attention of Parliament during the coming session.

The County Courts Bill is to be renewed.

The grounds of our objection to this measure have been already stated. They resolve themselves into this: its tendency to breed a race of pettifoggers, by whom the Profession will be degraded, and Society plagued.

Mr. FITZROY KELLY promises to renew his Criminal Appeal Bill, and we hope with better success. The principle was freely admitted in the debate of last session; we trust that a measure, the justice of which is conceded, will not be repudiated in practice. But that it might work well, a new Court must be formed for the Crown business of the Queen's Bench; and for this purpose we must have two more judges.

Of the Ecclesiastical Courts Bill it is reported we shall hear no more. The miserable abortion of last session will not be renewed, and it will be better now to wait until there can be an entire reform, or, rather, the entire abolition of that absurd judicature.

At this moment no other subject occurs to us as threatened with experimental legislation. Something, however, may be anticipated from the labours of the Law Reform Society, which is industriously proceeding to frame well-digested and practical measures, to be submitted to the Government and the Parliament.

PARLIAMENTARY RETURNS.

TAXES ON SUCCESSION TO PROPERTY ABROAD.—Yesterday a Parliamentary paper extending to 33 pages was printed, containing the correspondence which has recently taken place relating to taxes or duties imposed on succession to property, after death, in foreign countries. In April the Earl of Aberdeen, as Foreign Secretary, addressed a circular to the British ambassadors and other diplomatic officers abroad, stating that her Majesty had been graciously pleased to comply with an address of the House of Commons, to the effect that her Majesty would procure a statement of the rate or scale of any taxes or duties imposed (either by the Government or by municipalities) on succession to property after death; stating also, whether in such taxes or duties any distinction was made in such foreign countries between real and personal property; and likewise a statement of the annual amount received from such taxes or duties. The document was ordered to be printed on the motion of Mr. Elphinstone, the member for Lewes, and affords information on the subject to which it relates. Returns have been received from Austria, Bavaria, Belgium, Denmark, France, Frankfort, Greece, Hamburgh, Hanover, Hesse Cassel, Holland, Prussia, Sardinia, Saxony, Sicily, Sweden, Switzerland, Texas, Tuscany, United States, and Wurtemburg. The last return was made as late as the 14th of August. It appears that in Texas there are no taxes or duties imposed either by the Government or by municipalities of the kind; and in the United States that the taxes mentioned do not form a part of the general revenue.

SHIPPING RETURNS.—On Saturday a further return, moved for in February last by Mr. Wawn, the member for South Shields, respecting the shipping interest, was printed. The hon. member asked for various returns connected with shipping, with certain particulars which the register of shipping could not supply. A Parliamentary paper was printed during the session, and a second document in reference to the same order of the House of Commons on Saturday last. The number of sailing vessels registered at the ports of Great Britain and Ireland, &c. on the 31st of December last, was in England, under 50 tons, 6,155, and 10,672 above that tonnage. The steam-vessels numbered in England on that day 337 under 50 tons, and 309 above that tonnage. At the ports of Scotland the sailing-vessels registered were, under 50 tons, 1,534, and above that tonnage, 2,215; of steam-vessels, 31 under 50 tons, and 97 above. At the ports of Ireland there were registered 957 vessels under 50 tons, and 964 above; of steam-vessels, only 5 under 50 tons, and 76 above that tonnage. It appears, that the vessels entered and cleared coastwise at the several ports of the United Kingdom, in the year ending the 31st of December last, were, inwards 98,295 sailing vessels, and outwards 108,105; of steam-vessels, inwards 9,294, and outwards 8,992. In Scotland the vessels inwards numbered 19,053 in the year, and outwards 19,788; of steam-vessels 2,688 inwards, and 2,311 outwards. At the parts of Ireland, 16,746 sailing-vessels inwards, and 9,976 outwards; of steam-vessels 2,651 inwards, and 2,980 outwards. In the same period there were entered and cleared to and from the colonies 5,293 British vessels from the ports of England inwards, and 5,671 outwards, and of foreign ships 43 inwards, and 36 outwards. At the ports of Scotland, 566 British vessels inwards, and 733 outwards, and of foreign vessels only 2 outwards. At the ports of Ireland 518 British vessels inwards, and 362 outwards; of steam-vessels, British, 344 inwards, and 357 outwards. There were built and registered in the year 1843, 653 sailing-vessels and 45 steamers; and there were sold, wrecked, and broken, 778 vessels. The return of Saturday relates to the number and tonnage of sailing and steam-vessels, but the numbers are not given, as in the other return, in the aggregate.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

WE have to direct the serious attention of our readers to a letter which they will find among the correspondence of this day, detailing a variety of fatal errors in Mr. LUMLEY'S Bastardy Forms, which have been in general use throughout the country. Our correspondent has sent us his name, as an assurance that his information may be relied upon. But we hope it may yet prove that the magistrates have taken an erroneous view of the question. We know how ingeniously Mr. PASHLEY can pick a hole in any form. However, it is too serious a matter to permit even a difference of opinion about it. If the forms can be questioned so as to produce a doubt, they must be amended. We have requested the gentleman, to whose learned labours this portion of the LAW TIMES is indebted for so much valuable information on Magistrates' Law, to give to this subject his immediate and particular attention, and to prepare a series of forms for the use of our readers which may be less open to objection.

We submit to our readers a very interesting report of the Committee of the Justices' Clerks Society, on the Bill for regulating their fees, introduced at the close of the last session, and we hope next week to give some account of their meeting on Wednesday.

WE commence to-day the articles on Magistrates' Law, which we promised last week.

It is the design of the gentleman, to whom this important branch of law has been intrusted, to favour us with brief articles each week, and especially after each Term, on such points of magistrates' law as may newly arise either in the decisions of Courts or the routine of practice, and on which it may be useful to throw light. We believe that there exists no other source of such information upon which dependance can be placed. We are well aware that in a sphere of practice, in itself so diversified and complex, and which both statutes and cases are constantly perplexing, it is impossible to relieve the practitioner of all doubt or difficulty in his walk; but we are confident that the aid we have hitherto striven to afford may be materially enhanced in value by the plan we have now adopted: especially as it is our desire to receive and profit by that free communication of practical suggestions with which our friends and correspondents in the country have, on many occasions, proved their willingness and competency to favour us.

EVIDENCE OF CHARGEABILITY.

The recent statute of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 79. provides:—

> That it shall be lawful for any board of guardians or district board, at any meeting thereof, to make a certificate in the form or to the effect contained in the schedule of this Act marked (C), and that every such certificate, and every copy of a minute of any order, complaint, claim, application or authority of any such board of guardians or district board, purporting respectively to be signed by the presiding chairman of such guardians or district board, and to be sealed with their seal, and to be countersigned by their clerk, shall, unless the contrary be shewn, be taken to be sufficient proof of the truth of all the statements contained in such certificate, and of the directions respecting such order, complaint, claim, or application having been given as alleged in the copy of such minutes, and shall be received in evidence accordingly by and before all courts of justices and all justices, without any proof of the signatures or of the official characters of the persons signing the same, or of such seal, or of such meeting; and that for the purpose of making any order of removal or other order, no further or other evidence of chargeability than such certificate shall be required, provided that every such order bear date within twenty-one days next after the day of the date of such certificate.

This provision was expressly intended to relieve parishes from any further trouble of proving chargeability than by the mere production of the certificate itself. Doubt has however arisen whether it may not be still most prudent to prove the signatures and seal as required before the Act passed. As regards cases where the order was made previously to the 9th August, 1844 (when the statute was passed), we are of opinion that it is not only prudent but essential to do so, although the actual removal and subsequent proceedings may have taken place long since. There is nothing retrospective in the wording of the statute. As regards orders made since the 9th of August, 1844, we see no reason for proving that which the statute declares need not be proved; but we deem it otherwise with regard to the identity of the pauper. The certificate affords no proof of this; it is incapable of statement therein, and must, we think, be proved by any witness who can affirm that the pauper is the person to whom the certificate relates. A certificate that John Smith became chargeable on January 25, is no evidence that a John Smith before the justices in another place, on February 10, was chargeable. There may be in all likelihood half-a-dozen John Smiths chargeable to St. George's, Westminster, and other large parishes, at the same time; and, as far as we can venture to predict the view which the Court of Queen's Bench may take on this point, we think it a likely objection to prove fatal to an order of removal, that the identity is not proved. The certificate the statute provides is as follows:—

> The Board of Guardians of the Poor of the Union [or parish of] do hereby certify, that on the day of , A B, and his wife, C B, and his child, E B, became chargeable to the parish , in the said Union [or to the said Union]. In testimony whereof, the common seal of the said Guardians is hereunto affixed, at a meeting of their Board, this day of , 18 .
> (L. S.) (Signed) W. J.,
> Presiding Chairman of the said Board.
> (Countersigned) C. D.,
> Clerk of [or acting as Clerk to] the Board of Guardians of .

But there is another and a very strong reason why this certificate, as it stands, will, in all probability, be found to need revision by the Legislature. It merely states that on a certain day A B "became chargeable," without any averment that he then was actually chargeable at the time of the making of the certificate. True it is that the Act provides that no further evidence of chargeability than such certificate shall be required, provided that the order bear date within twenty-one days of the certificate. But could it have been the intent of the Legislature to render proof of chargeability at any anterior time sufficient? We think not. With the exception of the dictum of a periodical in which blunders are the rule and ignorance indigenous, we find the authorities unanimous in holding that the chargeability should be shewn to exist at the time of making the order, and not as the certificate "became chargeable on a certain day;" implying, at any past time, though the chargeability may no longer exist. The 35 Geo. 3, c. 101, s. 1, enacts that no removal shall take place "until such person shall have become actually chargeable." The 6th section, in speaking of pregnant women, uses the words "shall be taken to be a person actually chargeable." The 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 79, provides for removal "under an order of removal from any parish or workhouse, by reason of his being chargeable to, or relieved therein." Thus, the chargeability was clearly intended by the statutes to be a present, and not a past, chargeability.

Though no express decision appears in the books, we find ample proofs that the Courts have deemed that the chargeability must be at the time of removal.

In Rex v. Angel (Cas. Temp. Hardw. 124), a conviction for returning, after removal therefrom, to Binfield, Berks, was held irregular, because there was "no complaint made of his being chargeable or likely to be," &c. In Rex v. Fillongley (2 T. R. 709), a pauper was held, after his return from a parish to which he had been removed, to a house which he had previously rented in the removing parish, to have gained a settlement by renting the said house, because he did not return in a state of vagrancy. These cases are referred to and confirmed in Mann v. Davers (3 Barn. & Ald. 103), which was a case of a conviction for a return after a removal; and it was again held that, though not to be presumed, it might be shewn as a defence, that the pauper had work to do in the parish. Reg. v. Black Callerton (10 Ad. & Ell. 679) was still more directly in point; for the case stated that the examinations contained no statement that the pauper was "then chargeable" to the removing parish; and the order was quashed for want of evidence of chargeability. The forms of the order given in Burns' Justice of the Peace, Archbold's Poor Law, Gael's Settlements, and Symons' Parish Settlements, all insert the word "now" before chargeable. Common sense equally proves that the evidence must be as to the chargeability then existing. Mr. Archbold, in his very useful work on the Poor Law, p. 560, edit. 1845, expressly states it as a "very common defect" in orders to state the pauper's chargeability in the past tense; and adds, "it must appear upon the face of the order that the pauper is chargeable at the time of making the order." What ground can it be for the removal of A B, that he was once a pauper? It is a great stretch to render the certificate good for 21 days after date; but on what conceivable principle is a then past chargeability to suffice? According to the form in the schedule and the words at the end of sec. 69, if a certificate, dated January 10, 1845, states that on the 10th of March, 1837 A B became chargeable to the parish of C. in the said union, not only is that to suffice for an order of removal now and until next February, but no other evidence can be required to be given. It was, we think, not the intention of the Act to leave a door open to this obvious violation of all pre-existing law. And though Reg. v. Ellis (4 Law T. 113) is a strong case for adhering to the literal construction of statutes, we think it not impossible that an appeal might be successfully maintained against an order based on a certificate such as the Act gives; and inasmuch as the Act allows any certificate to avail which is to "the effect" of that supplied in schedule C, we strongly recommend that the words "became, and now is, actually chargeable," be used instead of "became chargeable."

There is no doubt that other evidence of the fact of relief being received is sufficient.

APPEALS AGAINST ORDERS OF BASTARDY.

The first five sections of 7 & 8 Vict. 101, which relate to bastards, and appeals against orders of maintenance, are likely to give rise to litigation on more grounds than one.

An objection was taken at the last Gloucestershire Quarter Sessions against the service of a notice of appeal. The Act provides that "if within 24 hours after the adjudication and making of any order on the putative father as aforesaid, such putative father give notice of appeal to the mother of the bastard child, and, &c. it shall be lawful, &c. to appeal, &c."

The father had at the time of the adjudication said in the justice's room that he should appeal, and he afterwards being unable to find the mother, served notice of the appeal upon the attorney who at the petty sessions had acted for the mother. The Court, subject to a case, held the service sufficient; the order, however, having been confirmed upon the merits, the case will not be argued.

It was contended for the appellant that the attorney having been present at and engaged for the mother in this very matter, service on him was service to the mother; and it is clear that were it not so the provision might be rendered nugatory by the mother's concealing herself and her abode for one day from the father. And this evil is in our judgment a defect in the Act, for it may happen that the mother may employ no attorney. On the other hand, the force of the argument is strongly against the validity in law of any such service. The words of the Act are express;—notice to the mother: it may well be that the attorney was retained solely for the hearing of the case in Petty Sessions, that at the making of the order he was functus officio; it by no means follows that because he was retained for the case he would therefore be for the appeal, or for any subsequent or consequent proceeding. Then there is the case of Rex v. Kimbolton (6 Ad. & Ell. 603, and 6 L. J. M. C. 90), where a statement of grounds of appeal was served on an attorney as the attorney of the overseers of the respondent parish who accepted the same in their behalf. It was there contended that "assuming the attorney to have been actually the attorney employed by the respondents in this appeal (which the respondents said they were able to disprove), still the service was insufficient" under the 81st sect. of the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, which requires the statement to be sent or delivered "to the overseers of the respondent parish," and Littledale, J. said, "I think the statement should be delivered to the overseers themselves, and that it is not enough that it should be delivered to the attorney;" and Patteson, J. said, "I think it better to adhere to the words of the Act—'Send or deliver to the overseers.' That is not the same as sending or delivering to the attorney. No intervention of an attorney seems to be contemplated here as in stat. 41 Geo. 3, c. 23." Neither is any contemplated in the Act before us. We have great respect for the opinion of Mr. Serjeant Ludlow, who presides at the session court of the county of Gloucester, but we believe the decision to have been a wrong one, and that the service was bad. If so, there is a difficulty in serving the notice of appeal in these cases inherent in the provisions of the Act, and wherever the reputed father intends to appeal, his best way is to be prepared with his notice at the hearing of the case, and serve it upon the mother as soon as the order is made.

REVIEW OF MAGISTRATES' CASES,

Of the practical points decided last Term, the following appear to us worthy of notice.

STATEMENT OF CASES BY THE SESSIONS.

These statements must be so made that the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench shall, whichever way it may be, finally end the proceedings. The following is an example of a case which fails to do this:—In Reg. v. South Ferriby (1 Bit. & Sym. 122), the submission was in these words:—"if the Court shall be of opinion that the said objection was not fatal, and that the sessions ought to have heard the appeal, continuances to be entered and the appeal to be heard." It was craftily suggested by counsel that here one of the alternatives was to end litigation, and very possibly the Court might so decide the case; but Lord Denman said, "We cannot take the chance of possibilities, the rule must be adhered to." The way to state cases is thus, "If the Court shall be of opinion that the order of removal is bad, the order to be quashed if not to be confirmed;" or as the case may be; but never must it be so worded as to leave any thing to be done after the decision. The object of cases is to terminate litigation by the final judgment of the superior Court.

Let care be taken not to draw the rule so that the order of the sessions is to be quashed, but the order of the justices, where the object is to quash an order which the sessions have confirmed. See Reg. v. Skipton (1 Bit. & Sym. 119, and 1 Law T. 113), in which case, moreover, the justices instead of the clerk of the peace had been made respondents in an appeal against an order for the removal of a pauper lunatic under 9 Geo. 4, c. 40, s. 54.

JURATS.

The rigour with which the Court requires every formality in a jurat to be observed, has been signally exercised in Reg. v. Bloxham (1 Bit. & Sym. M. C. 123, and 4 Law T. 132).

In that case, on the eve of the hearing of the argument on the merits of the case, it was discovered that the jurat to the affidavit of service of notice of the certiorari, under 13 Geo. 2, c. 18, s. 5, was defective and informal, inasmuch as the jurat did not contain the words "sworn before me," but only "sworn at Banbury." But there was written on the notice itself, "This is the notice referred to in the annexed affidavit, sworn before me," and both were signed by the same commissioner. It was equally clear in this case that the jurat failed to shew that the affidavit was properly taken, and that the memorandum or identification on the notice did shew it. But then came the possibility that the affidavit so "annexed" might not be the affidavit sworn, and that fraud might ensue were a bad jurat to be made good by pinning another paper to it. With great propriety of prudence, therefore, the Court condemned the jurat. "Our first impression," said Lord Denman, "was to get over the formal objection, and enter upon the merits of the question; but we must adhere to the established rules which govern jurats. It is a wholesome and proper provision that jurats should, in express terms, shew the jurisdiction and authority by which they are taken. There is no difficulty or hardship in requiring this to be done. We must not strain points of form, neither must we encourage irregularity."

BAD JURATS CANNOT BE AMENDED.

The Court will not do this. It did so in ex parte Hall (8 L. J. Q. B.), but has overruled that case in Reg. v. Bloxham, and deems the amendment of bad jurats an improper indulgence, tending to encourage baneful negligence.

JURISDICTION OF JUSTICES, HOW APPARENT ON THE FACE OF ORDERS.

It has always been held requisite that this should clearly appear, especially in orders of removal. It has been ruled that where the county of the examining justices is ambiguously stated, the order is bad. For instance, where two counties were named in the order, and the justices were described as being "of and for the said county" (Rex v. Chilverscotton, 8 T. R. 178), but where one county alone was named in the margin, and the said county in the body of an order, Lee, C.J. said, "I take it to be settled that in orders the margin is to be considered as part of the order, and a plain clear reference to it is sufficient. (Rex v. Holbeck Leeds, Burr, S. C. 198.)

The case of Reg. v. Casterton (4 Law T. 172; 8 Jur. 1093) decides nothing more. It confirms, but does not extend the principle. There can be no reason why the margin should not be deemed part of the document because the words stand on one side of the paper: and reference to it suffices, unless some other county intervenes, when doubt at once arises, and doubt vitiates the order.

STATEMENTS IN THE EXAMINATION RELIED ON BY THE APPELLANTS.

The rule is quite clear that removing parishes must send all the examination to the receiving parishes. In the case of Reg. v. Latchworth (4 Law T. 133; 12 L. J. M. C. 20) an examination contained not only evidence of a birth settlement but evidence of an indenture of apprenticeship, which shewed a settlement by apprenticeship to have been gained in one of two places L. or W. named in the examination. One of the grounds of appeal was, that there was a settlement in W. where the apprentice had slept the last night, and inasmuch as the indenture had been proved before the removing justices, the appellants, instead of coming to the sessions prepared with proof of the indenture, relied upon the examination as sent by the respondents as proving this essential part of their case. In fact it was contended by the appellants, that whatever was contained in the examination was of the nature of an admission, which bound the respondents as much as statements in affidavits bind the parties who make them. Bricknell v. Hulse (7 Ad. & Ell. 454), and the doctrine in Slatterie v. Pooley (6 M. & W. 664), were relied on also in the same behalf. But the Court held that the statements in the examination are the statements of witnesses and not admissions of the parties: "It would be unreasonable," said Wightman, J. "to hold that every statement by a pauper was to be treated as an averment by the respondents." Lord Denman, C. J. however, though his lordship distinctly held that the respondents were not bound by the statement of the witnesses, felt dissatisfied with the conduct of the respondents, who ought to have informed the appellants that they did not admit the indenture of which they sent evidence. The chief ground of this judgment appears to have been the fact that the respondents are bound to send the whole of the examinations, and ought not, therefore, to be bound or prejudiced by what they cannot help sending; and that the appellants ought not to be allowed to limit the ground of the contest by their notice of appeal, and say to the respondents, "You must stand upon that." The order removing to the birth settlement was therefore confirmed. We confess that we do not feel very strongly the force of this argument. Though the respondents are bound to send the whole of the examinations to the receiving parish, they are not bound to give more evidence than they choose. In this case they gave formal proof of an indenture of apprenticeship: this was their own voluntary act, and that which no witness could have done without their consent. There is, however, a strong authority in Reg. v. S. Mary Beverley (1 B. & Ad. 201), for holding the respondents bound by such evidence, even where involuntarily given by their own witness. That was a case where, having relied on a widow's maiden settlement, one of their own witnesses proved at the hearing before the sessions that the woman's husband had a birth settlement in some parish in Ipswich, and it was held that though the precise parish was not ascertained, the order for removing to the maiden settlement ought to be quashed. In that case it is true that the statement was made at the sessions, and not as in Reg. v. Latchford, before the removing justices. But we confess our inability to perceive the distinction in point of principle. It will be hazardous for parishes to trust to appeals on the strength of this case. And it is at any rate clear that where evidence of a subsequent settlement is sent with the examination which sets up another, the respondents ought invariably to give notice that they disavow all admission of the evidence of such subsequent settlement. It is probable, in this case, that the removing parish had intended to prove the apprenticeship settlement, but found out, after going through the proof of the binding, &c. that the apprentice had, contrary to their expectation, slept the last night, and thus completed a forty days' residence last in their own parish, and then resolved on dropping that settlement and relying on the prior birth settlement.

PUBLICATION OF RATES UPON CHURCH DOORS.

The loose wording of statutes, together with the rigorously literal construction put upon them by the Courts, are indeed teeming sources of doubt and also of the pains and penalties of litigation. The 7 Wm. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 15, s. 2, enacts "that the notices shall be affixed on or near to the doors of all the churches and chapels within such parish or place." By the case of Reg. v. Boyds (8 Jur. 1096), it appears that the town of Todmorden is possessed of two churches; one new, and used for divine service; the other old, and used only for burying the dead. Notice of a rate had been posted on one door only of the new church, and on no door of the old church. The decision unfortunately turned on another point; but Lord Denman, C. J. intimated that it was prudent to affix the notice on all churches and chapels, used or not used; but that it was perhaps unnecessary to do so on more than one of the public entrances to each building.

WARRANTS OF COMMITMENT UNDER THE MASTER AND SERVANTS ACT.

The cases of Reg. v. Tordoff (13 L. J. M. C. 145), and Reg. v. Lewis (3 L. J. M. C. 46), decided that a warrant under 4 Geo. 4, c. 34, must be founded on examinations taken on oath: and that this must be expressly stated in the warrant. In Ex parte Gray (1 Bit. & Sym. M. C. 116), the only distinction was, that it appeared that the prisoner was present; but Patteson, J. held, in the Bail Court, that this made no difference, that the warrant was a conviction, and that it was bad for not shewing that it was legally made.

Entry of Appeal by Respondents.—Masters and Servants' Act.

The case of Reg. v. West Riding; Sheffield v. Crich (12 L. J. M. C. 148) had in some measure determined this point, that respondents must remain respondents, and cannot act the part of appellants. See also Reg. v. Stoke Bliss (13 Law J. 151; and and 1 Bit. & Sym. M.C. 61.) In the case of Reg. v. The Recorder of Bolton (1 Bit. & Sym. M.C. 126), which occurred last term, it appeared that notice of an appeal had been given against a conviction under the 17 Geo. 3, c. 56, s. 8, which provides against frauds by servants against their masters. Notice was subsequently given that the appeal was abandoned. Patteson, J. held that under these circumstances, the appeal never having been entered, the Recorder of Bolton had no right to try it at the instance of the appellants, in order that they might have their costs; the only mode was to estreat the recognizances. A mandamus was also refused to compel the Recorder to give costs, the power to do so, by this statute, being consequent upon hearing the appeal. The 8 & 9 Wm. 3, c. 30, was held not to apply, but to settlements only.

It further appeared that the magistrates who had originally convicted the appellant refused to issue a warrant for his committal, fancying (and we believe the fancy is prevalent in Lancashire) that their jurisdiction was terminated by the notice of appeal; but Patteson, J. said, "I entertain no doubt that the not entering of the appeal according to the recognizance came to the same thing as if there had been no notice of the appeal at all, and no recognizances had been entered into; in which case, although the party was not committed immediately by the magistrates upon conviction, I have no doubt the magistrates might do so now. The difficulty in Rex v. Twyford (5 Ad. & Ell. 430) does not arise here; because there the party was in custody under a warrant, and the difficulty arose upon the extraordinary provision in the Act of Parliament."

In the manufacturing districts this case should be noted:—men who receive work to do from their employers, being convicted under this Act, cannot evade punishment by giving notice of appeals they do not intend to prosecute.

Chargeability.—The form of certificate under the new Act is treated of elsewhere in this number of the Law Times.

REPORT

OF THE MANAGING COMMITTEE OF THE JUSTICES' CLERKS SOCIETY,

Upon the proposed Bill "To Regulate the Appointment and Payment of Clerks and other Officers of the Courts of Petty and Quarter Sessions of the Peace, Oyer and Terminer, and Gaol Delivery."

The Clerks of Petty Sessions Bill proposes a very material change in the office of justices' clerk.

Its main features are the payment of a salary in lieu of fees, and the addition of many new and highly important functions.

The objects which the Bill appears chiefly to contemplate are, to render the office of justices' clerk more responsible and independent—less obnoxious to the suspicion of unworthy motives in its exercise, and to clothe it with more of the character of a public functionary than heretofore.

The judicious course adopted by the Government in printing and circulating the draft of the bill during the recess, in order that it may be more fully considered and discussed before the next sitting of Parliament, should induce every one interested in the subject to treat any verbal inaccuracy with merely a passing notice for the purpose of correction, and to give an earnest attention to the important principles involved in the measure, with a view to make it as perfect and efficient as possible.

As to the main point of the Bill—the substitution of a salary for fees but little need be said. Payment for public services by fees possesses certain advantages: it tends to excite zeal, assiduity, and attention—forms a self-adjusting scale of remuneration—and, in its general operation, taxes those only who receive the corresponding benefit. On the other hand, it lays a public officer open to the suspicion of extortion and partiality, and in some cases presses hardly upon innocent and even injured parties; while the necessity which it often imposes upon justices of assessing a small fine for an offence on account of the fees attaching to the case, gives an undue colouring to the proceedings.

The advantages of a salary, in point of principle, outweigh those of the other system. But to render it desirable that it should in fact be substituted for fees, due provision should be made for its alteration in case of need; there would otherwise be strong reason to fear that a salary fixed without a practical knowledge of the extent of the additional labours imposed by the Bill on justices' clerks, might prove altogether inadequate; or that a salary, adequate in the first instance, might, by reason of additional labours to be thereafter imposed on the clerk, become a very insufficient source of remuneration.

The office of justices' clerk is a very ancient one, indeed, no doubt coeval with that of a justice of the peace himself, for at all times a gentleman filling the latter office must have required some one to fill up warrants and proceedings, particularly in very ancient times when a knowledge of writing was considered beneath the consideration of men of rank and property.

As population has gradually increased, and the laws have become more complicated and minute in their operation, the office of justices' clerk has become one of great responsibility, requiring considerable legal attainments, and only to be effectually performed by means of experience acquired by long practice.

The consequence has been that the office is now generally filled by the most respectable legal practitioners, who, by its forming but one, and often an inconsiderable item, in point of emolument, of their professional income, are enabled to perform its duties with greater independence, efficiency, and liberality, than if it were their sole or principal occupation.

The office is recognised in many statutes, but its title to fees (the appointment being held during the pleasure of the appointing justices) is sanctioned by the 26 Geo. 2, c. 14, which enacts that the justices' clerks shall be entitled to such fees as shall be fixed by the justices in General Quarter Sessions of the Peace for the county, confirmed by the judges of assize.

No office, whose tenure is durante bene placito, stands upon a surer or better established foundation.

The office of clerk to petty sessions for a division, which is variously designated in different Acts of Parliament, is comparatively of modern origin.

Formerly (as at present in many instances) every individual justice of the peace had his own clerk, although the same person might be employed by several justices.

Then, when two or more justices met together for the despatch of general business, forming what the text books call a petty session, the clerk attending them to advise upon and prepare the proceedings, became the clerk of petty sessions. Subsequently, when justices were required to meet for the transaction of certain special business relating to a particular district, such meeting constituted a special petty session of justices, and the clerk attending thereat became the clerk of special petty sessions for the division, or, as he may be more briefly termed, divisional sessions clerk; so that there may, and in many places do actually now exist, the several offices or employments of clerk to one or more justices individually,—clerk of petty sessions,—and clerk of the special petty sessions for a division.

These distinctions have gradually grown up without any definitive legislative provision for their origin, although they may be traced inferentially in many statutes; and of late years, owing to the various important functions which have been imposed upon the magistrates out of sessions, for local convenience, the divisional special petty sessions have become tribunals of considerable interest in a public point of view, and in the exercise of the magisterial functions, great inconveniences are constantly felt, and the due course of justice often impeded, owing to the absence of any legislative code for guidance and adequate protection from vexatious litigation.

The only statutes bearing immediately upon the formation and constitution of special sessions divisions, are the 9 Geo. 4, c. 43, and the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 12, which regulate the formation of new districts, and the alteration of existing ones in certain cases.

In the constitution and practice of divisional sessions, there are existing anomalies which require correction. In some cases the clerks to individual justices attend the divisional special petty sessions, and divide between them, in proportion to the number of justices present for whom they respectively act, the fees for the business transacted thereat; a system manifestly objectionable in many respects, and derogatory to the office of a public functionary.

The mode of convening divisional special petty sessions varies in almost every statute which requires them to be held, whilst in some no directions whatever are given on the subject. Some general uniform provision for regulating this important preliminary step is much needed.

The Justices' Clerks Society prepared a Bill on the subject in the session of 1843, which, after being approved by a Select Committee of the Upper House, and read a third time, was brought into the Commons too late in the session to be further proceeded with. The proposed enactments of that Bill would be very usefully introduced into the present measure.

In the County-rate Act of last session, a clause was introduced at a late stage of its progress, substituting a notice from one justice for the former practice of a notice from the high constable to each justice for the convening of special sessions; but the enactment is imperfect in many points of view, particularly in applying only to the notification to the justices resident in the division, and not to that required by various statutes to be given to justices usually acting for, although not resident within, the division, and to other parties in connection with and affected by the subject matter of the several special sessions.

After these general remarks, the mode in which the proposed Bill deals with some existing defects comes under consideration, and in doing so, it must be admitted that the subject is an important and difficult one, and only to be mastered by a thorough practical acquaintance with the existing law and usage, and the inconveniences of the present system.

In the first place, its intention appears to be to provide that the justices, who may have qualified themselves to act under the Bill by the performance of certain preliminaries (which, however, they are not thereby enjoined to perform), shall meet in general sessions, and fix the time and place for the election of clerks of petty sessions, and also fix the salaries to be paid to such clerks, and that at the time and place so fixed, the justices then present shall elect the clerks of petty sessions.

The preliminaries which must be observed to give a justice jurisdiction under the first and subsequent clauses are,—

1st. That he must be either resident within or have elected to act more especially for some division in a county.

2nd. He must also have agreed on the times and places for holding the petty sessions within such division.

3rd. He must also have notified the same (that is to say, the first two items) to the clerk of the peace.

With respect to these provisions, it is submitted that it would be better to make the preliminary matter (now merely introduced by way of recital) a substantive directory enactment, otherwise in some divisions, where justices may not choose to take the initiative, the Bill would be inoperative.

It will also be seen that there is no direction as to whether a justice resident in one division can elect to act "especially" for another division, or whether he can act "especially" for two or more divisions. It is a very common practice for justices to act for more than one division.

As to the election of the clerk.—It is by no means clear whether the place for such election is to be in the division to which the appointment specifically relates, or whether it is to take place at the general session of the peace for the county; and (if the matter is to be transacted in general session) it is still doubtful in what manner the justices are to proceed, whether to act as one body in fixing the salaries of the several divisional clerks, and the times and places for the election of each; or whether they are to divide themselves into committees, according to their respective divisions, to perform those acts with reference to each division separately. It is submitted that it should be at a special session in and for the specific division, and be decided upon by the majority of the justices for the division then present, subject to revision and confirmation by the general session.

With respect to fixing the amount of salary, it is urged that according to general usage in such cases, and particularly with reference to the mode directed for ascertaining the clerk of the peace's salary, an average of five or seven years would be a fairer mode of fixing at least a minimum, with a provision for an augmentation in respect of the new duties proposed by the Bill to be imposed on the clerk, and that the salary should be periodically revised and adjusted to altered circumstances, at intervals of about seven or ten years; or at any rate that power should be given in the Bill to revise the salary according to circumstances.

Provision should also be made for the necessary expenses of hiring rooms for holding the several divisional sessions, and of purchasing forms and books, which are absolutely indispensable, together with stationery required to be used, and for other incidental expenses in the performance of the duties of the office, in conformity to the practice at the metropolitan police courts.

The third clause enacts, that "such resolution" (this, it is presumed, means the amount of the salary) shall be submitted to the next general session, who may confirm or reduce the salary; a minute whereof is to be made by the clerk of the peace, and signed by the chairman at such session.

It will be observed that the last-mentioned general session are not empowered to increase, but only to confirm or reduce the salary.

The power should be to increase or reduce, and the proper words would be, "to confirm or alter the amount so fixed." And in case of alteration, the confirmation of a subsequent general session should be required, in order to guard against a hasty decision on a subject upon which no discussion or difference of opinion may have been expected.

The fourth clause provides that the salary shall be paid out of the county rate; and a copy of the resolutions of the said general session is to be sent by the clerk of the peace, certified under his hand, to the treasurer of the county, as his authority for paying and allowing the salary.

There is no provision as to the mode and times of payment of the salary. As the fees are to be accounted for and paid quarterly, it would be right that a stipulation should be added to the clause authorizing the treasurer to pay the clerk's salary by four equal quarterly portions at the periods fixed for rendering the accounts and balances.

The fifth section enacts that at the time and place fixed for the election, the justices then present shall elect a clerk of petty sessions, the office being limited to,—

1st. An attorney of a superior court of common law for five years before the date of the election; or

2nd. One who has acted as clerk to the justices of any division before the passing of the Act, and certified by the majority of the justices present at the election, under their hands, to be sufficiently qualified by experience and knowledge of the law to perform the duties of clerk of petty sessions.

This clause disqualifies for the office of clerk of petty sessions all persons, except clerks acting before the passing of the Act, who shall not have been admitted attorneys for five years previously to their election. It is submitted that this limitation is too stringent, and would operate to shut out those who, from their particular line of practice in a justices' clerks' office during the five years of their clerkship, and the subsequently intervening period (often a long one) before admission, may be most eminently qualified to perform the duties of the office; and would let in, or rather limit the justices in their selection to, many whose general business, however extensive and long established, may not have afforded them any practical knowledge of the peculiar duties of a justices' clerk; and in some districts a difficulty would probably occur in inducing respectable men of the standing required by the Bill, to take upon themselves public functions in which they would have all to learn, and which might interfere injuriously with their general business.

The restriction of the office to admitted attorneys (when considered with reference to the exercise of a sound discretion by the justices in selecting a properly qualified person) would be as effectual as the nature of the case will admit, to insure the exclusion of improper persons; and the new system of examination adopted previously to the admission of attornies, and which has been in force about five years, is a further guarantee for due qualification without limit of standing, and one which does not exist in the case of barristers, whose mere call to the bar carries with it no authentic assurance of qualification.

The enactment that existing clerks should not be continued except on re-election, appears to be unjust, and would give a claim to those who might be displaced to be compensated for their loss of office. It would surely be more fair that the present clerks should be continued in office, they being liable, as at present, to be removed at the pleasure of the justices; more especially as the right to compensation has been fully admitted in the instance of justices' clerks in boroughs, and in many other cases.

This clause should also be extended so as to admit of the appointment of two or more professional gentlemen (being partners in business) as joint clerk for a division, in the discretion of the justices, when there may be any local or other circumstances which may appear to the justices to render such a course expedient or desirable. And in the case of two or more persons acting as clerks in the same division, provision should be made for compensating such of them as may not be re-elected.

The sixth clause provides, that whenever a vacancy shall arise in the office of the clerk of petty sessions, the same course shall be pursued for the election of a successor, save that the salary may be altered by the majority of the justices present at any general or quarter sessions of the peace next following the occasion of such vacancy.

The seventh section declares that the clerk so elected shall hold his office during the pleasure of the justices of the peace, who shall, from time to time, act for the division for which such appointment shall be made, or the major part of them, and be subject to dismissal by the justices acting for the division, at a meeting to be called on the written request of any five or more of such justices to the clerk of the peace.

This tenure of the office is in conformity to the present state of things; but the requisition as to notice by five justices acting for any particular division, would, in some localities, render the provision nugatory, as so many acting justices may not be found in many divisions.

It should be at the request of five or more justices, or if the number of acting justices for such division be less than five, then of the majority of the justices acting for such division.

The eighth clause gives the justices the power of requiring security from the clerk "for the due discharge of his office, and payment of all moneys received, or which ought to be received, by him," in such sum, and with such number of sureties, as the justices may declare, in writing, at the time of election.

This provision is quite new, and appears to be scarcely necessary when considered with reference to the frequent accounting for the fines and fees enjoined by the Act,—the offset against the fees and fines by the clerk's current salary,—and the power of dismissal, with or without cause. Security of this kind is highly objectionable, and very harassing to parties in obliging them to apply to friends to become securities, and it is not required in the case of the borough clerks and metropolitan police-courts clerks, whose receipts must, on the average, be considerably more than those of justices' clerks in general. It is hoped that this clause will be entirely expunged, but should it be retained it will require much technical modification. It should express to whom the security is to be given—whether by bond or recognizance—whether with or without stamp—and at whose expense the same is to be given: also a form of the bond or recognizance should be given in a schedule, and the indefinite term of "due discharge of duty," should be omitted, and the security confined to the duly accounting for moneys received.

The 9th section is a very important one. It proposes to define the duties of the clerk of petty sessions, and places them under the following heads:—

1st. To do the business now done by clerks of justices as such.

2nd. To advise the justices of the county, or any of them, when required, in all matters relating to his or their office.

3rd. To transact all necessary business and duty in relation to the directions for the search for, apprehension, detention, committal, and prosecution of any offenders (for offences committed within the division for which he shall be appointed, or in any other parts of the county if he shall be so directed by any two or more of the justices of his division), at any general or special sessions of the peace, or adjournment thereof, or the assizes, on all occasions on which such prosecutions shall be conducted at the expense of the county.

4th. To prepare, engross, and present the indictments on those occasions.

5th. To assist the justices, and particularly those acting for his division, on all occasions, when his assistance shall be necessary, whether in or out of court.

6th. To attend all courts of petty sessions within his division.

7th. To attend the courts of general or quarter sessions of the peace, all special sessions of the peace, or any adjournment thereof, and the general sessions of oyer and terminer, and general gaol delivery, whenever necessary.

8th. To assist the clerk of the peace in the duties of his office, and in taxing and ascertaining the amount of costs, expenses, or charges, to be paid out of the county rate in or about the searching for, apprehension, committal, or prosecution of any offenders, or the attendance of any witness or witnesses, or any other expense to which the county rate may be liable.

9th. To attend to the recovery and collection of fees moneys instead of fees penalties, and all sums for the use of the county rate; and to keep true and correct accounts of all moneys received or paid by him in the discharge of his duties, to be always open to any justice, treasurer of the county, or clerk of the peace.

10th. To cause an entry or minute to be made of the proceedings of the justices in any session, or sitting, or on any special occasion; the same to remain in the custody of the clerk, and be a record of the proceedings of any such court, and be open to the inspection of any justice, who may make, or cause to be made, a copy of any such entry.

Of these heads the 3rd, 4th 7th, and 8th, are entirely new. With respect to the third, the duties are limited to those in relation to directions for the several matters therein enumerated. The term directions here does not appear to be very definite in its application. Are the directions to emanate solely from the justices, or from any other and what authorities, and what particular duties are intended to be included in that term?

Another limit to the prosecutions referred to in the clause is, that they be such only as shall be conducted at the expense of the county. Nearly all prosecutions are conducted to a certain extent at the expense of the county, and very few without some outlay on the part of the prosecutor. Perhaps, in any doubtful cases, it would be better to leave to the divisional justices the discretion of deciding whether the clerk should conduct the prosecution or not, unless the legislature should be of opinion that all cases, without exception, should be prosecuted by the clerk of the division to which they may respectively relate.

The 4th head would introduce some complexity and interference with reference to the duties of clerks of indictments and clerks of the peace at assize and sessions; those duties being now performed by established officers, who, if their emoluments were interfered with by this provision, would be entitled to compensation; moreover it is urged, that the important duty of wording technically in indictments the allegation of various offences necessary to put a person upon his trial and to found a valid judgment, would be better performed by a single functionary accustomed to that peculiar branch, and whose experience, from constant practice in all classes of offences, would enable him to bring to the task superior efficiency.

The 7th head, viz. the attendance at the assizes and sessions, when necessary, may entail upon the clerks considerable expense and inconvenience; but it is consequent upon the duties involved in the 3rd head, and the only remark upon this is, that it would be a fairer mode of remunerating the clerk for this particular duty, to allow him a certain adequate sum per diem for his time and expenses in such attendances, independent of his ordinary salary, as the residences of many clerks will be at a considerable distance from the county town.

The first duty under the 8th head is of a very extensive and indefinite scope. The injunction to assist the clerk of the peace in his duties would throw upon every divisional clerk the task of performing the entire duties of the clerk of the peace.

It is submitted that it is inexpedient to interfere at all with the functions of the clerk of the peace or clerk of assize officers, who have long-established and recognised duties to perform, with appropriate remunerative fees, proposed by the Bill to be commuted for a fixed salary.

The 10th section provides, that if an hour shall elapse from the appointed time for holding the petty sessions, without the attendance of the clerk or his deputy, the sessions shall be thereby adjourned until the next petty sessions, and at the next petty sessions an entry of such adjournment shall be made in the minutes.

And if one hour from the appointed time shall elapse without the attendance of the justice, the sessions shall be thereby adjourned till the next petty sessions; and then, and also whenever an hour shall elapse without the attendance of two justices, the clerk shall make an entry thereof in the minutes.

And a report of such failure or irregularity in attendance is to be sent by the petty sessions clerk to the clerk of the peace, who is to lay an abstract of such reports before the justices in quarter sessions, who are to cause the clerk of the peace to send a copy of such abstract, with their remarks thereon, to the Secretary of State.

This provision, as far as it refers to the justices, is not likely to be very palatable, as it implies a suspicion of their neglecting their duty, and places upon their clerk the invidious task of recording and reporting their failures and irregularities of attendance. So far as the clerks are concerned, they have no right nor reason to object to such provisions to enforce punctuality and attendance to their own duties.

The 11th clause requires the clerk of petty sessions, at every quarter sessions, to render, on oath, to the county treasurer, an account of all fines and penalties imposed by the justices of his division, and of all sums or fees collected or received by him by virtue of his office, or which, but for his default, he might have collected and received, or which shall have become due and payable on account of such office, for the then preceding quarter, according to a form in the schedule, or as the Secretary of State shall direct; and shall produce all books and documents required to vouch for the accuracy thereof. And if the treasurer or the county justices are dissatisfied with the account, they may refer the same to the Secretary of State, who shall, by some officer of the Queen's Bench, or other person he may appoint, investigate the same, and make such allowances or disallowances therein as he shall deem just and reasonable, and finally settle and certify, in writing under his hand, the amount to be paid or allowed by the clerk thereupon. The introduction of the words "on oath," appears to have been an oversight, as the very next section requires the account to be verified by a declaration only.

The words "but for his default he might have collected and received," are somewhat vague with reference to an account, the truth of which is to be verified by a declaration. It might be required that the account should contain a statement of the reasons for the nonpayment of the fines and fees in every case, the correctness of which statements would be secured by the declaration, and the force of which would be ultimately decided, when necessary, by the Secretary of State. The words "which shall have become due and payable on account of his office," appear to be unnecessary, as there can be no sums for which he can be accountable, as clerk, beyond the fines and fees.

The 12th section provides that the account shall be verified by a declaration made before a justice of the peace, and a pecuniary penalty (the amount being at present in blank) is fixed as the punishment of falsehood in respect of such declaration.

The verification by a declaration is very proper; but it is a new and unusual mode of dealing with what amounts to the moral offence of perjury, to make it punishable by a pecuniary penalty on summary conviction before two justices; it surely would be more simple and consistent to enact that such an offence shall be deemed a misdemeanor.

The 13th clause directs that the clerk shall pay to the county treasurer the balance due on the account at the time of rendering the same; and also such sums as may be certified by the Secretary of State, as aforesaid, within 48 hours after notification thereof by the treasurer, in writing to him, to be sent by the post.

This period of 48 hours from the sending of the notice is too short; it should be within five days at the least, and provision should be made for the payment by the treasurer of any balance due to the clerk.

The 14th section enacts, that if default be made in such payment by the clerk, within 21 days after the same shall be directed to be paid as aforesaid, the treasurer shall make complaint thereof to any two justices for the county, who shall be thereupon authorized, by writing under their hands—

1st. To stay the payment of any salary to the clerk.

2nd. To issue their warrant for levying the amount due (after making due allowance for salary, or otherwise, as they may deem proper, having relation to the probable amount received by such clerk for moneys not accounted for in the meantime) by distress and sale of goods or other property of any kind or description.

3rd. And by apprehension and detention of such defaulter, and his committal to the Debtor's Prison of the county, until the sum so appearing or certified to be due, together with interest at 5*l.* per cent. per annum, and all costs in obtaining the same, shall have been fully raised and paid.

4th. And such clerk shall, by the issue of a second warrant for such purpose as aforesaid, be thereby forthwith removed from his office, and be incapable of re-election thereto.

5th. And that it shall be lawful, upon such payments to be thereupon made, for the treasurer to set-off and allow any sum then due for salary, or to require the render of an account of all moneys received, or which ought to have been received, by the clerk from the time of rendering the last account, before any allowance of such salary shall be made.

6th. Provided, that if after three days' previous notice of motion to the treasurer, for cause shewn before the magistrates of the county, at the next general session or quarter session of the peace, it shall be made to appear that such warrant was improperly or improvidently issued, such clerk may be restored to office by the magistrates there present, or the major part of them.

And the 15th section enacts, That in case the clerk shall die before the render of an account, or the next quarterly period for rendering his account, or shall resign, or be dismissed from his office, the executors or administrators of such clerk shall render such account, and be entitled to the payment of a proportionate part of the salary due; and that the account shall be enforced by summons and warrant of arrest of the person, and payment of any balance due, which may be enforced by distress and sale, or arrest and detention of the person, in manner aforesaid.

The two last sections, the 14th and 15th, are very objectionable in many respects, both as to principle and construction. A very simple and appropriate form of clause for the purpose might be taken from the Acts relating to the recovery of balances due from overseers of the poor, collectors of taxes, and other officers of public receipt. And the 15th section, making the executors of a defaulting clerk liable to imprisonment until the balance be paid, must have slipped in through inadvertence.

The stringent character of this provision, connected as it is with the previous requisition for security, and the fact of the clerk's office being held at the pleasure of the divisional justices, is very striking, and its extreme severity is manifest by the concluding proviso for the restoration to office of the clerk by the quarter session, a result which may not be accomplished until after the infliction of the full measure of punishment upon the supposed offender, and of the benefit of which he may be deprived in a few days by the fiat of the divisional justices, at whose pleasure he holds his appointment.

The 16th section provides for the election, by the divisional justices, of a crier of their court of petty sessions, to keep order in court, and perform such other duties as the justices shall appoint; or if there be any police constables, or paid constables appointed to such division, by any resolution of vestry, to order one of such constables to perform the duty of crier; the salary to be fixed by the justices at the time of the appointment, and to be paid out of the county rate, but to be subject to such order or regulation or confirmation of such appointment and salary, as the justices, at the next general or quarter sessions, shall order, after twenty-one days' notice of such appointment shall have been given, in manner therein before directed, by the clerk of the county to the justices of the county; and no moneys are to be paid out of the county rate until such order shall have been made in that behalf. And the 17th section briefly declares that the crier shall hold office during the pleasure of the justices of the division, and in case of his dismissal or death, the justices may, from time to time, proceed to the election of another in manner aforesaid, who may be paid in manner aforesaid. The wording of these clauses will require considerable alteration to render them operative and conformable to other parts of the Bill.

The sections from the 18th to the 35th, both inclusive, relate principally to clerks of the peace, and therefore, although they require attention, they are passed over at present as being subordinate in interest to those parts of the Bill which refer to the clerks of divisional sessions; and indeed it is a question whether it would not tend to simplify the measure, if the provisions relating to clerks of the peace were introduced into a separate Bill.

The 36th section declares false swearing to be perjury.

This clause will be quite unnecessary if a declaration be substituted for an oath, as suggested with respect to the clerk's accounts.

The 37th section gives to the Secretary of State the power, now possessed by the justices in quarter sessions and judges of assizes, of settling the tables of fees to be taken by clerks to justices and other officers engaged in the administration of the criminal law. As the Bill contemplates the remuneration of the clerk by a fixed stipend in lieu of fees, this provision has no bearing upon the pecuniary interests of the clerks themselves, whilst it is in conformity to the precedent established in the case of municipal town clerks.

The 38th section imposes a fine of 5*l.* for taking a fee not authorized by the table in force, such fine to be recovered by any person who will sue for the same in any of her Majesty's courts of law at Westminster. There does not seem to be any good reason why more than the amount of the fee should be recoverable, and that within a limited period, in a summary way before justices of the peace; because such unauthorized fee (having reference to the previous clause as to false declarations) can only be taken by a salaried clerk from error or inadvertence, or a desire to relieve the county rate, and not from any interested motive.

The 39th clause protects existing compensations.

The 40th section enacts, that no person shall act as clerk other than the persons appointed to the office, except in case of sickness, or other unavoidable causes, or for necessary recreation; and that no person shall act as deputy who has not been previously nominated by the principal, and approved for the particular occasion by at least three justices of the district for which he shall have been appointed.

The necessity of an approval by three justices of the division of a deputy on every occasion of the unavoidable absence of the principal, will, in many, and perhaps most instances, render the provision nugatory, as in some divisions there may not be three justices acting for the division, and the illness or engagement may occur so suddenly as to prevent the clerk from obtaining the sanction of the justices.

Surely the approval of two justices would be sufficient to give to the clerk a general power of appointing a deputy, as in the case of coroners; and the particular working of the provision might be left to the control of the divisional justices.

The 41st clause enacts, that no charges for deputy, or for any business, in the way of additional charge, shall be made on the county, by any clerk of the peace, or clerk of the petty sessions; but that all duties heretofore discharged, or which may thereby, or by authority of Parliament, or otherwise, howsoever, devolve on the clerk by authority of Parliament, besides those heretofore usually discharged by him, shall form part of the respective duties for which salary shall be given.

This clause requires modification, and should be followed by a proviso or clause enacting that it shall be lawful for the general or quarter sessions of the peace, from time to time, upon the application of any clerk of petty sessions, countersigned by two justices, to order an increase of the salaries of the clerks so as to render them adequate to the additional duties that may be imposed.

The 42nd section, providing for the delivery to a successor of the books and records of office, is untechnical and complex in its language. An intelligible and well-established form of clause may be easily obtained by reference to the statutes relating to overseers of the poor, collectors of taxes, and other public officers,

The 43rd section gives an option to municipal corporations to avail themselve of the Act as to the substitution of a salary for fees with reference to clerks to justices in boroughs. But a provision is required in the case of boroughs having a commission of the peace but without the grant of quarter session, so that they may not be taxed doubly by contributing to the county rate as well as to the borough fund. And the 44th section excludes corporations from the operation of the bill except as to the last mentioned option.

The 45th clause defines the meaning of the words county clerk of the peace, and division, and is well adapted to its object. It has been copied from the before mentioned Divisional Sessions Bill, prepared by the Justices' Clerks Society in 1843.

The 46th section excludes from the Bill, Scotland, Ireland, the City of London, and the Borough of Southwark. And the 47th provides for its amendment or repeal during the same session of Parliament in which it may be passed.

The schedule, containing the form of clerks' return of fines and fees, requires alteration in several particulars; and the declaration should state the same to be an account of fines and fees imposed by the justices of the division of , to the best of the clerk's knowledge and belief, and of all sums received by him or such fines and fees and otherwise, by virtue of his office, between the day of and the day of and that the several statments therein are true.

Power should be introduced for the justices to remit fees in cases which appear to them deserving of such indulgence.

It would much tend to render the functions of the divisional special sessions more efficient and convenient in exercise, if such tribunal were declared to be a Court of Record, with all the Common Law and statutory incidents of such a court, including a general power to summon and enforce, on pain of fine and imprisonment, the attendance of of witnesses; the power of carrying out their orders, and punishing for contempt, with a comprehensive schedule of forms of information, summons, warrant, conviction, commitment, and other proceedings, without it being necessary to set out therein the evidence upon which the judgment may be founded; coupled also with an indemnity to justices against actions for bonâ fide proceedings.

By order,

CHARLES AUGUSTIN SMITH, Secretary.

November, 1844.

PRISON DISCIPLINE.

EIGHTH REPORT OF THE INSPECTOR OF PRISONS FOR THE NORTHEN AND EASTERN DISTRICTS.

TO THE RIGHT HON. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR THE HOME DEPARTMENT.

SIR,—I have the bonour to present the eighth report upon the prisons visited by me in the northern and eastern parts of England.

Upon this occasion the reports upon separate prisons appear to require but little either of prefatory comment or remark.

On the general subject of penal discipline, I have observed, with much satisfaction, during my recent visits to the provinces, both in the justices and others who are charged with the higher superintendence of establishments connected therewith, a very deeply increased sense of the responsibility attaching to their trust, and consequently a greater degree of attention to its faithful execution.

I have particular pleasure in reporting that in the very great proportion of the prisons comprised within this extensive district, the means taken for ensuring prisoners a sufficient quantity of plain and wholesome food have been attended with great success by the very general adoption of the official dietaries, or their equivalents. I am persuaded that, by a firm perseverance in the same wise course, on the part of superior authority, and enforcement on those who still withhold their concurrence in measures no less required by the Acts of the Legislature than by common humanity, this important branch of penal treatment will, in a very short time, be placed upon a basis from which it cannot be shaken while subject to watchful superintendence.

Among other evils foretold as the certain result of this interference with the food for prisoners, there is one more warmly insisted on than others, and which I advert to, rather from the strenuousness of its advocates, than its real importance. I allude to the anticipation that by the adoption of these dietaries, or their equivalents, the situation of the convict as to food, would be so superior to that of a considerable proportion of the humbler classes, that it would induce a preference for a prison, and thereby directly encourage crime. With every deference to those from whom the apprehension of such an evil proceeds, I do not hesitate to affirm that I have such a confidence in the moral feeling of the humbler classes, that even in the times of severe pressure and distress, I believe that few and but very few would break the law for the purpose of seeking an asylum in a prison. But I am prepared to show, that even if the morals of the people were as vitiated as apprehended, the quantity of food prescribed for prisoners by authority is no encouragement to crime, but directly the reverse, and that the prisoners are less likely to be satisfied with the new diets than the old. I have already found this to be the case, in one instance at Chester, where the prisoners declared they liked the quality of the new, but preferred the quantity of the old. The reason is obvious. The food prescribed in the official dietaries consists of various articles, all alimentary of the human body, and generally solid in form. The ordinary diet for prisoners previous to the recent interference of authority, was most disproportionately given in a liquid form, consisting, independently of the bread, of thin gruel, and in some cases with the addition of thin soup, well satisfying the immediate cravings of hunger by its bulk, but affording no sufficient supply to the constantly consuming elements of the human body. Hence the numerous trifling cases of dyspepsia and other ailments connected with the digestive functions which, under long imprisonments, crept into serious maladies, breaking down the constitution, or ending in death. That the new dietaries are of a sufficiently nutritive character, though less repletive than the former, I have no doubt; and I have just received the voluntary evidence of a keeper of a house of correction in an agricultural district, which had been previously remarked for its sharp discipline and spare food, where the justices had, of their own accord, adopted the official tables, upon the recommendation of the circular from the Home Office. He states, in a communication to me, dated the 1st of January, 1844, "I am happy to say that since the adoption of the present dietaries the health of the prisoners has been very much improved."

New rules.—The promulgation of the code of rules for all prisons, accompanied with the recommendation of them by superior authority, has already been productive of considerable advantages. In several of the prisons in this district they have been entirely adopted; in others the former rules have been assimilated to the new, and a great advance has been made to that desirable end—uniformity in regulation and government.

Penal treatment of children.—I deferentially abstain from adverting to or re-urging former opinions, however strengthened by maturer experience, which may provoke discussion on the subject of the separate or seclusive system of prison discipline; but I feel it incumbent on me to recommend most strongly that its danger and utter inapplicability as a penal infliction for juvenile offenders should be impressed generally on the justices, and that in the construction of new prisons such arrangements should be made as may afford the means of placing this description of prisoners in association, but under proper superintendence during the day while in labour, instruction, and at meals, and with a separate cell at night. The pernicious effects of seclusion and sedentary labour on boys has been most marked in the prisons in Scotland, and I refer to a striking instance of their injurious influence, which is recorded in my present report of the house of correction at Wakefield.

Debtors in houses of correction.—Having observed the great inconvenience and interruption to the regular discipline experienced in houses of correction under their supposed liability to receive debtors in execution from courts of request, according to the construction of clauses in certain local Acts, and having strong doubts whether these local Acts, in this particular, were not controlled by the 4th sec. of the 4th of George IV. cap. 64, I intimated my doubts to the visiting justices of the West Riding House of Correction, at Wakefield, where the inconvenience caused by the influx of such prisoners, and their visitors, was likely to prove most serious. The justices directed their solicitor to draw up a case, and lay it before the Attorney-General. This was done; and his opinion being conclusive that the keeper of the House of Correction was not bound to receive debtors under any of the local Acts, it was forthwith acted upon by the justices, who have since declined receiving such description of prisoners.

Lotteries in Public-houses.—I consider it proper to direct attention to the circumstances by which the confidential servants and clerks of men of business in commercial towns are exposed to a new temptation to crime, by the recent extension of gambling to public-houses by means of lotteries, where the sudden acquisition of a large sum of money is dependent upon the events of popular races, and where the shares, in proportion to the prizes, range from the lowest trifle to 25*l*. This description of gambling is pursued to an incredible extent in Manchester and other large towns, and is fast pervading the whole country. It seems fraught with unmitigated evil, combining the excitement for drink and idle company with the thirst for sudden and inordinate gain. I have received several communications from prisoners and others on this subject, and I refer to a very striking instance of its evil results in the report upon Lancaster Castle.

Debtors.—The want of some classification among debtor prisoners, which should effect the separation of those maintaining themselves from those receiving the prison allowance as destitute, has long been felt, not only as a great inconvenience, but tending to cast an additional expense upon the community; as debtors had simply to declare themselves destitute, and thus obtain the prison food, and still have the opportunity of procuring beer and other articles, through the means of those maintaining themselves, with whom they were associated. The suggestions made by me for their division into two classes, have been eagerly adopted, and carried out in several establishments, and with the expected beneficial results. In some prisons the classification has been extended to the formation of a third class, consisting of debtors remanded by the Commissioners of the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors, on the ground of fraud, under the 77th or 78th section of the 1st and 2nd Victoria, c. 110; and debtors who neglect or refuse to file a schedule of their property, under the 36th and 39th section of the same Act; and bankrupts remanded by the Court for not answering.

I feel myself impelled again to solicit attention to the prisons for debtors from courts of requests, and to those belonging to peculiar jurisdictions, and to refer for the details of their discreditable condition to my separate reports upon those at Radford, Sheffield, Bradford, and Rothwell. In the Peverell prison, at Radford, every debtor, at the time of my visit, was either receiving or on the eve of receiving relief as paupers; and I am fully satisfied, by informations from various sources, that many of these wretched and destitute persons are thrown into prison by low practitioners in the law for the sole purpose of obtaining from the Society for the Relief of Imprisoned Debtors a sum of money in commutation of the original debt, which may satisfy the attorney for the costs of suit. It will be found, by the evidence of the keeper at Lancaster Castle, that resort was even made to the artifice of increasing the amount of the debt, in order to obtain a larger sum from the society.

With more pointed reference to prisons belonging to courts of request, observation and experience alike bring to me the conviction, that the idleness and corrupting associations which pervade them all, cannot fail of inflicting serious moral injury on the humbler class of people, who are for the most part subjected to their influence. In many of the recent Acts for the establishment of small court jurisdictions, clauses have been introduced by which the judge of the court, without the assent of the defendant, may order that the debt and costs shall be paid by instalments; by which, on default of payment of each instalment, successive executions issue, and successive improvements are undergone. I have known as many as five imprisonments for one debt to have been ocasioned by default in the payment of instalments. This practice cannot fail of considerably augmenting the fees of the officers of the courts, and likewise of increasing the number of this description of prisoners. In the year 1835 an Act was passed for abolishing in Scotland imprisonment for civil debts of small amounts. I am unable to state whether this enactment, by restricting the credit of the humbler classes at the beer-shop and with the tallyman, has made them more provident, and forced upon the small employers a more steady payment of their wages; but when I contemplate, as an Inspector of Prisons, the extent of moral injury inflicted by this kind of imprisonment, I cannot but think this proceeding, as regards Scotland, worthy of consideration here. With reference to the measures proper to be adopted for securing to such prisoners a sufficient allowance of food when destitute, and placing them under more effective superintendence, I beg to refer to the preliminary letter in my last report, and to the reports upon such prisons in this.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your most obedient humble servant,

WILLIAM JOHN WILLIAMS.

Strand-on-the-Green. Inspector of Prisons.

MILLBANK PRISON—TRANSPORTATION SYSTEM.

The first report of the Inspectors of Millbank Prison, under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 26, was presented to Parliament towards the close of the session; it contains so much important information respecting the long needed alterations in the system of transportation, that a long extract from it may well find a place in our columns.

"The Secretary of State has signified to the Inspectors of Millbank Prison his intention to appropriate that prison as a depôt for the reception of all convicts under sentence or order of transportation in Great Britain, in lieu of their being sent, as heretofore, to the hulks. He has directed that the inspectors shall carefully examine the convicts admitted into the prison, and the documents transmitted with them; and that the inspectors shall recommend to him, from time to time, the mode in which these prisoners are to be disposed of with reference to their ages, crimes, sentences, and previous convictions, and in accordance with the general principles of the system of convict discipline in the penal colonies which has been established by Lord Stanley, and under which there are four stages through which the convicts will have to pass before they become free—namely, 1st. Detention at Norfolk Island; 2ndly. The Probationary gang; 3rdly. Probationary passes; 4thly. Tickets of leave.

"According to these instructions, all adult male prisoners sentenced to transportation for life, and the more aggravated cases of convicts sentenced to any term not less than fifteen years, and all prisoners sentenced to transportation for any term for burglary, arson, rape, forgery, or robberies attended with personal violence, are to be sent to Norfolk Island, for terms of not less than two, nor more than four years. These will afterwards have to pass through the stages of the probationary gang, probationary passes, and tickets of leave, in Van Diemen's Land, before they obtain their freedom.

"All other adult male prisoners, who are in a fit state of health to be transported, with the exception of those selected for Pentonville Prison, are to be sent to the probationary gang in Van Diemen's Land, for terms of not less than one year, nor of more than two years, except in cases of misconduct. These prisoners have afterwards to pass through the stages of probationary passes and tickets of leave before they become free.

"Prisoners between the ages of eighteen and thirty-five, under sentence of transportation for periods not exceeding fifteen years, and (except in special cases) for first convictions, may be recommended for confinement in Pentonville Prison for about eighteen months, then to be removed to Van Diemen's Land under their original sentences, with tickets of leave, probationary passes, or to the probationary gang, dependent on their conduct and improvement in Pentonville Prison.

"Juvenile male prisoners sentenced to transportation, who are deemed fit subjects for that institution, are recommended for removal to Parkhurst Prison; and the remainder to be sent to Point Puer, an establishment in Van Diemen's Land exclusively appropriated to criminal youth.

"There is a class of transports who are considered of too advanced an age and growth to be sent to Parkhurst Prison, but who are, nevertheless, too young for confinement in Pentonville Prison; for these a juvenile class has been formed in Millbank Prison, in which they are to remain one year, during which they are placed under the special care of the chaplains. They have good school instruction, are taught a trade, and work in the grounds belonging to the prison; and it is proposed that, at the expiration of that term, those whose conduct has been good shall be recommended for removal to Van Diemen's Land, with probationary passes, and that the rest be transferred to the probationary gang.

"Those convicts who are not in a fit state of health to be transported are recommended for removal to an invalid hulk, at Woolwich; and it is proposed that these prisoners shall be periodically examined by competent medical men, in order that such as are so far recovered as to be fit to undertake the voyage, may be sent to the penal colonies, under their original sentences.

"All female convicts under sentence of transportation, who are in a fit state of health to be transported, are sent to Van Diemen's Land, where a female penitentiary, with a well-selected and efficient staff of female officers, sent from this country, has recently been established.

"In order to dispose of the convicts who are admitted to Millbank Prison, in the most prompt manner, in accordance with the system which has been described, the inspectors carefully examine the prisoners individually, and the documents received with them; and transmit to the Secretary of State every fortnight lists containing full particulars respecting the prisoners received during that time, and recommending the mode in which they should be disposed of, either to Parkhurst or Pentonville Prisons, Norfolk Island, Van Diemen's Land, or the Invalid Hulk at Woolwich. By these means the proper selection of convicts for their respective destinations is made with accuracy and facility.

"As the prisoners become sufficiently numerous to fill a transport vessel, convict ships are taken up by the Admiralty for their conveyance to the penal colonies; and from the period at which the Millbank Prison Act came into operation (in the commencement of July last) up to the present time, the convict ships have taken their departure with the greatest regularity, even throughout the whole of the winter. By these means the sentence of transportation passed by the Court has, in most instances, been almost immediately carried into execution; the general deterring influence of that mode of punishment has been increased and rendered more efficacious; while the serious evils and inconveniences which formerly arose from the letting loose of convicts after terms of imprisonment in the general penitentiary or in the hulks, are remedied to a very great extent. The value of these remedies may be estimated by a review of the evils which they are calculated to remove, which affect both the liberated convict, and society at large. The convict is no longer inevitably impelled or lured back to crime, by being again thrown among his old associates, and exposed anew to temptations to which his more depraved habits give additional force; nor does his tainted character, closing against him the path to honest employment, almost compel him, as under the former system, to seek for subsistence by renewed depredations. On the other hand, society is protected from the return of one of the most mischievous classes of its members, who are almost compelled to live by plunder, and will seek to indemnify themselves for what they consider the harshness of their penal treatment by fresh acts of violence or of fraud, committed with greater recklessness or greater dexterity, instructed as they have been in the ways of crime by their associates in punishment.

"The prompt removal to the penal colonies of convicts under sentence of transportation not only prevents their return to crime at home, but is the means of saving the expense entailed by the imprisonment and trial of those who are recommitted, and who, under the old system, constituted a very numerous class.

"Another advantage attending the speedy embarkation of the great body of convicts for the penal colonies is the suppression of the hulks, which are to be broken up, according as the convicts confined in them complete their terms of imprisonment, the Secretary of State having determined that no new prisoners shall be sent thither. The suppression of the hulk system is a most important improvement in the penal system of this country. From the necessary association of the convicts, and the impossibility of maintaining a proper superintendence over them, the most serious contamination constantly took place; while the lightness of the convicts' labour, their good clothing, ample diet, and general comfort, not only divested the discipline, to a great extent, of a salutary deterring influence, but, from the publicity of these facts, necessarily suggested to beholders an unfavourable comparison between the condition of the convict and that of the honest labourer. Moreover, the constant exposure of the convict to the public gaze, in a place to which numerous visitors are daily resorting, and by which multitudes are passing and repassing, has an inevitable tendency to harden the convict more and more, and to deaden those moral perceptions upon which the penal discipline has its strongest hold.

"Nor should the important fact be overlooked, that the labour hitherto performed in the arsenals and dockyards by persons so obviously unfit, in a moral point of view, to be so employed, will henceforth be assigned to the honest labourer—a consideration which will have its just weight at a time when the general supply of labour is so redundant, and the difficulty of finding work for our unemployed population is so great. Besides, by the suppression of the hulks a considerable saving will in the end be effected in dispensing with the entire cost of the establishment, the salaries and emoluments of its numerous officers, together with the expense attending the fittings and repairs of the ships. Such are some of the incalculable advantages attending the suppression of the hulk system, and of the establishment of that system by which it is now about to be superseded.

"There is another advantage attending the new system for the disposal of prisoners under sentence of transportation. The convict ships now, in all cases, receive the prisoners on board at Woolwich; and by the regular periodical transmission of the convicts, in one body, and at one time, to one point of embarkation, the inconvenience, delay, and expense attending their reception in small numbers from the various prisons of the country are avoided, and the convict-vessel at once proceeds on her course, without calling at any of the ports in the channel to complete her complement by drafts of prisoners from the hulks which are there stationed; by these means her voyage was formerly much delayed, the expenses were increased, and the dangers of the navigation of the channel greatly augmented.

"Whilst referring to this part of the subject, the inspectors have much satisfaction in stating that great improvements have recently been made in the fittings of convict ships. Under the old system, four and sometimes five prisoners slept together in one sleeping-berth. The prison-deck was so dark, that work and instruction were impossible; whilst the most unrestrained and demoralizing intercourse, in darkness and utter idleness, took place during the whole voyage. The sleeping-berths being fixtures, it was impossible to clear the prison-deck for the purpose of cleansing it; in consequence of this, it was not unfrequently infested with vermin before the ship had got clear of the Channel. The Lords of the Admiralty, having had their attention called to these circumstances by the Secretary of State, have taken effectual measures to obviate these evils; and, under an excellent plan which they have recently adopted, the convict-ship is now fitted up in such a manner that, during the day, there are tables and seats for the convicts, in messes of eight together; and at night, each prisoner has a separate sleeping-berth. All the births are moveable, so that the prison-deck can with ease be thoroughly cleansed. Illuminators have been introduced on each side of the deck, extending the whole length of the ship, so that sufficient light is thrown into the prison-deck to enable the prisoners to read, write, or work. These new arrangements have the further advantage of securing the ship from being over crowded, as was formerly the case. Thus health, cleanliness, order, and discipline are greatly promoted, and suitable instruction and employments are rendered practicable.

"In furtherance of these improved arrangements, the inspectors are authorized by the Secretary of State to place a select library, composed of a few useful volumes, on board each convict-ship, for the use of the prisoners during the voyage; and these books, on the arrival of the ship at Van Diemen's Land, are transferred to the convict stations to form libraries for the convicts throughout the penal colonies. Elementary lessons in reading, writing, and arithmetic are also provided, so that schools can be organized, and instruction carried on during the voyage. It may be likewise mentioned, that arrangements are in progress for supplying the convicts with work on their passage.

"The inspectors have no desire to magnify the importance of the changes which have taken place in the constitution of the late General Penitentiary, nor are they disposed to overrate the value of those arrangements which have recently been made to carry out the new system of penal discipline which the Government has adopted. The measures, however, which have been taken for the regulation and disposal of offenders sentenced to transportation are fraught with such advantages that they cannot fail to form an important era in the progress of improvements in the treatment of convicts in this country. These advantages the inspectors propose briefly to recapitulate.

"Experience has proved that the practice of commuting sentences of transportation to periods of imprisonment in England, is unsound in principle, and injurious in its effects; that the sentence of the law is thereby immeasurably impaired; and that the uncertainty which attends its execution forms one of those chances of escape from punishment on which offenders invariably calculate. The convict, too, on his liberation, unable to obtain, or unfitted to pursue, an honest employment, returns too often into society only to pollute its morals and disturb its peace.

"The failure of the discipline enforced at the late Penitentiary for the purposes of correction or reform, and the unhealthy effects of confinement for long periods in that prison, rendered its continuance as a Penitentiary, no longer desirable. The hulks notoriously vitiated the less criminal, and hardened the confirmed offender; and if the measures now under review had only effected the abolition of those establishments, the advantages resulting to society would be of no ordinary magnitude.

"Large numbers of convicts are no longer detained for lengthened periods; but vessels are despatched to the penal settlements at all seasons of the year, and thus the punishment of the offender closely follows on his sentence. The convict ship, a hitherto fitted, has afforded the utmost temptation for the commission of the grossest crimes; but, by improved arrangements, great facilities are afforded for the good order, industry, and instruction of the prisoners on their passage, and the revolting practice of placing five male convicts together in one birth at night has been superseded by a plan by which each man has a separate sleeping-place. By the adoption of other measures, transportation has not only been rendered more efficacious by the certainty of its infliction, but its penalties have been graduated and apportioned to offenders according to their several degrees of guilt. By the examination and selection of the convicts at Millbank, the better disposed are sent to a prison the most favourable to their reformation; the criminal boy is subjected to an imprisonment the best adapted to his moral welfare; and by the formation of the Millbank Juvenile Ward, youth of more advanced years—offenders for whom no due provision has hitherto been made—are admitted to a participation in the benefits of a reformatory discipline.

"These improvements in the convict system have been effected during the last twelve months; and the inspectors feel justified in stating that a reform involving benefits more unquestionable, more important as respects the moral, religious, and physical condition of the convict, more interesting to humanity, or more advantageous to the community at large, has seldom been accomplished in so short a period."

The remainder of the report is occupied with details respecting the present state of the buildings, the discipline, the religious and moral instruction, and general education, pursued in the prison; the employment, state of health, diet of the prisoners, and the conduct of the officers. Tables of the number of prisoners, of the deaths and their causes, of the pardons granted, and of the manufactory accounts are added, but these need no particular comment. The present inspectors are Mr. Crawford, Rev. Whitworth Russell, and Mr. Perry.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

TERM begins to-day. We find in one of the daily papers the following account of the state of the business in the common law courts:—

Hilary Term begins on Saturday, and by the lists of the Court of Queen's Bench and the Exchequer, it appears that the rules for new trials which remained undetermined at the end of the sittings after Michaelmas term last, number in the first-mentioned court 120. The first rule was moved so long ago as Michaelmas Term, 1842. In Michaelmas Term following there were 3, which still remain undecided. In Hilary Term last 4; in Easter Term last 40, and 4 which were tried during the same term; in Trinity Term last 3, and a similar number tried in that term; in Michaelmas Term 51, and two others tried in the term. There are 9 rules standing for the judgment of the Court, the first of which, as stated, was moved in Michaelmas Term, 1842, and the last in Hilary Term, 1844. In the Court of Exchequer there are two rules for judgment, one moved in Easter Term, and the other in Trinity Term last, and, in addition, one rule for argument, moved in Hilary Term last. There are 60 rules moved in the last term, and two granted after the fourth day of the same term. The special paper exhibits one for judgment, and 11 for argument. The demurrer for judgment was heard in November last, in the case of Baron v. Denman, esq. in which an important question was raised, respecting the capture of a slave vessel by Captain Denman, and on which two other rules are pending. In the peremptory paper there are 12 rules; the earliest day of the first rule nisi was in June, and the latest in November last. The peremptory paper is to be called on the first day of the term after the motions, and to be proceeded with the next day, if necessary, before the motions.

To these we may add some further particulars. The arrears in the Common Pleas are 74, including 3 registration appeals for judgment. The total number of arrears in the three courts is 283. In the Court of Common Pleas 18 of the rules were moved in Michaelmas Term last for new trials.

A correspondent of the Times supplies the following information relative to the Masters' offices:—

Sir,—A correspondent of yours, shortly before the vacation, inquired through your journal whether the returns required by the Chancery Regulation Act were annually made as directed.

They are made, but they are so extremely bulky that no one ever looks at them; they would, I believe, now fill an ordinary-sized warehouse.

The only mode of getting any practical benefit from these returns is by moving in the House of Commons that an abstract of them be laid before the House and printed. In 1840 Mr. Blake moved for and obtained such an abstract, of which great use was made by Mr. Pemberton in his celebrated speech on the Court of Chancery, to which, perhaps, we in a great measure owe the subsequent amendments in the constitution of some of the offices.

May I be permitted to take this opportunity of correcting a misapprehension that seems to prevail in regard to the nomination of the Masters? Lord Brougham, in moving the clause giving the Crown the appointment by patent, said, in the presence of the then Prime Minister, "The effect of the difference will be, that although the patronage will still substantially be with the Chancellor" (as it is of the puisne judges), "the vesting it in the Crown will prevent him from proposing persons for these judicial functions who are unqualified to perform them, and will prevent any person from being wantonly rejected who ought to be proposed."—Hansard, vol. xvii. 3rd series, p. 71.

If the succeeding Chancellors have given up the patronage to the Prime Minister, it must, I presume, have been in ignorance of this fact.

I am your very obedient servant,

A. Watcher of the Court.

We shall continue the plan we have been enabled so successfully to commence, of presenting to our readers verbatim reports of all the written judgments.

THE LATE IMPORTANT SLAVERY DECISION IN THE UNITED STATES.

A Liverpool correspondent's summary of American intelligence by the last steamer briefly alluded to a decision in Boston, that a slave can only serve on board an United States national vessel while that vessel is within the slave limits of the country, and that the moment the vessel passes without those limits he can claim his discharge. The particulars of the case upon which the above decision was founded we annex.—Times.

(From the Boston Post.)

Robert T. Lucas, a coloured person, about 40 years of age, was brought before Chief Justice Shaw on Friday last by a writ of habeas corpus, under the following facts:—In 1841, by written consent of the Secretary of the Navy, M. Upshur, Lucas was received and entered as a landsman on board the United States' frigate United States, in Norfolk, Virginia. At the time he was held to service as a slave by Mr. Edward Fitzgerald, purser on board the frigate, and was entered by his consent, and also by the voluntary act of Lucas himself.

It was proved that he was entered on the muster-roll, and performed service as others did in that class, and was exclusively under the control of the commander of the frigate as a component part of the crew, and was not under the control of Mr. Fitzgerald, or in any manner subject to him, except the claim of Mr. Fitzgerald for his wages. The frigate sailed on a cruise to the Pacific, and was thence ordered to the port of Boston by the commanding officer of the squadron, where she arrived on the 3rd of October. The writ of habeas corpus was served upon Mr. Fitzgerald on board the frigate, without the knowledge or authority of Lucas. This case presented two points which have not not been decided by the Supreme Court of this state—first, as to the claim of the commander of the frigate to the services of the party, as a part of the crew of the vessel; and, second, whether his having involuntarily been brought within this jurisdiction, without the consent of the master, who was about to return to his domicile in Virginia, the Court here could interfere to discharge him from the claim of service which was valid in Virginia. To test this question as connected with the United States' service, Captain Stribling, the commander of the frigate United States, presented his claim under the shipment, and Mr. Fitzgerald, in his answer, set forth all the facts in the case, as to the relation of the party to himself. In giving his opinion, the Chief Justice said, that these gentlemen had acted honourably in the transaction, and with entire frankness disclosed all the facts in the case; Mr. Fitzgerald had also fully assented to the suggestion of his counsel before he undertook the case, that, whatever the decision of the court might be, Lucas should be left free to act his own wishes, either to return to Virginia or to remain, if Captain Stribling had no claim to retain him on board his ship.

Sewell and Merrill appeared for the discharge, and Hallett, for the respondent.

It was argued that the entry on board the vessel in Norfolk was valid by the lex loci, the laws of Virginia, and that the going out of the limits of that State, and an involuntary entering into this jurisdiction, did not invalidate that contract, and it must be held as binding here as in Virginia; and secondly, that if an agreement to enter on board the ship as one of the crew was not originally valid, this case was to be regarded as a case of involuntary and necessary landing in and passing through Massachusetts on the return of the master to his domicile, and therefore this Court could not interfere, under the constitution of the United States, unless the point, which had not yet been decided, was to be ruled so as to confine the rights of the master exclusively to the case of a fugitive from service. In all the cases decided in this state, the Court had only gone to the extent of decreeing a discharge where the party was voluntarily brought into this state by the act of the person claiming his service in another state; and in the leading case on this point, in the 18th of Pickering, in the matter of the slave Avis, the Court had expressly excluded from that decision the case of a slave involuntarily brought here, or landing from a vessel necessarily entering our ports, or driven in by stress of weather.

Chief Justice Shaw first made inquiry of the party apart, whether the process was instituted at his request, and ascertained that it was not, but that as it had gone so far, he now desired that it should proceed. This was deemed a sufficient authority for the parties who took out the habeas corpus to act for him. Lucas also desired to know what would be the effect of his discharge here, if he returned to Virginia? but the Chief Justice said he could not advise him on that point, in case he was not released by the master.

In giving his opinion, the Chief Justice regarded the first point, as to the claim of Captain Stribling, as highly important, and not without great difficulties in coming to a decision. He did not agree with the counsel for the discharge, that the United States could not contract for the services of a slave, and held that Lucas was lawfully entered and employed as a landsman on board the frigate in Norfolk; but this right could only extend to the territorial limits of slavery, and was at an end whenever the service to be performed took the slave out of these limits. Hence, though the service was valid in Virginia, and would have continued had the vessel returned to a port in that state, it terminated on entering a state where slavery did not exist. He also held that there was not an enlistment valid in law, because the slave had no power to contract for himself, nor had the master any power to contract for him to perform any service beyond the territorial limits of a slave state, and therefore it differed from the contract of a master for the services of his apprentice, nor was it competent for the United States to ship slaves in the naval service. It was also held that if a slave was employed on board a coasting vessel, and the vessel touched at a port in this state, the party would be discharged from service. On this point it was ruled that Lucas was not subject to the control of the commander of the frigate.

On the second point it was held that this was not a case of the necessary transit of a slave through this state; that by shipping him on board a vessel going out of Virginia, the master took the risk of her entering or being ordered into a free port, and therefore it could not be said that this was an involuntary coming into this state; but though beyond the control, and against the consent of the master, it was a consequence of his voluntary act in placing the party in such a service. Whether if a vessel conveying slaves from one slave state to another should be cast away on the coast of Massachusetts the slaves would thereby be free, no opinion was given; but the consent of the master that the slave should go as a passenger, or otherwise, in a vessel liable to land him in Massachusetts, under any circumstances, would be held as a voluntary bringing him into this jurisdiction, and he would be free. Lucas was accordingly discharged from custody, and being of full age, was left to return to Virginia or remain, as he might elect.

This decision greatly enlarges all the previous decisions in similar cases, and may be regarded as limiting the claim of the master strictly to the case of a fugitive. The writ in this case was issued by the Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, in the absence of all the judges of the Supreme Court, and a question left open by the statute arose as to the custody of the party by the sheriff, the writ being returnable at Boston. The sheriff applied to Chief Justice Wells as to the custody, who decided that he had no power to pass any order upon it. The officer accordingly kept the party in his personal custody (having no authority to commit him, or to receive bail for his appearance) until the Chief Justice returned to the city. The counsel for the discharge contended that they had a right of access to the party, but the Chief Justice instructed the officer that it was his duty to keep him apart.

The whole proceeding was conducted in as quiet a manner as the hearing of any ordinary case before our Courts, and the object of the respondents and their counsel was solely to have the law of the case fairly settled by the proper tribunals.

The Vacant Solicitorship of Excise.—A correspondent informs us, upon good authority, that the vacancy in the law department of the Excise, occasioned by the death of Philip Wynell Mayow, Esq. will be filled up by the appointment of J. Bateman, Esq. the present assistant solicitor, a doctor of civil law, and the author of several voluminous works upon the excise law. Dr. Bateman is next in seniority to the late Mr. Mayow, and rendered essential assistance to the law officers of the Crown in the recent heavy prosecutions for the frauds committed upon the customs, in connection with the legal officers of that department of her Majesty's revenue. The reduced salary of the next chief solicitor of excise will not exceed 1000*l*. per annum, in accordance with a Treasury order, issued at the time the late Mr. Mayow gave up the fees he was entitled to under his patent in consideration of receiving a fixed yearly income.

MIDDLESEX SESSIONS, January 7th.

ALLOWANCE OF BARRISTERS' BRIEFS.

Mr. Wilde was anxious to put a question to the Court, in which not only were the members of the bar, but the public, concerned. His lordship, no doubt, was aware that at the Central Criminal Court there was a certain class of cases in which there was an allowance made for the briefs of counsel. What he was anxious to ascertain was, whether a similar allowance would be made at that court?

The Assistant Judge said he could not allow any charge for briefs, as costs, to be paid out of the county purse. If that were done, in his present view of the case, there would be a violation of the principle upon which that court had been reconstructed, that principle being a diminution in the expense to the county for criminal prosecutions. It was, however, a subject upon which there must clearly be some understanding come to. It was apparent now that a very large proportion of the business which used to be sent to the Central Criminal Court would come to that court. He was glad of it, even though it would entail much labour upon himself. But he should be most ready to perform it, and the more so because the more cases he had to try, the greater would be the saving to the county. For himself, he was bound to say—glad as he should be to see some distinct understanding upon the subject arrived at—that he could not, single-handed—entertaining, as he did, the desire to curtail the costs to the county for criminal prosecutions—make any order in reference to it. If the magistrates should think it right to make a rule or regulation in respect to it, then he would give his attention to the matter.

The cases which came on for trial did not present any feature of public interest.

PRIVILEGE FROM ARREST.—LAWRENCE v. CONNOP.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

SIR,—It was not my intention to have noticed the communications which have appeared in The Times on this subject, dated from Windsor, had not the statements contained inaccuracies as to certain facts, which I deem it incumbent on me to correct, and which have evidently arisen from the circumstance of your correspondent having no personal knowledge of what has transpired.

It was not the sheriff of Berks, but myself, as the plaintiff's attorney, who procured the permission of the Lord Steward, as chief officer of the Board of Green Cloth, to execute the warrant under which the capture was effected within the precincts of the palace. Such permission was promptly granted, on a representation of the circumstances of the case.

The sheriff was not indemnified in respect of his execution of the writ.

The discussion before Baron Rolfe did not last the whole day, but was concluded within two hours.

I am, Sir, yours very obediently,

4, Old Jewry. T. B. HUDSON.

THE CHANCERY COURT OF LANCASHIRE.

(Before Mr. Vice-Chancellor HORACE TWISS.)

Tuesday, Jan. 7.

The new Vice-Chancellor of the county, Mr. H. Twiss, a gentleman whose name has long been familiar to our literary readers, to the Chancery Bar, and recently as the distinguished writer of the life of Lord Eldon, sat as Vice-Chancellor of the duchy for the first time since his appointment to the office, in the spacious court-house, Preston. The attendance of the Bar, considering that the business was confined to ordinary motions, was tolerably large. We noticed Mr. T. Smith, Mr. Hare, Mr. Grimshaw, Mr. Rasch, Mr. Addison (the Recorder of Preston), Mr. Segar (the Recorder of Wigan), Mr. Blundell, Mr. Knowles, and Mr. Little. Amongst the officers of the court present were Mr. William Shaw, the registrar, and Messrs. Richard Palmer, J. Wilson, W. Hopkins, C. B. Walker, and J. B. Dickson, as clerks in Chancery.

The Vice-Chancellor took his seat at ten o'clock, and proceeded to hear motions, which were made by Mr. Grimshaw, Mr. Knowles, Mr. Segar, and Mr. Little. These, however, possessed no public interest, relating, as they did, to the confirmation of proceedings conducted by the registrar of the court, to the appointment of guardians to infant wards, to the disposition of property, &c. which confirmations and motions were disposed of by his Honour upon the usual affidavits. At the conclusion the Vice-Chancellor inquired if the Bar had any other motions to make, and being answered in the negative the Court was adjourned. It did not appear that the adjournment was made to any specific time, but we understand that the Vice-Chancellor is to sit in Liverpool at every assizes for the transaction of Chancery business, and at Preston on special occasions to be fixed by himself, whenever necessity requires it. It is reported that preliminaries have been entered into for the purpose of extending the usefulness of this court throughout the county. Hitherto its practice has been but imperfectly understood by the public. As confined to the county of Lancaster it possesses equal powers to the high Court of Chancery of England, and the expense to suitors is not greater, if so great, as in the higher court. In the event of any reduction in the expenses of this court, with a Vice-Chancellor of the legal acquirements of Mr. Horace Twiss, we look forward to a speedy increase to its practice.—Liverpool Courier.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Thomas Simpson, of Yarm, in the county of Norfolk, gent., James Pashley Burbeary, of Sheffield, in the county of York, gent., and Charles Chalk, of Brighton, in the county of Sussex, gent., to be Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

The Lord Chancellor and Lady Lyndhurst have, during the last week, received a succession of guests at Torville-park, Bucks. The noble and learned lord is expected in town on Wednesday next.

The Right Hon. John Nicholl, M.P. returns to town next week, from his seat in Wales.

NEW RULES AND ORDERS IN BANKRUPTCY.—The new rules and orders in bankruptcy, under the Act of last session, to amend the stat. of 5th and 6th Vict. c. 146, relating to insolvent debtors, have recently been promulgated by the Commissioners, having been approved by the Lord Chancellor. There are 16 rules and orders in the list, with a table of fees annexed. According to the present practice, the costs out of pocket to complete a case in the Court of Bankruptcy amounts to about 5*l.* By one of the new rules, an estate paper, as it is termed, is now required, containing a full disclosure of all the property an insolvent holds, or which has been placed in the hands of any other person for his benefit; and of course, in the event of a concealment, all advantage is denied, and the party liable to punishment. The following is a searching provision :—"That every petitioner shall, immediately after an official assignee shall have been appointed to his estate, deliver over to the official assignee so appointed, all moneys, bills, notes, and securities in his possession or power, together with all books of account, papers, and writings relating to his estate and effects." By another rule, notice is to be given before a prisoner is discharged from custody, many having abused the provision, to escape from their creditors; and, to adopt the language of one of the Commissioners, made the Court a refuge for their dishonesty. Among the fees appears the following, for the use of the Court :—"For every sitting held in the matter of any petition, by way of charge for the use of the Court, 5s. 11d." These rules are now being put into operation, and uniformity of practice is to be expected. It is generally admitted that the law of debtor and creditor (there being at the present moment four different systems at work in England) requires the immediate consideration of the Government to form it into shape and being.—Times.

The Hon. James Stuart Wortley, Queen's Counsel, has been appointed Standing Counsel to the Bank of England, vacant by the elevation of Mr. Erle to the Bench.

NEWSPAPERS FOR GERMANY.—The following order has just been issued, by command of the Earl of Lonsdale, the Postmaster-General :—"Notice to the public.—General Post-office, January, 1845.—As there is reason to believe that, notwithstanding the notices which have already been issued, some misapprehension exists with respect to the transmission of letters, and especially newspapers, addressed to Germany, the Postmaster-General considers it necessary to call particular attention to the fact, that under existing regulations all letters and newspapers directed to any part of Germany (the Austrian dominions excepted) are forwarded in the mail to Hamburgh, unless specially marked vid Holland, vid Belgium, or vid France.

SIR WILLIAM CASEMENT, K.C.B. DECEASED.—LIMITED ADMINISTRATION, AN ATTESTATION CASE, DEC. 1844.—A limited grant of administration of the effects of the deceased, has lately issued from the Perogative Court of Canterbury. The deceased died at Cossipore on the 16th of April, 1844, having a very short time before his death made his will; which from informality in the execution, was not admitted to probate in the Supreme Court of Calcutta. The following is a careful summary of all the essential facts :—The deceased, after reading over his will, signed it in the presence of three persons, Dr. Nicholson, Mr. Hawkins, and Mr. Hamilton. Dr. Nicholson then took it to an apartment adjoining with folding doors open, and placed the will on a table a few yards from the couch whereon deceased was lying, but within view of deceased (except that the sight was partially intercepted by an open silk screen); the table was well lighted, and there Dr. Nicholson subscribed his name at the foot of the attestation. Hawkins then, thinking it better that it should be attested also by the other medical attendant, Dr. Garden, who came in shortly after the will had been signed, Hawkins asked him (Dr Garden), in the presence of Dr. Nicholson, the subscribing witness, also to subscribe to it. Dr. Garden declined, unless the testator acknowledged his signature thereto in his presence, whereupon Hawkins, with Drs. Garden and Nicholson, approached deceased, and produced the will. Hawkins stated to deceased that two witnesses being necessary, Dr. Garden was ready to become the other. The deceased looked at his will, and in the presence of Dr. Nicholson and Dr. Garden, both present at the same time, clearly and distinctly acknowledged the signature to be his, and the will to be his will. Dr. Garden and Dr. Nicholson immediately went to the table in the adjoining room, and Dr. Nicholson, having already signed, thought it unnecessary to write his name again, but acknowledged his signature to Dr. Garden and to Mr. Hawkins;

Dr. Gordon then subscribed the will in the presence of Dr. Nicholson and of Hawkins. Sir L. Peel, C.J. observed: "This case is one of great importance, as well on account of the large property, the succession to which is in dispute, as that it involves a question upon the execution of a will, which calls for a decision to govern future cases. It is painful to think that the intended will of a useful and much-valued member of the community, who had passed a long life honourably in the service of his country, should be defeated by a mere formal error. When a case of this nature and apparent hardship occurs, the blame is usually thrown upon the law, and its general working is lost sight of in the contemplation of a particular grievance which it may have occasioned. A testamentary disposition, however, cannot safely be unaccompanied by some checks on fraud, and the provisions by which these checks are maintained, will occasionally, through ignorance or carelessness, be violated."—Historical Register.

The Limitation Act, Ireland.—The past week at three of our public departments—namely, the Ecclesiastical Commission, the Stamp, and the Chancery Writ Offices, have (notwithstanding the holidays) been one of unusual bustle and activity, unequalled, perhaps, of late, except by what occurred during the last week of November at the railway department of the Board of Trade of London. This has arisen in consequence of the late Limitation (Church Property) Act making it incumbent on all lay patrons of advowsons in Ireland to assert their rights thereto on or before the 1st of January, 1845. We understand that the number of suits of this nature which will be in progress may occupy the Court of Common Pleas for some years, one legal firm on the north side of the city, long engaged in this peculiar branch of the profession, having alone instituted upwards of 100 suits for several lay patrons, independently of those they had already commenced on behalf of the Irish Society of London as to the advowsons on their estates in Ulster. The stamp department has reaped a golden harvest by these proceedings, upwards of 1,000*l.* duty having been paid in England and Ireland, independently of that upon the various law proceedings.—Londonderry Sentinel.

The Arbitration System.—The Moniteur of Tuesday publishes a Royal ordinance, instituting at Paris a council of prud'hommes, composed of 15 members and 10 substitutes, elected from among the manufacturers, foremen, or licensed operatives, engaged in all branches of the metallic industry. The latter are divided into five categories, which are each to elect two, three, or four prud'hommes, according to the importance of their respective branches of industry. The duty of that council will be to terminate by conciliatory means, without any judiciary forms or expense to the parties, the differences which daily arise between the manufacturers and the workmen they employ, the foremen, and the operatives and apprentices. Any appeal from their decisions is to be tried by the Tribunal of Commerce. Similar councils already exist in 66 cities and towns of France, where they have exercised the most beneficial influence. From 1830 to 1839, the number of affairs submitted to their appreciation was 135,730; of these, 128,319 were conciliated, and 3,573 abandoned by the parties. The councils pronounced 3,838 judgments, against which only 155 appeals were made.

Valuable Appointment.—The lucrative office of registrar of deeds for the North Riding of the county of York has become vacant by the death of Mr. Richard W. Christopher Pierse, of Littlethorpe, near Ripon, who expired at his residence on Friday week, having held the office of registrar of the North Riding of York for the last 15 years. The last election commenced on the 26th of May, 1829, and continued four days, creating great interest and excitement in the riding, and at the close of the poll, the numbers were—for Mr. Pierse, 646; Mr. Walton, 470. The right of voting is in persons having an estate of freehold in the riding of the annual value of 100*l.* The only candidates who have at present come forward are Mr. Richard W. Pierse, eldest son of the late registrar, and Mr. Charles Smith, of Plainville, near York. A contested election for this valuable appointment costs a very large sum of money, and, if entered upon in earnest, will sacrifice to the successful candidate the entire receipts of the office for many years.—Globe.

Landlord and Tenant Commission.—The Earl of Devon arrives in Dublin on the 16th. There are 30 clerks employed at the Castle in preparing for the Land Commission Report. The registrar of the Court of Chancery has issued circulars to the solicitors practising therein, and concerned in the management or receivership of properties under the court, to make a return thereof, and of the locality, extent, and amount, for the information of the Landlord and Tenant Commissioners.

Expulsion from the Bar.—It will no doubt be recollected that a few months back complaints were made against certain unprofessional practices of some members of the bar, and that eventually the subject of complaint was taken up by two or three of the inns of court. It now appears that the complaint against a barrister of the Hon. Society of Gray's Inn has been established according to the judgment of the benchers of that society, and they have not, we are informed, shrunk from performing the painful duty of expulsion—from which decision the party has appealed to the judges. A charge was also made against a member of the Hon. Society of Lincoln's Inn for circulating a table of fees, and offering a commission for business. The benchers, having instituted an inquiry into the circumstances, do not find the complaint established.—Times.

Will of the Duke of Grafton.—The will of the Most Noble George Henry Duke of Grafton, K.G. dated December 6, 1843, has been proved by Lord Colborne and Lord Fitzroy, the brother of the deceased; a power being reserved to Sir George Francis Seymour, G.C.B. the nephew, the other executor, to prove hereafter. The personal property was sworn under 90,000*l.* The will is of some length. The bulk of his property is bequeathed chiefly among his children, legacies of 500*l.* each to his intimate friends, and bequests to all his servants, the amount to each regulated according to the length of service. His Grace has added three codicils, each expressly made to increase the bequest given by the will to his daughter, Lady Georgiana Laura Fitzroy.—Historical Register.

Municipal Expenditure of Boroughs.—From a recently published Parliamentary return, we find the receipts and expenditure of the larger boroughs included therein (Manchester not being named in the return), from the 1st Sept. 1842, to 31st Aug. 1843, as follows, omitting shillings and pence:—

	Receipts.	Expenditure.
Bath	£22,040	£19,981
Birmingham	41,613	2.,716
Bristol	45,899	49,176*
Exeter	27,427	26,391
Hull	32,117	25,661
Leeds	24,583	22,465
Liverpool	408,337	349,606
Newcastle-on-Tyne	55,379	59,995*
Norwich	18,931	17,210
Nottingham	12,177	11,739
Plymouth	17,420	2 ,508*

It will be seen that the disbursements of Bristol, Newcastle, and Plymouth (all seaports), have exceeded their receipts. To these we add the smaller boroughs in this county:—

Bolton	2,871	7,508*
Clitheroe	180	105
Lancaster	1,712	1,099
Preston	8,250	10,619*
Wigan	2,724	3,082*

In Bolton, there is shewn a balance due to the treasurer of 4,637*l.*; in Preston, one of 2,369*l.*; in Wigan, one of 358*l.*—Manchester Guardian.

INCOME TAX RETURNS.

Property tax, or tax upon incomes arising from real and funded property, as collected for the year ending April 5, 1843.

	Income.		Tax.
Schedule A.
Land, tenements, &c. England	£73,728,429	..	2,150,412

Annual certificates cost the Profession about	£92,000
Admission tax, about	9,500
Article tax, about	54,000
Total tax on Solicitors, per annum	£155,500

The injustice of an Income-tax, in addition to the above, is very striking.

There are no returns yet completed for Scotland, shewing separately the amount produced under each schedule; but the gross produce of the Property-tax in Scotland was 394,394*l.* In the above tables we have divided this amount among the five schedules, following the proportions of the English returns, but of course the items for Scotland, as thus given, must be regarded but as an approximation to the correct sums. Those for England only are strictly exact. The complete returns for England and Scotland for the year ending April 1844, have been withheld by Government.

Assuming the incomes under 150*l.* to be one-fourth the amount of incomes exceeding 150*l.* (as in 1801), it follows that the total income of Great Britain from all sources is 250,000,000*l.* In 1801 the assessment for England was as follows:—

" under	18,105,240
Total	£74,676,894

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 11, 1845.

TO OUR READERS.

The heavy business of the year being about to begin, we have endeavoured, by omitting much correspondence, and curtailing leading articles, to bring up the arrears so as to commence the Term with unincumbered columns.

All the announced improvements are now in operation, and we trust will meet with the approval of the Profession. We shall be obliged by suggestions from the experienced of any further practical amendments or additions.

MR. FARREN'S CASE.

OUR readers will see, by a paragraph extracted from one of the daily papers, for we have received no direct information on the subject, that the Benchers of Lincoln's Inn, having taken into consideration the Table of Fees which appeared in our columns, purporting to be subscribed by, and emanate from, Mr. GEORGE FARREN, Chancery Barrister, and a letter that accompanied it, have decided that the charge is not established.

While the inquiry was pending we refrained from making any comment upon it. Now that it is concluded, we have a duty to perform, both to Mr. FARREN and to ourselves, from the discharge of which we shall not shrink.

The principle that will guide us will be to do to him that which in such case we should expect and desire that he should do to us. But it is too serious a matter to be treated hastily. Having deliberated upon the course which justice and gentlemanly feeling should dictate, we shall next week act accordingly without hesitation or reserve. Throughout we have had—we could have had—no other motive than a desire faithfully to discharge a very painful duty to the Profession, of whose honour and interest the members have been pleased to constitute the LAW TIMES the public guardian. Whatever we have done has been in single-minded furtherance of that end.

ADVERTISING ATTORNEYS.

THE following disgraceful advertisement appears in The Wesleyan and Christian Record, of Dec. 12, 1841:—

TO DEBTORS AND CREDITORS.

A SOLICITOR, experienced in the Law of Debtor and Creditor, begs to inform Debtors who are unable to meet their engagements with Creditors, that he is enabled, under Lord Brougham's recent Act, not only to obtain the PROTECTION of the PERSON from ARREST, without Advertising or Gazetting, but also procure an order from the Court of Bankruptcy (with the concurrence of one-third of the creditors), to CARRY OUT any PROPOSAL for FUTURE PAYMENT or COMPROMISE of DEBTS, which they may have been unable to effect, through the opposition of some particular creditor. Mr. [illegible]INSLAY, Solicitor, 55, Basinghall-street.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

MANY of the members have submitted to us the propriety of publishing, during the ensuing session of Parliament, the new Statutes in numbers similar to those of the Reports, and stamped for transmission by post, so that they may be in the hands of the Profession as speedily as possible after their appearance.

We purpose, therefore, to take the opinion of the members upon the suggestion, and for this purpose the prospectus will be added to the circular announced last week, and which is delayed, that the necessary form may be inclosed in the same envelope.

As the statutes cost little more than the printing and paper, they can be supplied at a less price than the Reports. They will not, therefore, exceed 9d. per number of 32 page , and, if they should be largely taken, they may be supplied at even a lesser price; for our readers are probably aware that the cost of printing per copy depends upon the number of impressions, the expense of 50 copies being very nearly as great as that of 500. The whole cost of the statutes of the session would thus probably vary from eight to twelve shillings. We propose to add very much to their utility by subjoining useful notes upon the most important statutes, a table of repealed statutes, and an index much more copious than that appended to the other editions: in this, as in all the works of the Verulam Society, consulting the practical wants of the Profession.

The following members have been added since our last:—

LECTURES ON MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE.

BY ALFRED S. TAYLOR.

Delivered at Guy's Hospital, 1841.

LECTURE VIII.

WE have now to speak of poisoning by the alkalies and their salts; and first, of potash, soda, and their carbonates.

The symptoms produced by these substances, when taken in strong doses, are so similar, that one description will serve for all. It must be observed that cases of alkaline poisoning are extremely rare, and have been, I believe, hitherto, the result of accident. The patient experiences during the act of swallowing an acrid, caustic taste, from the alkaline liquid excoriating the mucous membrane. There is a sensation of burning heat extending down the œsophagus to the epigastrium. Vomiting is not always observed; but when it does occur, the vomited matters are sometimes mixed with blood of a dark brown colour, and detached portions of membrane, this effect depending on the degree of causticity of the liquid swallowed. The surface is cold and clammy; there is diarrhœa, with severe pain in the abdomen resembling colic. The pulse is quick and feeble. In the course of a short time, the lips, tongue, and fauces become swollen, soft, and red. On a post mortem examination there will be strong marks of the local action of the poison on the mucous membrane of the mouth, fauces, and œsophagus. It has been found softened, detached in pieces of a deep chocolate colour, sometimes almost black. The same appearance has been met with in the mucous membrane of the larynx and trachea. The stomach has had its mucous surface eroded in patches, and there has been partial inflammation. The earliest fatal case which I have found reported is that of a boy who died in twelve hours, after swallowing three ounces of a strong solution of carbonate of potash. In another case, which occurred at Yarmouth, in 1835, a child, three years old, took a small quantity of pearl-ash (which had deliquesced) and died in twenty-four hours. Death was caused in this instance by the inflammation induced in the larynx causing an obstruction to the process of respiration. In this respect the caustic alkalies may destroy life like the mineral acids, but death may be a slow result of the poison.

Thus, in an instance which was communicated to me:—A lady swallowed, by mistake, one ounce and a half of the common solution of potash of the shops, which contains but very little caustic alkali. She recovered from the first symptoms of irritation, but died seven weeks afterwards from pure exhaustion, becoming greatly emaciated before her death. Orfila refers to two cases of poisoning by carbonate of potash, in each of which half an ounce of that substance was taken by mistake for aperient salts. The patients, two young men, recovered from the first effects, but ultimately died, the one three months, and the other four months after the poison had been taken. The secondary fatal effects appear to be due to diarrhœa, great irritability of the stomach, loss of the functions of that organ from the destruction of the lining membrane, and structure of the œsophagus, any of which causes may prove fatal at almost any period. The quantity of any of these alkaline poisons required to destroy life is unknown.

The treatment should consist of water containing acetic acid or citric acid dissolved, lemon juice, or the juice of oranges. Demulcent drinks, as milk, gruel, or barleywater, will also be found serviceable. Oil, also, has been found useful.

The three caustic alkalies, potash, soda, and ammonia, are known from the solutions of the alkaline earths by the fact that they are not precipitated by solution of carbonate of potash. They all three possess a powerful alkaline reaction on test-paper, which in the case of ammonia is easily dissipated by heat. Ammonia is easily known from potash and soda by its odour and volatility. If the solution in water be very dilute, the odour may be scarcely perceptible. The alkali may then be discovered (provided we have first assured ourselves, by evaporating a portion of the liquid, that potash and soda are absent) by adding to the solution a mixture of arsenious acid and nitrate of silver. The well-known yellow precipitate of arsenite of silver will be instantly produced. In addition to these characters ammonia re-dissolves the brown oxide of silver, which it precipitates from the nitrate, while potash and soda do not. The sesquicarbonate of ammonia may be known from other salts by its alkaline reaction, its odour, and its entire volatility as a solid from pure ammonia. Caustic potash and soda are best known from their respective carbonates by giving a brown precipitate with a solution of nitrate of silver. The carbonates, on the other hand, yield a whitish yellow precipitate. Caustic potash is known from caustic soda by the following characters:—1. Its solution is precipitated of a canary-yellow colour, by bichloride of platina; 2. It is precipitated in granular white crystals, by the addition of an excess of a strong solution of tartaric acid. Caustic soda is not precipitated by either of these tests, which will serve equally to distinguish the salts of potash from those of soda; 3. If we neutralize the two alkalies by dilute nitric acid, and crystallize the liquid on a slip of glass, should the alkali be potash, the crystals will be in the form of long fluted prisms; if soda, of rhomboic plates; 4. A fine platina wire may be dipped into the alkaline liquid, and then dried by holding it above the flame of a spirit-lamp. In this way a thin film of solid alkali is obtained on the wire. On introducing this into the colourless part of the flame, if it be potash, the flame will acquire a lilac colour; if soda, a rich yellow colour. This test applies to the salts of the alkalies, but care must be taken that the platina wire is perfectly clean. The carbonates of potash are known from those of soda by the above tests. The carbonate is known from the bicarbonate of either alkali, by the fact that the former yields immediately a white precipitate, with a solution of sulphate of magnesia, while the latter is unaffected by that test.

If the poison be mixed with liquids containing organic matter, such liquids will possess an alkaline re-action. If the alkali be ammonia, this will be announced by the odour, and it may then be obtained by distillation, with or without the addition of a small quantity of sulphuric acid. If the alkali be in small proportion, this can afford no evidence of poisoning, since many animal fluids contain the alkali, and in those which do not contain it, it is generated either by spontaneous decomposition, or sometimes even by the heat required for distillation. Should the alkali be in large quantity, this is no evidence of poisoning by it, unless we at the same time discover obvious marks of its local action on the mouth, fauces, œsophagus, and stomach. If the organic liquid be highly alkaline, but give out no odour of ammonia, either by itself or on distilling a portion with sulphuric acid, the alkali may be either potash or soda, or their carbonates. The latter would be known by the liquid effervescing on adding a portion to an acid. The organic liquid may be evaporated to dryness, then heated to char the animal and vegetable matter, and the alkali will be recovered from it in the state of carbonate by digesting the residuary ash in distilled water. It has been also recommended to neutralize by muriatic acid, to evaporate, incinerate, and procure the alkali for analysis in the state of chloride. Traces of these alkalies furnish no evidence, since all the animal liquids and membranes yield soda, and many of them potash. In no case will the discovery of the alkalies be any proof of poisoning, unless the marks of their action be apparent in the fauces and stomach.

There are certain salts of potash to which poisonous effects have been attributed. It will be necessary, therefore, to consider these briefly. Iodide of potassium has been extensively used as a medicinal preparation; but it appears to have given rise in some instances to alarming symptoms, even when exhibited in small doses, and death has been said to follow its use. A gentleman was ordered by his physician to take three grains of iodide in a draught of peppermint water three times a day. After the third dose he felt poorly, and an hour after the fourth dose he was attacked with a violent shivering-fit, followed by head-ache, hot skin, intense thirst, quick and full pulse, vomiting, and purging. These symptoms were succeeded by great prostration of strength. In spite of treatment, the purging lasted several days. The effects of the medicine in this case were so violent, although only twelve grains had been taken, that there is little doubt, if the patient had taken another dose, he would have been killed. In October 1841, a case was reported by Mr. Erickson to the University College Medical Society, in which very alarming symptoms resulted from the exhibition of only five grains of iodide of potassium. There was great difficulty of breathing, discharge from the eyes and nostrils, inflamed conjunctivæ, and most of the symptoms of violent catarrh. The iodide was discontinued, and the patient recovered. Dr. Laurie found that seven grains and a half of the iodide in three doses, produced, in an adult, dryness and irritation of the fauces, great difficulty of breathing, and other serious symptoms. In another case, thirty grains, in divided doses, caused severe head-ache and secretion of tears. In two instances, wherein he had prescribed it medicinally in small doses, it was in his opinion the cause of death. These cases, at least, shew the necessity of caution in the medicinal use of this substance. The effects may perhaps be attributed to idiosyncrasy. Still there seems to be good ground, from the results of experiments on animals, for ranking iodide of potassium among irritant poisons. It has not, so far as I know, caused death, if we except the two cases of Dr. Laurie, and another case which may perhaps be regarded as of a doubtful nature. One drachm and a half of the solution has been taken by a young female without destroying life, although it produced very serious symptoms of irritation. There is no antidote to this poison; it should be removed as speedily as possible by the stomach-pump.

Nitrate of potash is largely employed in the arts. It is an irritant, but only acts as such when taken in a large dose. It has destroyed life on several occasions. Its effects are somewhat uncertain. An ounce and even two ounces have been taken without causing very alarming symptoms. Tartra denied that it had poisonous properties even in a very large dose; but cases have occurred which now leave no doubt on the subject. In one instance quoted by Orfila, an ounce of nitre was taken by a lady in mistake for other salts. In a quarter of an hour she suffered from nausea, vomiting, and purging, and the muscles of the face were convulsed. The pulse was weak, the respiration laborious, and the extremities cold, but there was a sense of burning heat and severe pain in the epigastrium. She died in three hours after taking the dose. On dissection the stomach was found highly inflamed, and the membrane detached in various parts. Near the pylorus, the inflammation had a gangrenous character. A large quantity of liquid coloured by blood was found in the stomach. My friend, Dr. Geoghegan, of Dublin, has communicated to me the following case which is of recent occurrence. A man took from an ounce to an ounce and a half of nitre by mistake for salts. Severe pain in the abdomen followed, with violent vomiting, but no purging as far as could be ascertained. He died in about two hours after taking the salts. On examination a bloody mucus was found in the stomach, the lining membrane was of a brownish red colour, generally inflamed, and in parts detached from the coat beneath. None of the poison was detected in the stomach, but its nature was clearly established from the analysis of a portion left in the vessel which had contained the draught.

Poisoning by nitre has been hitherto the result of accident. It is never taken for the purpose of suicide, the popular opinion being that it is not poisonous; although the above cases shew that it destroys life with greater rapidity than is commonly observed in the action of arsenic and corrosive sublimate. It is never likely to be employed by a murderer, since a dose sufficient to kill could not be secretly exhibited. Two men swallowed each one ounce of nitre by mistake for Glauber's salt. They almost immediately experienced a sense of coldness in the course of the spine, trembling of the limbs, with violent vomiting and purging. The stools were bloody. They recovered in the course of a few days. Another case is reported, where an ounce of nitre killed a man in thirty-six hours.

Sulphate of potash, commonly regarded as inert, has lately given rise to some important medico-legal investigations. A lady, about a week after her delivery, took, by the prescription of her medical attendant, about ten drachms of the sulphate of potash, in divided doses, as a laxative. After the first dose, she was seized with severe pain in the stomach, nausea, vomiting, purging, and cramps in the extremities. These symptoms became augmented after each dose, and she died in two hours. It was supposed that some poison had been given by mistake, but that was not the case, and the question was, whether her death was caused by the sulphate of potash. On inspection, the mucous membrane of the stomach and intestines, was found pale, except in some parts where it was reddened. The stomach contained a large quantity of reddish coloured liquid, which, on analysis, was found to contain only sulphate of potash, and no trace of any common irritant poison. The examiners referred death to the sulphate of potash, given in an unusually large dose, whereby it had acted as an irritant poison in a person whose constitution was already much debilitated. There is no doubt that the most simple purgative salt may, under certain circumstances, destroy life. I have already related a case in which sulphate of magnesia caused death, and gave rise to a criminal charge in this country. It is said that sulphate of potash has in some cases caused vomiting and other serious symptoms, from its containing, as impurity, sulphate of zinc. This is easily discovered by adding the ferrocyanate of potash, which precipitates zinc.

With regard to the chemical analysis, sulphate of potash is easily known. It is a dry, hard salt, soluble in water, forming a neutral solution. This solution, if sufficiently concentrated, is precipitated both by tartaric acid and bichloride of platina, whereby potash is indicated, and the presence of sulphuric acid is known by the action of a salt of barytes.

Sulphate of alumina and potash, commonly known as alum, does not appear to have given rise to any accident, at least in this country. A singular case occurred in Paris in 1828, in which the alleged noxious properties of alum were brought into question. A lady swallowed a quantity of calcined alum dissolved in warm water, which had been supplied to her by mistake for powdered gum. The quantity taken was less than half an ounce. She immediately complained of a burning pain in the mouth, throat, and stomach. She afterwards suffered from thirst, violent vomiting, and general disturbance of the system, from which she recovered in the course of two or three days. These effects were referred to the alum, and the party who supplied it by mistake was condemned to a severe punishment. We must admit the possibility of this substance acting as an irritant, on the same principle on which we admit the irritant properties of salts of a far more innocent character. It is, however, proper to observe that this salt given in large doses to animals does not appear to affect them seriously, and that three drachms have been taken by patients at a dose, dissolved in six ounces of liquid, without any inconvenience resulting.

Common alum possesses a peculiar and astringent taste. It easily dissolves in water, forming an acid solution, which chrystallizes on evaporation in regular octohedra. Its solution is not affected by ferrocyanate of potash or sulphurretted hydrogen, whereby it is known from the true metallic saline solutions. Its sulphuric acid may be detected by a salt of barytes. On adding potash, a white precipitate of alumina falls down, which is re-dissolved by adding a larger quantity of the alkali. By this last character it is known from the alkaline earths, which are precipitated from their solutions by potash, but are not re-dissolved. On adding ammonia in excess alumina falls down. This may be separated by filtration, and on evaporating the liquid portion, and icinerating the saline residue, it will be found to be sulphate of potash. Calcined alum is a white uncrystalline substance, only partially soluble in water. The quantity dissolved is, however, sufficient to allow its nature to be determined.

Barytes and its salts are undoubtedly poisons, but very little is known concerning their action on the human subject. Pure barytes itself is a caustic alkali, which is not likely to be taken as a poison, seeing that it is rarely met with out of a chemical laboratory. The principal salts are the chloride, nitrate, acetate, and carbonate, the last of which is insoluble in water.

The only two preparations of barytes that have yet caused death are the chloride and the carbonate. The following case of poisoning by the chloride occurred some time ago. A woman swallowed, by mistake, half an ounce of powdered chloride of barium dissolved in warm water. Nausea and vomiting of a watery mucus supervened, with twitchings of the facial muscles, and convulsive motions of the hands and feet. The symptoms continued to increase in severity, and she died about two hours from the time of taking the poison, under most violent convulsions. On inspection, the stomach was perforated posteriorly, in the lesser curvature near the cardiac orifice. The aperture was of an oval form, three lines in diameter externally, and almost twice as large internally. The margin appeared swollen, and the mucous membrane, for about two inches round, was much thickened, and covered with a bloody mucus. The stomach and small intestines were highly inflamed; the cavity of the former contained mucus and coagulated blood. The pharynx and œsophagus presented slight marks of inflammation. The poison was found in the stomach by chemical analysis. The symptoms are those of irritation, combined with an affection of the brain and nervous system, since vertigo, convulsions, and paralysis have been remarked among them. In the case referred to, half an ounce proved fatal in two hours. In another instance, one ounce taken by mistake for Glauber's salt, destroyed life in an hour. In small doses even it has been found to effect the system powerfully. The carbonate of barytes is said to have destroyed life in two cases, in each of which only one drachm was taken.

THE CRITIC.

New Books.

A practical Exposition of the Statute 7 & 8 Vict. cap. 76, intituled "An Act to Simplify the Transfer of Property:" with Precedents of Deeds required by that Act. By Thomas George Western, Esq. of the Middle Temple. London, 1845. Richards.

This pamphlet is intended to be a supplement to Mr. Western's Precedents in Conveyancing, and it will be acceptable not only to the possessors of that work, but to others perplexed by the very dubious provisions of the new statute.

As all opinions are valuable just now, especially those of one who has profoundly studied the Act, we shall best exhibit the merits of this pamphlet by extracting some of the notes and subjoined forms. His exposition of the second section is as follows:—

Freehold land, as heretofore, might have been conveyed by lease and release, may now be conveyed by deed, without livery of seisin, or enrolment of a prior lease; and this extends to every person: it therefore extends to a corporation as well as an individual. And, by sec. 11, it is now no longer necessary to have such deed indented; but it may be asked what deed is required by this Act? Must it be signed and sealed? It is apprehended that what was considered to be a valid deed before the passing of this Act must still prevail; no part of the statute of frauds is repealed by it. A deed must, therefore, be still signed, sealed, and delivered, to render it a deed within the meaning of this section. Any deed, however simple, will in future have the effect of conveying freehold land; but, although the forms of deeds hitherto in use must be altered, yet all the requisites of a deed must be preserved. "A deed factum: this word (deed) in the understanding of the common law is an instrument written on parchment or paper, whereunto ten things are necessarily incident, viz. first, writing; secondly, on parchment or paper; thirdly, a person able to contract; fourthly, by a sufficient name; fifthly a person able to be contracted with; sixthly, by a sufficient name; seventhly, a thing to be contracted for; eighthly, apt words required by law; ninthly, sealing; and, tenthly, delivery. A deed cannot be written upon wood, leather, cloth, or the like, but only upon parchment or paper; for the writing upon them can be least vitiated, altered or corrupted." Co. Litt. 36. Blackstone says, "A deed is a writing sealed and delivered by the parties," 2 Com. 295. The reference as hitherto made to the statute, 4 Vic. c. 21, abolishing the lease for a year, need not now be made; but the duty should still be added to the duty upon the deed as heretofore; and although by this Act, the word "grant" in the operative part of the deed is not to have the effect of creating any warranty, nor of creating any covenant by implication, except so declared by any Act of Parliament, yet it should be still made use of as a word of conveyance.

This section renders unnecessary livery of seisin, enrolment, and the lease for a year.

The Act does not prevent the practitioner from making use of any of the old modes of conveyance, where he may think proper to do so.

On the fourth section he says:—

That no lease in writing of any freehold, copyhold, or leasehold land, or surrender in writing of any freehold or leasehold land, shall be valid, unless made by deed.

But any agreement in writing to let or to surrender any such land shall be valid, and operate as an agreement to execute a lease or surrender.

The person who shall be in possession of land in pursuance of any agreement to let may, from payment of rent or other circumstances, be construed to be a tenant from year to year.

This section is of importance. The statute of frauds, 29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 1, enacts, "that all leases, estates, interests of freeholds or terms of years, or any uncertain interest of, into, or out of any messuages, manors, lands, tenements, or hereditaments, made or created by livery and seizin only, or by parole, cannot be put in writing and signed by the parties so making or creating the same, or their agents thereunto lawfully authorized by writing, shall have the force and effect of leases or estates at will only, and shall not, either in law or equity, be deemed or taken to have any other or greater force or effect, any consideration for making any such parole leases or estates to the contrary notwithstanding.

Sec. 2. Except, nevertheless, all leases not exceeding the term of three years from the making thereof; whereupon the rent reserved to the landlord during such term shall amount unto two-thirds parts at the least of the value of the thing demised.

Sec. 3. That no leases, estates, or interests either of freehold or terms of years, or any uncertain interest, not being copyhold or customary interest of, into, or out of any messuages, manors, lands, tenements, or hereditaments, shall at any time hereafter be assigned, granted, or surrendered, unless it be by deed or note in writing, signed by the party so assigning, granting, or surrendering the same, or their agents thereunto lawfully authorized by writing, or by act and operation of law.

This section, therefore, requires attention, inasmuch as it is at variance with, and greatly alters, these sections of the statute of frauds, and sets at rest the long disputed question, as to whether an agreement in writing is of such a nature as to amount to a present demise, or to an agreement for a future lease.(a) Now, no lease in writing of any land shall be valid as a lease, unless the same shall be by deed; and any agreement in writing to let or to surrender any land, shall take effect as an agreement to execute a lease or surrender. All the cases hitherto have been determined upon very nice distinctions; indeed, in some instances, distinctions without differences, and the decisions have been made upon a general feeling in all the courts to continue these agreements as leases, if it could have been possible, and not what they were truly intended to be by the parties, agreements for leases.(a) This subject has hitherto been a very fruitful subject of litigation; a lease must now be made by deed, and the question, whether a writing is to operate as a lease, or an agreement for a lease, is now at an end. Any agreement in writing to let or surrender any land, shall in future take effect as an agreement to execute a lease or surrender; and, as regards surrenders, it will be seen that this Act has altered sec. 3 of the Statute of Frauds, as all surrenders must be by deed only.

The important eighth section is noted thus:—

This section requires great attention, for it is of considerable importance. After the expiration of the present year no estate in land shall be created by way of contingent remainder, but every estate which heretofore has taken effect as a contingent remainder, is to take effect as an executory devise. Contingent remainders existing under deeds, wills, or instruments made before the year 1845, are not to be destroyed or barred merely by reason of the destruction or merger of any preceding estate, or its determination by any other means than the natural effluxion of the time of such preceding estate, or some event on which it was in it creation limited to determine.

This puts an end to the necessity for having a limitation to trustees to preserve contingent remainders.

An executory devise is defined to be a devise of a future interest in lands not to take effect at the testator's death, but limited to arise and vest upon some future contingency. (1 Eq. Ca. Abr. 186.) This is the definition commonly given of an executory devise. It comprehends, indeed, every species of an executory devise; but at the same time it is not confined to executory devises only; it includes every kind of contingent interest in lands given by devise (for every contingent interest must necessarily be future); now every contingent interest in lands limited by devise is not an executory devise(a), for some contingent interests by devise are contingent remainders.

Mr. Fearne says, an executory devise is strictly such a limitation of a future estate, or interest in lands or chattels (though in the case of chattels personal it is more properly an executory bequest), as the law admits in the case of a will, the contrary to the rules of limitation in conveyances at common law. It is only an indulgence allowed to a man's last will and testament where otherwise the words of the will would be void; for wherever a future interest is so limited by devise as to fall within the rules above laid down for the limitation of contingent remainders, such an interest is not an executory devise, but a contingent remainder. (2 Fearne 1.)

Now by this section of the Act every estate which heretofore would have taken effect as a contingent remainder, is to take effect as an executory devise. No estate in land is to take effect as a contingent remainder.

It should be observed that this section has a retrospective effect. It applies to every estate which, before the year 1845, would have taken effect as a contingent remainder.

And thus he treats of sections 9, 10, and 11:—

SECTION IX.

That when any mortgagee of freehold or copyhold land shall die, and his executor or administrator is entitled to the mortgage money, and the legal estate in the land shall be vested in his heir or devisee, and possession shall not have been taken under the mortgage, nor any action or suit so depending, such executor or administrator, upon payment to him of the mortgage-money and interest, may convey the legal estate vested in the heir or devisee.

This section is certainly an improvement upon the law of mortgages, if a purchaser will be satisfied that possession of the land has not been taken under the mortgage, and that no action or suit be depending. It will be absolutely necessary in all cases to ascertain these facts; and when there is any doubt, or the facts cannot be got at satisfactorily, then the heir or devisee should be required to join in conveying the legal estate, as would have been the case before this Act came into operation; indeed, it is a proviso fraught with so much danger, as to render this section almost of no value, and in all cases it will be better to continue the old method, where it can readily be obtained, of making the heir or de isee convey the legal estate.

It should be observed that this section of the Act is confined to money. Suppose a mortgage to replace stock. Stock is not money. Suppose, also, a mortgage of railway, or any other shares in a public company, these are not money.

SECTION X.

This section directs, that the receipts of trustees, or of the survivors or survivor of two or more mortgagees, or the executors or administrators of such survivor, or their or his assigns shall be sufficient discharges, unless the contrary shall be expressly declared by the instrument creating the trust or security. This puts an end to the old established rule in equity, that where land is in mortgage to two or more persons, and one of them die, the personal representatives of the deceased mortgagee are necessary parties to give a discharge for the mortgage money, although the entire legal estate be in the survivor; but a declaration may be made to the contrary by the instrument creating the trust or security.

This will also render unnecessary the old usual clause, that the receipts of trustees shall be sufficient discharges, unless where in cases the contrary shall be expressly declared by the instrument creating the trust.

The same remark upon the word money as that appended to section 9 may also be made here; therefore it is presumed that this clause applies to receipts for money alone, and that in all other cases it will be proper still to adopt the usual clause, that the trustees' receipts shall be sufficient discharges.

SECTION XI.

It shall not be necessary in any case to have a deed indented.

Any person not being a party to a deed, may take an immediate benefit under it, in the same manner as he might under a deed poll.

This removes at once the necessity for indentures, and hereafter, when this Act comes into operation, another form must be employed (see the precedents). Indentures were quite useless, and according to a very learned author, (Blackst. Comm. 295), "It seems at present to serve for little other purpose than to give name to the species of the deed;" and in shewing the distinction between an indenture and a deed poll, the same learned author says: "a deed made by one party only is not indented, but polled or shaved quite even, and therefore called a deed poll or a single deed." (Blackst. Comm. 295.) This distinction is now abolished, any person not being a party to any deed, may take an immediate benefit under it in the same manner as he might have done under a deed poll. It is not to be necessary in any case to have the deed indented.

The following precedent will be useful:—

Conveyance of freeholds by a vendor seised in fee to a purchaser married before the 1st January, 1834, and his Trustee to bar dower.(a)

This deed made the —— day of ——, 1845, between J. S. of —— (absolute owner of the fee simple, and unmarried) of the first part; W. J. of —— (purchaser, married) of the second part; and A. B. (trustee to bar dower) of the third part: Whereas, by an indenture of release, bearing date the —— day of ——, and made between C. D. of the one part, and the said J. S. of the other part, the messuages, land, and hereditaments hereinafter described were granted, released, and assured unto, and to the use of, the said J. S. his heirs and assigns for ever. And whereas the said J. S. hath contracted and agreed with the said W. J. for the absolute sale to him of the fee simple and inheritance in possession of the said messuages, land, and hereditaments hereinafter described, at the sum of ——l. Now this deed witnesseth, that in consideration of ——l. of lawful current money of England, paid upon the execution of these presents by the said W. J. to the said J. S. the receipt whereof the said J. S. doth hereby acknowledge, and from the same money doth hereby for ever discharge the said W. J. his heirs, executors, administrators, appointees, and assigns: He the said J. S. hath granted, released, and conveyed, and by this deed doth grant, release, and convey unto the said W. J. and to his heirs and assigns, all, &c. (describe the parcels intended to be conveyed,) and all and singular others the hereditaments and premises comprised in and released by the said recited indenture of release of the —— of —— with their and every of their appurtenances: and all the estate, right, title, interest, possession, property, claim, and demand whatsoever at law and in equity, of him the said J. S. of, in, to, or out of the same messuages, land, hereditaments, and premises, and every part thereof: To have and to hold the said herein-before described messuages, land, hereditaments, and premises, with their appurtenances, unto the said W. J. his heirs and assigns: to such uses upon such trusts, and for such intents and purposes, and subject to such powers, provisoes, declarations, and agreements as the said W. J. shall by any deed or deeds, either with or without power of revocation, from time to time direct, limit, or appoint; and in default of any such direction, limitation, and appointment, and so far as every or any such shall not extend to the use of the said W. J. and his assigns during his life, without impeachment of waste, and after the determination of that estate to the use of the said A. B. (trustee), his executors and administrators, during the life of the said W. J. in trust for the said W. J. and his assigns, and to prevent any wife of the said W. J. being entitled to dower out of the said hereditaments and premises, or any part thereof; and from and after the determination of that estate, to the use of the said W. J. his heirs and assigns for ever. And the said J. S. for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, doth hereby covenant and agree with the said W. J. his heirs, and assigns, that he the said J. S. notwithstanding his own acts and deeds to the contrary, is lawfully seized, and is well entitled to the said messuages, lands, and hereditaments, for an indefeasible estate of inheritance in fee simple, free from all incumbrances whatsoever. And that it shall for ever hereafter be lawful for the said W. J. his heirs, appointees, and assigns, peaceably and quietly to enter into and upon, and to hold, occupy, and enjoy the said messuages, land, and hereditaments, and to receive the rents and profits thereof, for his and their own use and benefit, freed and for ever discharged and kept indemnified by the said J. S. his heirs, executors, and administrators, from and against all incumbrances, estates, titles, charges, claims, or demands whatsoever, by the said J. S. or his heirs, or by any person claiming under or in trust for him or them. And that the said said J. S. and his heirs, and all persons claiming under or in trust for him or them, shall and will, at all times hereafter upon every request, and at the expense of the said W. J. his heirs, appointees, and assigns, make and execute all such further deeds, conveyances, and assurances for better releasing and conveying the said messuages, land, and hereditaments, with their appurtenances, unto the said W. J. his heirs and assigns, to the uses and in manner aforesaid, as he or they, or his or their counsel, may reasonably acquire. And lastly, the said W. J. doth hereby declare, that neither his present wife, nor any woman who may become his widow, shall be entitled to dower out of the said messuages, lands, and hereditaments, or out of any part thereof. In witness, &c.

Three other very useful precedents are appended, but we must not take too largely from pages which every conveyancer will, of course, lay upon his desk.

(a) See 3 Western's Conveyancing, pp. 113, 114, n. n. a, b.

(a) Lord Kenyon, in Long v. Blackall and Others (7 Term. Rep. 102), observed, that the rules respecting Executory Devises have conformed to the rules laid down in the construction of legal limitations, and the courts have said that the estate shall not be unalienable by executory devises for a longer time than is allowed by the limitations of a common law conveyance. In marriage settlements the estate may be limited to the first and other sons of the marriage in tail, and until the person to whom the last remainder is limited is of age, the estate is inalienable. In conformity to that rule the Courts have said, so far we will allow the executory devises to be good. To support this position, I could refer to many decisions, but it is sufficient to refer to the Duke of Norfolk's Case (3 Ch. Ca.), in which all the learning on this head was gone into, and from that time to the present every judge acquiesced in that decision. It is an established rule that an executory devise is good, if it must necessarily happen within a life or lives in being, and twenty-one years and the fraction of another year allowing for the time of gestation.

Re WOODCOCK, a Lunatic.

Practice—Grounds on which a commission of lunacy will be issued.

L. Lowndes and Calvert supported a petition by Dr. Munro, who was the patient's cousin-german, for a commission.

The lunatic's only property was an annuity of 200*l.* charged on an estate now the property of Dr. Munro. He was stated to be a clergyman, and the grounds on which the application was founded were these:—The extravagance of Mr. Woodcock, who when recently in Paris, gave 160*l.* for a fiddle, and had been guilty of the greatest extravagance in expenditure at various hotels in London. He had also exhibited so much violence towards the landlord of the place in which he had lodged, when his linen and personal goods had been detained for lodging-rent and expenses, that it was necessary to take him before a magistrate. In August last he had called on Dr. Sutherland, and was then wearing mustachios, and said that perhaps Dr. Sutherland would be surprised that he, as belonging to the church, should be so ... bited, but that the fact was he belonged to the church militant. It appeared also that he had for some ... been confined in a maison de santé in France ... his mother's sanction. Certain religious ... entertained by Mr. Woodcock were also referred to in the affidavits in support of the petition as evidence of his insanity. Dr. Munro, his cousin ... petitioner.

Kinglake, for Mr. Woodcock, opposed the application. He had made an affidavit, in which he stated that he was acquainted with the Greek ... and French languages; that he knew a little Hebrew, and was capable of understanding chemistry, logic, mathematics, and science in general. That he had proposed that Dr Southey should examine him in Greek. That Dr Southey, in various conversations with him, had drawn him into a confession of his religious opinions, and that he had said that no man could understand the Scriptures without having his mind illuminated by the Holy Ghost. He asserted that no man had a right to say another was insane on account of his religious opinions. It was suggested that the petitioner was only the first cousin of the patient, and that his mother and sisters were ... that a commission should issue. Dr. Munro had instituted a suit in Chancery in respect of the annuity charged upon his estate.

Lowndes, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The only object of the petitioner is to protect the person and property of the alleged lunatic. Dr. Munro's conduct could only be explained by his belief that Mr. Woodcock requires protection. I think it a case for a commission; at the same time I think it not unlikely that he ... manage himself before a jury as to prevent a verdict. The saying that he is inspired by the Holy Ghost, and that he has a call from heaven, is nothing more than every clergyman declares on oath upon his ordination.

Funds in court retained pending an appeal to the House of Lords, notwithstanding the defendants, under the decree of this Court, were entitled to have the same paid out to them—Retainer on terms—3l. per cent. stock always deemed by the Court as money.

JUDGMENT.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I have several times thought of this case; and it seems to me that, under the circumstances, the funds ought not to be parted with by the Court pending the appeal. On looking at the judgment of the Vice-Chancellor, it is clear that he anticipated an appeal; for he assumed that neither party would be satisfied with a single judgment, and he said that it was not an improper case for an appeal.

Now the sum in question is very large, no less than 200,000*l.*; the defendants are executors, and, pending the appeal, they would not be justified in distributing it. They must, therefore, invest it. Now at present the fund is invested; and it had better continue under the control of the Court. It will not, therefore, be parted with until after the decision upon the appeal But then the defendants ought to have any part of the money out of court for the purpose of investment in securities bearing a higher interest, upon giving security for the repayment of the sum so had out and they may apply for that purpose as it may be necessary: and the plaintiffs, in the event of the appeal being decided against them, must make good any loss of interest which may be sustained by retaining the funds in court The defendants wanted ... namely, that the plaintiffs should be required to make good any loss to be occasioned by a fall in the funds. But the Court always considers the three per cents. as equivalent to money, and takes no notice of either rise or fall in the market price of stock; I cannot, therefore, accede to that suggestion. The same order as that of Vice-Chancellor Wigram must now be made. If the plaintiffs refuse to accede to the terms proposed by the Court, their application must be refused with costs.

Costs of indictment for non-repair of highway.—Road a bridle-way?

This was an indictment for the non-repair of a highway Defendants were acquitted on the ground that it was not a highway for carriages, but only a bridle-way. An application had been made to Tindal, C. J., who tried the case, for costs, under 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c 50, s. 95, which enacts that the judge "is to direct" them to be paid out of the county-rate whenever the magistrates have ordered an indictment to be preferred This, however, applies only to cases where the "liability to repair is denied." Here the road was admitted to be a bridle-way in good repair, and not a highway.

Humphrey (with whom was Sale) contended that the statute was imperative, and that the costs must in all cases be paid.

Whitehurst, Q. C. contra.—There is a direct decision on the point, Reg. v. Paul (2 M. & R. 308). Here there is no highway. A bridle-way is not a highway. [COLERIDGE, J.—If it is not a highway, why should parish A be made to pay more than parish B?] There is a decision in this court. (He was stopped.)

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—The Lord Chief Justice ought to have been told what had occurred in this court. It is monstrous to say that a man is to indict any path he chooses on the speculation of making out a road, and say, if I fail, the county must pay the costs. The Act applies only to cases where there is a highway, and the liability to repair is denied. The learned judge (Tindal) was misled. It was not an exercise of his discretion according to his view of the law, for he thought he had none.

BINGLEY v. YONGE.

Indorsement under power of attorney.

Butes, Sergt. moved pursuant to leave reserved at the trial at the last sittings before Lord Denman, C. J. to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and enter a nonsuit or verdict for the defendant.

It was an action on a promissory note by indorsee against drawer.

Pleas.—Denial of indorsement and no consideration. At the trial the plaintiff called the attesting witness to a power of attorney executed by the defendant to his brother J. E. Body, and proved its execution and the indorsement of the note by the attorney.

The material words of the power were authorising the attorney "to draw, accept, or indorse bills or promissory notes in the course of business."

The plaintiff rested his case on this evidence. The defendant then produced an affidavit by the plaintiff. The note in question had been indorsed by J. E. Body, the attorney, to him, for a debt due from the attorney to the plaintiff, and it was, therefore, contended that the defendant was entitled to a verdict on the first issue.

The plaintiff then proposed to call the attorney. This was objected to, but the evidence admitted without prejudice if the Court should think that it ought to have been tendered at first.

Byles, Sergt. also argued that even with his evidence the plaintiff's case failed, as the absence of consideration was proved.

Rule on both points.

... OF NEWENT.

Granting a warrant under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74, is a judicial, not a ministerial act. Mandamus to justices to hear application made under that Act.

Keating ... cause against a rule obtained by Newton against justices either to grant a warrant under the above Act or to hear the application (Supra, p. 160). As to the first part of the rule, it is clear that the issuing the warrant is a judicial act. This is shewn by the recitals, and the facts of which the justices must be satisfied before they issue such warrant; that the relation of landlord and tenant exists; that the due notices have been served, &c. He further contended that the rule must also be dismissed as to the alternative on the ground that, in point of fact, the justices did hear the application and adjudicate upon it. It appeared that at the hearing a clerk had appeared on behalf of an alleged mortgagee of the premises, ... was produced, but had been taken, as proved, ... by the justices without it being proved. ... admitted the due notices, but claimed the ... mortgagee, and that then the attorney ... demanded the warrant.

Upon the affidavits, on both sides, Keating argued, ... was shewn that the case was admitted by the attorney to have been heard, and therefore it was immaterial whether improper evidence had been received, or a wrong decision come to by the justices.

Newton, in support of the rule, argued, that after the facts were proved, the justices had only a ministerial duty to perform. The Court, however, intimated their opinion against this view. He then contended that the affidavits shewed that the application to hear was made after the mortgage, and had been produced, and that it was not heard, and therefore that the rule must be made absolute to hear the application.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—It is clear that the application was made to the justices to hear, and that they refused, in consequence of the claim on the part of the mortgagee. The admission by the mortgagee would not bind the person in possession, who did not appear, and they ought to have heard the evidence as required by the Act. This they refused to do; and although the warrant was demanded by the attorney for the applicant, he also required the case to be heard.

Rule absolute to hear the application.

Hill now sought to set aside this verdict on the ground that there was a variance between the contract stated in the declaration and that proved at the trial.

The verdict was for the plaintiff.

Knowles, Q. C. now moved for a new trial, on the ground that the learned judge ought not to have let the case go to the jury, as there was no evidence to fix the defendant with a liability for the accident, as the servant was acting out of the scope of his duty, and had no authority from his master to drive.

R. v. The Mayor, Aldermen, and Councillors of Cambridge.

Where a corporation of a borough do not proceed within ten days to fill up an extraordinary vacancy in the council, caused by a judgment of ouster against a councillor, or a quo warranto, as required by 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 27, the Court will, in its discretion, order the corporation to pay the costs of a mandamus, compelling them to proceed with the election. Semble, that this will not order it to be paid out of the borough fund.

This was a rule for a mandamus calling on the mayor, aldermen, and councillors of the borough of Cambridge to pay out of the borough fund the costs of a certain mandamus which had issued from this Court, commanding them to proceed to the election of a councillor for that borough.

It appeared that a quo warranto had been obtained by a burgess of Cambridge, calling on a Mr. Dyre to shew by what authority he exercised the office of town councillor for that borough, and on which judgment of ouster had been entered for the crown. The corporation, however, did not proceed to fill up the vacancy within ten days, as required by 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 27, on which the relator obtained a mandamus to compel them to do so, and it was for the costs of this mandamus that the present application to the discretion of the Court was made.

Crompton now shewed cause against the rule, and contended that the costs of the mandamus were not expenses incurred by the corporation, in the election, and therefore were not payable out of the borough fund; that the corporation had acted bonâ fide, as they had been advised by counsel; that they could not proceed to elect without a mandamus: therefore the Court would not award costs against them. Further, that if they paid the costs out of the borough fund, they would be guilty of a breach of trust, as there was nothing in the Municipal Act to authorise them to do so.

By the Court.—We think that the costs sought for are payable, but that the rule is improperly drawn up. We are of opinion that the corporation are liable, but we do not think that we are called on to direct that the money should be paid out of the borough fund. We think that this is an expense incurred in an election, and therefore that the corporation ought to pay it; we shall, therefore, make this rule absolute, striking out the words "out of the borough fund."

Certiorari.

Hawkins moved for a certiorari to bring up certain proceedings had in the matter of an appeal against a certain order of removal, or for a mandamus to the justices to erase the proceedings from their records.

It appeared that the order of removal was made on the 27th of March; the next sessions were held on the 9th of April; the second sessions were on the 2nd of July, continued by adjournment to the 24th of July, when an appeal against the order was entered, and respited. The appeal was heard at the third sessions on the 15th of October, when the order was quashed.

It was now contended, that if the appellants passed over the April session without entering and respiting the appeal, they were bound to try at the July sessions, and that they had no right then to enter and respite.

Re John Long.

Prison relief—Mandamus return.

The Solicitor-General applied for a rule to set aside a peremptory mandamus, or to make a return to it.

This mandamus, which had been just refused, was afterwards granted in last Michaelmas Term. It was directed to the Governor of the Queen's Prison, directing him to allow John Long, a poor prisoner there, 3s. 6d. per week, under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22, s. 8. The application to set aside this mandamus was made on these grounds:—By 53 Geo. 3, c. 113, it had been provided that no money set apart for poor prisoners out of the county funds (then under the control of the justices) should be paid to any poor debtor after the first day of the Term next following the time when he should be charged in execution. The 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22, s. 9, repealed this provision, and the 8th section orders this money to be paid to the keeper of the Queen's prison, "to be by him applied under the direction of one of his Majesty's Secretaries of State, for the relief of the prisoners confined in the prison," without distinction. The 16th and 17th sections empower the Secretary of State to make regulations. He made them accordingly. It appeared that John Long had for seventeen months received 6s. weekly as master of the racket court, and according to the regulations, was not entitled to the prison allowance beyond twelve months. Under these circumstances it was contended the Court of Queen's Bench had no jurisdiction. Muir v. Parrott.

Arbitrators must always find on each ... and must acquaint themselves ... with the subject-matter of the award so as to ... accurately.

A rule nisi had been obtained for setting aside an award in this case under these circumstances:—The plaintiff and defendant were both dyers and bleachers, having their works at the same stream, and the reference was to determine the plaintiff's right to the stream unpolluted by the defendant's works, the defendant having put lime into the stream, which obstructed its course and polluted it. ... The defendant had pleaded not guilty, ... and a denial of the plaintiff's right. The jury found for the plaintiff, damages 2,000*l.* subject to be reduced. The terms of the reference were that the arbitrator should determine the right, and should regulate the proper mode of enjoying the stream. The arbitrator awarded generally for the plaintiff, damages 40*l.* That the plaintiff had a right to the stream, subject to the defendants right of first using it for his defendant's dying business; he then went on to say that the defendant shall use all reasonable means of purifying the water, and that it shall be passed after it has been used by the defendant for his dying processes through filtering lodges according to the most approved method, so that it may be always used by plaintiff in his business as bleacher without injury thereto. The rule sought to set the award aside, first, because there was no distinct finding on the issues severally; and second, because the award was uncertain; and third, because it was not final.

J. S. Wortley, Q.C. (with whom was Watson, Q.C.) now shewed cause. The award is good. First, as to the finding, if it so awards that the inference necessarily arises that the finding, though general, is on all the issues, it suffices. (Jackson v. Yabsley, 4 B. & Al. 848; Duckworth v. Harrison, 4 M. & W. 432; The Marquis of Anglesey v. Dibben and Another, 10 Bing. 568; Ersborne v. Hart, 5 M. & W. 30; 9 A. & Ell. 235.) Here the arbitrator has found for the plaintiff; he could not have done this had he found either issue; for here both issues go to the whole cause of action. [Wightman, J.—The case of Brook v. Parson (13 Law Journal 50,) was cited before me when the rule was obtained.] Great doubt has since been thrown on that case by the strong expressions of the judges in the Exchequer on Saturday last, in the case of Gilbert v. Gilbert, though acted on in Avelett v. Goddard (11 L. Coleridge, J.—The finding strikes ... of the two trades.] It is not necessary that the arbitrator should find in the very terms of the reference or pleadings. Allen v. Lowe (4 Q. B. 66). The finding of damages for the plaintiff is equivalent to a separate finding on both issues. Cooper v. Langdon (9 M. & W. 60), [Lord Denman, C. J.—But there is the case of Bourke v. Lloyd (10 M. & W. 550), in which the Court of Exchequer seem to have departed very much from their own decision in Cooper v. Langdon.] England v. Davidson (9 Dowl. 1052) is also directly in point, and shews that there need not be a finding on each separate issue. But the Court of Exchequer entertain great doubts how as to the authority of Bourke v. Lloyd. The finding is also sufficiently certain as to the future enjoyment of the water. There are several affidavits from scientific persons, stating that they consider the award, as to filtering the water, distinct, ...

[illegible] plication, and [illegible] for the case. If the arbitrator had stopped after saying that all reasonable means ought to be [illegible] the water, it would have sufficed. It is matter of evidence what are the best means, which [illegible] perfectly understand.

[illegible], Q. C. [illegible] called upon in support of the award.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—There are three objections taken to this award. On the first point, namely that there is no distinct finding on each issue. We are embarrassed by a multitude of decisions. My own opinion on it is that I sincerely hope it may never arise again. I hope that arbitrators will learn henceforth to enter a verdict in express terms upon each issue. In this manner I find for the plaintiff on the first issue; I find for the plaintiff on the second issue. That is the only prudent and proper course to avoid these objections. We are of opinion that the other objections to this award must prevail, and that it is uncertain and not final, neither does it sufficiently define the measures that are to be adopted with respect to purifying the water from the dyeing apparatus of the defendant. The defendant may be made subject to an attachment if he fails to do what he is desired to do by the award, and it must be, therefore, clearly and fully defined. Instead of stopping litigation, we should be encouraging it were we to hold these statements sufficient. "The most approved method" is clearly open to a different construction at different times. The affidavits state that the deponents understand the process, but not that it is ascertained which is the most approved one. An arbitrator incurs great risk if he does not make himself scientifically acquainted with the work he undertakes to award upon. He should make up his mind as to what is the proper mode of securing the right or enjoyment in question, and there state plainly and accurately what is to be done, and moreover so state it that it shall be known and understood at all times to come. The danger would be great if other persons hereafter may construe his award according to some varying and indefinite usage. With these objections before us it is impossible that we can confirm this award.

PATTESON, J.—If it be impossible to reconcile the cases of Brook v. Parsons, Bourke v. Lloyd, and Cooper v. Langdon, I should proceed on that of Bourke v. Lloyd. The Court of Exchequer says, in Cooper v. Langdon, that "a plaintiff may fail in proving an agreement for want of stamp, and that were the defendant to prove the other issues, there would be no inconsistency in finding them all for him." That seems to me the explanation. But I quite agree with my Lord, that some rule should be laid down, and that the arbitrator should in all cases expressly and distinctly find on all the issues. Mr. Watson thinks the award would be good if it stopped at "all reasonable means," and did not go on to award the particular mode of carrying out the award. If so, there would be nothing but contradictory evidence as to what reasonable means meant. It is, therefore, the duty of the arbitrator to specify with certainty the means to be taken. It is suggested that the particular words may come within the general ones. I think there is no case which says that a direction, when bad, may be struck out, and leave the rest. The award cannot be supported.

COLERIDGE, J.—I quite agree that the award is bad, on the 2nd and 3rd grounds. Strong expressions may be found in the Reports, that the Court must not be too astute or nice in the construction of awards. These expressions must not be too much relied upon. Awards determine important matters or ever; and they cannot be too carefully worded.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I concur in the great importance that arbitrators in all cases should find specifically upon each issue. This award is clearly uncertain. It ought to be so certain that the party may have no doubt or difficulty how to perform it. There is a twofold uncertainty here in the means to be used to purify the water, whether all the most approved modes are to be adopted, or whether only the particular one, and then there is a doubt what are most approved modes. Rule absolute, for setting aside the award.

HALE v. RHODES and OTHERS.

Negligence of attorney in investigating title.

Watson, Q.C. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict of nonsuit in this action should not be set aside, or a new trial had.

This was an action brought against the defendants, who were attorneys, for negligence in the investigation of a security for 600*l*. advanced by Hale to one Rose, which consisted of a conveyance of a reversionary interest in some property in Somersetshire. It appeared, however, that by the will of one Tooke in 1791, there was a power of sale of this property, which the trustees had exercised in 1799. This the defendants had failed to ascertain; and the point turned upon the words in the declaration which had been copied from 2 Chitty on Pleading, 246, edit. 6, and contained the averment that plaintiff retained the defendants "to take due and proper care that the same should be a sufficient security for the repayment" of the said sum of money and interest." This, it was contended on the other side, meant a sufficient security in point of value. Rule nisi.

BALDOCK v. MORRIS.

Hall applied to amend the rule in this reference, and that the costs should abide the event.

Rule refused.

REG. v. JUSTICES OF WORWICKSHIRE.

Notice of appeal—Mandamus.

Hayes, with whom was Mellor, shewed cause why a mandamus should not issue to compel the justices of Warwickshire to enter continuances, and hear an appeal against an order of removal by the parish of Coleshill.

The case was argued at length for the respondents, when the Court discovered that the appellants had omitted to aver that they had given notice of the appeal in sufficient time to comply with the regulations of the sessions.

I. Spooner, for the appellants. Rule discharged.

GASCOIGNE v. WALTER.

Ogle moved for a rule to shew cause why the demurrer in this cause should not be set aside for frivolity.

Wednesday, Jan. 15.

REG. v. OVERSEERS OF ST. OBBARD.

Mandamus to overseers to grant certificate under 3 & 4 Vict. s. 61. (Sale of Beer Act.)

The Solicitor-General moved for a rule nisi calling on the overseers of the parish of St. Obbard, requiring them to grant a certificate of residence to a person desirous of taking out a license to retail beer, as required by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61, s. 2. A request had been duly made, but no reason for refusal given except they fancied they had a discretionary power, and they did not wish a retail beer shop to be opened in that locality. Rule granted.

NUTT v. ABRAHAM.

Evidence under replication to set off.

Crowder, Q. C. moved to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and for a new trial on account of the admission of improper evidence, and because the verdict was against evidence.

The plea was set off upon a bill of exchange for 23*l*. 10s. drawn by the plaintiff, and indorsed to the defendant.

Replication.—Not indebted. Proof that time had been given to the acceptor, and that drawer was thereby released. In Chappell v. Durston (1 C. & J. 1), it was decided that the Statute of Limitations must be specially replied to. Set off, which is in the nature of a cross action.

PATTESON, J.—The statute does not discharge the debt. The new rules do not apply here, and this might have been given in evidence under the general issue.

Crowder, Q. C.—Then the evidence shewed that, in fact, there was no time given.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—We will look at the letters which passed between the parties. Cur. adv. vult.

STINTON v. BLOXHAM.

This was an action with two counts. The first for distraining for more than was due, the second for an excessive distress. The plaintiff had a verdict for 10*l*. on first count, and one farthing on the second.

Crowder, Q.C. now moved to set aside the verdict or to reduce the damages. It appeared that a distress had been put in for 50*l*. 10s. when the ground-rent 10*l*. had been paid the day before to the ground landlord. There was a question whether the landlord had by previous conduct authorized this payment to be made; but Crowder also contended that even if this was the fact, the right to distrain for it was not lost until notice of the payment had been given by the tenant to the sub-landlord, the defendant in this action.

Rule granted as to verdict being against evidence. Cur. adv. vult. on the other ground.

REG. v. MANCHESTER and PRESTON RAILWAY COMPANY.

Certiorari will not lie to remove an inquisition to assess damages under compensation clause in Railway Act, because the warrant contains the superfluous words "if any."

Baines, Q. C. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Atherton for a certiorari to remove an inquisition under the Act 7 Wm. 4, c. 22, constituting the above railway. The alleged defects were patent on the face. 1. That it did not appear that twenty-four jurors had been summoned. 2. That it did not appear that twelve had been drawn from the twenty-four. 3. That it purported to be the judgment of the sheriff when it was signed by the under-sheriff, and should, therefore, have been his judgment. 4. That the jury had no power to give a verdict as they had done that there were no damages, but were bound to give some.

Baines objected, that as the Act provided that no certiorari should be had in respect of proceedings in pursuance of the Act, this rule could not be made absolute. The cases shewed that where the proceedings originated properly jurisdiction attached, and subsequent irregularities were immaterial. (Rex v. Cassons, 3 D. & R. 36; Reg. v. Bristol and Exeter Railway, 1 A. & E. 563; Reg. v. Sheffield Railway, 11 A. & E. 196; Reg. v. Bristol and Exeter Railway, [illegible] 202.)

Atherton.—No jurisdiction here attached. The warrant by which the jury was assembled was void, as not being under the Act. Sect. 63 shews that they are to assess the damages, and that their only duty is to determine the quantum. That there is damage is assumed by their being assembled at all. They have here returned "no damage." The warrant was to assess the damages, "if any." This was contrary to the Act.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—Are the jury precluded from saying there are no damages?

Atherton.—Sect. 63 shews they are to decide quantum. Reg. v. Walker (3 Q.B. 714) is a case of a jury being summoned without any result. The Court will not extend this clause, as there is no other remedy.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—It would have been better to have omitted the words "if any," but they make no difference as to the duty of the jury. They are to inquire and assess the damages; and even supposing that the fact of some damage is assumed, by the warrant being issued, the jury would not be justified in returning any other verdict but that of "no damages," if they were satisfied that none had been sustained.

The rest of the Court concurred.

Rule refused.

REG. v. THE AUDITOR OF THE PARISH OF BURNHAM.

Certiorari to return audits.

M. D. Hill, Q. C. moved for a certiorari to remove the audits of certain parish accounts. Under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 35, the auditor is required to state his reasons in writing when required by party aggrieved. By s. 37, existing auditors are continued in office; at least such, in practice, has been the construction put upon that section. The party against whom this rule is moved is auditor for two unions, in one of which the parish of Burnham is situated. He has refused to give his reasons for allowing certain charges, and these charges happen to be those paid to himself as solicitor to the union. He is not qualified to be auditor of his own accounts.

COLERIDGE, J.—Has he possession of the accounts now?

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—You must direct your rule to all parties.

M. D. Hill.—We have given notice both to the parish officers and the auditor. Rule granted.

DANILL v. PIDDING.

Martin, Q. C. moved for a new trial on the ground of misdirection. The points were, that as it appeared there was a bought note, the contract could not be proved without its production; that if there was none, then the requisites of the Statute of Frauds were not complied with, for the subsequent recognition of a payment made by the brokers, by way of deposit at the sale, was insufficient. Rule granted.

REG. v. JUSTICES OF HERTFORDSHIRE.

If a single member of a court, incapacitated from interest by being a party, interferes in the proceedings, they are void. A mortgagee of tolls cannot sit on an appeal against an order of petty sessions for payment to the surveyor of highways for repairs.

Wordsworth shewed cause against two rules obtained by Hawkins, one obtained June 12, 1844, for a certiorari to remove a certain order of petty sessions, whereby 9*l*. 5s. was ordered to be paid pursuant to the Highway Act to the surveyor of the highways, and the other obtained May 6, 1844, to remove an order of quarter sessions whereby the said order was confirmed on appeal. The certiorari for the order of petty sessions is clearly too late. Reg. v. Martin (2 Q. B. 1037) is distinguishable. The affidavits for the removal of the order of quarter sessions attempt to establish malversation of some of the parties. They state that Mr. Fordham and Mr. Fitzjohn, who were present at the quarter sessions, were creditors of the turnpike trust, and that Mr. Fordham was one of the magistrates who had made the original order, and was a respondent in the appeal. The affidavits on the other side deny that Mr. Fordham is a creditor, and state that although Mr. Fordham was present, he took no part in the decision. The charge that he was seen conversing with the other magistrates during the argument is too vague to call upon the magistrate to answer.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—It makes out a probable case.

Wordsworth.—A magistrate's conduct is not to be so lightly questioned. Mr. Fitzjohn was a creditor, and he states that he took no active part in the proceedings, but voted, as he thought he had a right to do so. It was argued, that in point of fact he was not interested, for the money was to be laid out in the repair of the road, and he would be entitled to the tolls as mortgagee, whatever the state of the road was, and even if interested, as it appeared that his vote did not decide the question, as all but two out of ten magistrates affirmed the appeal. For this position, the judgment of Patteson, J. in Reg. v. Cheltenham (1 Q. B. 467) was cited.

COLERIDGE, J.—Often one magistrate, the [illegible] man, decides the appeal.

Lord Denman, C.J.—The order of quarter sessions must be brought up to be quashed. Both the magistrates were disqualified. The creditor was clearly interested, because the payment of the money for the repair of the road would be a benefit to the mortgagee. I am most decidedly of opinion that the presence of any one interested party vitiates the whole proceedings. We cannot enter into any analysis of the effect of the interest upon his judgment, or of his influence upon the others. Then Mr. Fordham was a respondent, and therefore a party in the cause. He might have been ordered to pay the costs. The affidavit as to the part he took in the proceedings was sufficient to require a specific statement on his part. We must be very jealous of allowing any interested parties to act as judges.

Patteson, J.—On further consideration, I am satisfied that the rest of the Court in Reg. v. Cheltenham were right. The question of the right constitution of the Court depends not upon the degree of influence any one member may have had upon the decision. It is an unsound and uncertain rule. The simple question is, Has he taken part in the proceedings or not? A mere surmise is not, I admit, sufficient to call for an answer, but the affidavits here contained much more. Then the interest is clear, although remote.

Coleridge, J.—I did not take part in the decision of Reg. v. Cheltenham, but I take this opportunity of saying I quite concur in it; nor do I think that, if the report is examined, my brother Patteson will be found to have differed much.

Wightman, J. concurred.

Certiorari granted.

Wordsworth, in consequence of an intimation by the Court that the removal of the order of the quarter sessions drew with it the order of the petty sessions, here applied to discharge the second rule for certiorari, as unnecessary. It was also out of time.

Hawkins, contrà.—The objection as to time does not apply. Pending an appeal, no certiorari will be granted; and cited Reg. v. Justices of Middlesex (5 A. & E. 676). To be mentioned again.

—— v. ——

Distringas—Two calls.

Humfrey applied for a distringas, stating that three calls had been made, upon which

Coleridge, J. said: We have repeated more than once that two calls are sufficient, and two only ought to be allowed. (See 9 Dowl. 728; and 1 Dowl. & Lownd. 881.)

Reg. v. Birch.

Practice—Entry of judgment of non pros. in Exchequer Chamber on the roll.

Pashley moved for a rule calling on the prosecutors in this case to shew cause why the entry of judgment of nolle prosequi upon the roll should not be erased with costs for irregularity. It appeared that the plaintiffs in error had exceeded the time allowed for assigning errors, and the prosecutors had signed judgment of non pros. Application had been made to Lord Chief Baron Pollock to set it aside, but he thought the Court of Exchequer Chamber alone had the power. The plaintiffs in error had thereupon obtained a second writ of error, but on making up the roll found that the first writ of error, and the proceedings thereon, had been entered up on the roll hereby greatly increasing the expense of the transcripts. It was now argued, that 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm 4, c. 70, s. 8 (see Chitty's Archb. 377) applied only to cases in which the Exchequer Chamber had "altered or affirmed" the judgment below, or at least, that leave of the Court was necessary. 2nd, That there was no remittitur entered.

Patteson, J.—The defendant has a right to the judgment as you admit, and it must be entered somewhere. Where else can it be entered?

Wightman, J. — Either party may enter the judgment.

By the Court.—The entry of a remittitur is not necessary in this case. Rule refused.

Hope v. Harman and Others.

Deed of gift operating as a will.

Sir T. Wilde, Serjt. moved for a rule nisi for a new trial in this case, which relates to the Hope jewels. The damages recovered were 40,000*l.* The points were as to the validity and construction of a deed purporting to be a deed of gift, which upon the face of it was ambiguous. The facts will be more fully reported hereafter.

Cases cited: Thorold v. Thorold (1 Phill. 1); Masterman v. Maberley (2 Hay, 247); also 2 Hagg, 431; Ambl. 264. Rule granted.

Thorowgood v. Robinson.

Effect of changing the nature of a chattel to vest the possession in a wrong-doer.

This was an action in case, but the count in trover was only material to the present motion. To this not guilty and not possessed were pleaded.

Knowles, Q.C. now moved to set it aside on the ground of misdirection and as against evidence. He said that instead of leaving it to the jury to say whether the facts amounted to a conversion, Lord Denman ought to have directed them that it was a conversion. The second point was that, admitting the chalk was wrongfully taken by the plaintiff from the defendant's land; yet the plaintiff had made it his own by turning it into lime. (2 Blackst. Com. 404.)

The Court considered that the direction was quite correct, but that probably the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict on the plea of not possessed.

On this, Platt, Q.C. consented that the verdict should be altered, and the rule not granted.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Saturday, Jan. 11.

Valpy v. Manby.

Voluntary payment—Execution creditor.

Talfourd, Serjt. moved for a rule nisi to set the verdict in this cause aside, and to enter a nonsuit, pursuant to leave at the trial. The execution had arisen out of a judgment recovered against certain parties who had become bankrupt, and of whom the plaintiff was an assignee. It was contended that no actual seizure had taken place, under the judgment, by the sheriff. The sheriff's officer had, however, remained in the neighbourhood. The assignees, before a sale of the bankrupt's effects, applied to the sheriff to ascertain whether he intended to sell under the judgment; on being answered in the affirmative, the amount of the execution creditor's debt was tendered, under protest, and received 372*l.* 6s. 9d. The question for the decision of the Court was, whether the payment made was a voluntary payment, or made under compulsion, so as to entitle the assignees to recover it back again. This payment was made with a full knowledge of all the facts, and therefore if not made under compulsion would be made in their own wrong.

Cases cited Lindon v. Hooper (Cowper, 414); Atlee v. Backhouse (3 M. & W. 633); Parker v. Great Western Railway Company (the last number of Scott's N. R. 835). Rule nisi.

Burgess v. Gray.

Bill of exception.

Byles, Serjt. on mentioning the case to the Court, suggested the case of Bush and Steinman (1 B. & P. 404).

Tindal, C. J.—In this case the bill of exception has fallen to the ground. It is very convenient that a bill of exception should always be accompanied by some degree of form, because it gives the judge an opportunity to set himself right with the jury where necessary.

Gann v. Knowles.

This Court has no power to bring up a defendant who is in the custody of the keeper of the Queen's Prison, for a criminal matter, in order that he may be charged in execution in a civil action. The practice in this respect has not been altered by the statute 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22.

Channell, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Byles, Serjt. last term, calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the writ of habeas corpus should not be set aside for irregularity.

The defendant was brought up on the last day of term by a habeas corpus directed to the keeper of the Queen's Prison, in order to be charged in execution with a judgment debt of 60*l.* 4s. recovered against him by the plaintiff. The return to the writ by the keeper of the prison was, that the defendant was in custody under a warrant of commitment for a misdemeanor. It now appeared that judgment in this action was signed on the 9th December, 1843, and that on the 6th Feb. 1844, the defendant was convicted on an indictment for a conspiracy, and sentenced by the Court of Queen's Bench to be imprisoned for 18 calendar months, under which the defendant was taken into custody on the 10th February.

The question was, whether the practice which used to prevail under which a defendant could not be brought up to this Court to be charged with a civil action when he was in custody on a criminal account had been altered in this respect by the stat. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22, which had abolished the Fleet Prison, and constituted the Queen's Bench Prison under the name of the Queen's Prison, the only prison for debtors, &c. The cases cited by Byles, Serjt. (Walsh v. Davies, 2 N.R. 245; Jones v. Danvers, 5 M. & W. 234; and Freeman v. Weston, 1 Bing. 221) were referred to, and it was submitted, on the part of the plaintiff, that the inference to be drawn from them was, that where the party was in the custody of the sheriff or other officer of the Court, or in the custody of an officer of any other court over which the Court had jurisdiction, the defendant might have been without difficulty charged in execution in the civil action. Now, as by the Act 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22, the Queen's Prison was the only prison for debtors, and to which the defendant must have been sent if originally taken in execution in this action, and the Court had now the power of directing the writ to the officer in whose custody the defendant in fact was, the reason which formerly prevailed no longer applied, and the proceedings which had been adopted were therefore regular.

Byles, Serjt. contra, submitted that this Court was in the same situation as the civil side of the Court of Queen's Bench was before the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22, which had no power of charging the defendant when in custody on criminal process; but the practice was in that Court, before the Act, to have had the defendant in such case brought up by a habeas corpus issued on the Crown side of the Court. Re John Taylor (3 East, 232.) That practice has not since been altered, and as it would have been irregular in the Court of Queen's Bench before the Act, so it must equally, it was submitted, be now for the Court of Common Pleas.

Maule, J.(a)—This is a writ of habeas corpus, which has been sued out of this court, in order that the defendant may be charged in execution at the suit of the plaintiff. The defendant is now, since the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22, in the custody of the same officer of the court he would have been if he had been taken in execution when at large. The defendant it appears is a prisoner under a sentence of imprisonment passed by the Court of Queen's Bench for a misdemeanor, and the question is whether he has been properly brought here by the writ of habeas corpus out of such custody. Before the statute 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22, the practice was, when the party was in the criminal custody of the Court of Queen's Bench, for the party to be brought up by a writ issued on the crown side of that court, in which alone the criminal jurisdiction of that Court resided. This statute does not alter the practice in that respect. I think it strange if this court should have a larger power than the civil side of the Court of Queen's Bench, but in fact this Court has not a greater power, and as that Court has not the power, the issuing of the writ here is irregular.

Cresswell, J.—I am of the same opinion.

Erle, J.—I found my judgment on the analogy to the practice of the Court of Queen's Bench before the statute. It was irregular before the statute to sue in such case the writ of habeas corpus out of the civil side of that court, and as this has not been altered by the statute, it must therefore be taken to be irregular to sue it out now in this court. Rule absolute.

Gilling v. Dugan.

A letter from the defendant, tending to prove a great part of the plaintiff's case, posted in Hampshire and received in Middlesex, and written in answer to a letter posted in Middlesex, is a sufficient compliance with an undertaking by the plaintiff to give material evidence in the county of Middlesex.

(a) Tindal, C. J. was absent, being engaged in the Privy Council.

Byles, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule obtained on behalf of defendant to enter a nonsuit pursuant to leave reserved at the trial, if the Court should be of opinion that the plaintiff had not satisfied an undertaking to give material evidence in the county of Middlesex. The action was for goods sold and delivered to the defendant by one Kerrison, an agent of the plaintiff; and the evidence offered at the trial was the following letter from the defendant to Johnson, the real plaintiff in the action, he being the purchaser of Gilling's goods and debts, &c.:—"I must plainly tell you again, I have no account with Mr. Gilling or you. The account is with Kerrison, as can be proved by his own letters to me. The account with Mr. Kerrison is under 40*l.* and if he will give me an order to pay you a bill at three months, I shall have no objection." This letter was posted in Hampshire, but received in Middlesex, and was in answer to a letter from Johnson demanding payment, which was posted in Middlesex. Linley v. Bates (2 C. & J. 669) was referred to.

The COURT, saying the letter proved the whole of the plaintiff's case except the agency, called on Shee, Serjt. in support of the rule, who referred to the case of Collins v. Jenkins (4 Bing. N. C. 225), and Curtis v. Drinkwater (2 B. & Ad. 169).

The COURT held the undertaking to be satisfied.

Rule discharged.

Re WALDRON.

The affidavit for the re-admission of an attorney must, in pursuance of the rule of Court, state the place of abode of the party applying during the last preceding year.

Byles, Serjt. applied for the re-admission of Mr. Waldron as an attorney, but as the affidavit had not, in compliance with the rule H. T. 6 W. 4, stated the place of abode, during the last preceding year.

Application was refused.

GERISH v. CHARTIER.

A contracted to build for the defendant some cottages, and the plaintiff supplied part of the work to complete them. In an action for the value of the work so supplied, A was called by the defendant, and proved that he the witness ordered the work of the plaintiff, and that on the balance of accounts between the defendant and himself, he had been more than paid for the work supplied. Held, that such evidence was admissible.

It appeared that the action was brought for fixing iron railing, and doing certain work to twelve cottages. The cottages were to be built by one Amos, a builder, and the defendant contended at the trial that the plaintiff's contract for the work was made with Amos, and not the defendant, and that therefore the defendant was not liable. To prove this, the defendant called Amos as a witness, who stated that he himself made the contract with the plaintiff, and that he, Amos, had received money from the defendant on account of the cottages. The witness, who had become a bankrupt after the work had been done, was then asked what was the state of the accounts between him and the defendant at the time of the bankruptcy, whether the balance was in his favour or against him? and the witness said it was against him by 150*l.* This evidence as to the state of the accounts was objected to on the part of the plaintiff, but received by the learned judge.

It was now submitted that the evidence was material and admissible, or even if not admissible, it was, though important, not indispensable, but that there was clearly sufficient evidence to support the verdict without it, and that the Court would not, therefore, grant a new trial, as, without such evidence, a verdict the other way would have been against evidence. As to this was cited Doe dem. Lord Teynham v. Tyler (6 Bing. 561), and Crease v. Barrett (1 C. M. & R. 933), where Parke, B. says, "The authority of Doe dem. Lord Teynham v. Tyler was quoted to shew that the Court have a power to refuse a new trial where evidence has been improperly rejected, if in their judgment the rejected evidence ought to have no effect, and there is enough to warrant the verdict against the party on whose behalf that evidence was offered, supposing it to have been admitted." Doe dem. Garrod v. Olley, (12 A. & E. 487), and De Rutzen v. Farr (4 A. & E. 53) were likewise referred to.

Shee, Serjt. in support of the rule, contended that the cottages were to be built for Chartier, the defendant, and that he alone gave the order to the plaintiff for the work; Amos, if present during the time the order was given, acting only as an assistant to give the defendant the benefit of his judgment. [Amos contracted to do this work for the defendant. The substance of his evidence is that he ordered it, and that the defendant has in fact paid him for it. You have to say that that evidence is not admissible.—Maule, J.]

The COURT said that they had no doubt the evidence was admissible; that although it might at first appear to a certain extent to be res inter alios acta, it was not in fact so; for that, as far as Amos had interfered, it was as agent for the defendant.

Rule discharged.

ELLIOTT v. ALLEN and OTHERS.

A local Act (5 Geo. 4, c. 125) provided for the appointment of overseers of the parish of St. Mary, Islington, and also that no action should be brought against any person "for any thing done in pursuance of that Act," before 21 days' notice of action. The 9 Geo. 4, c. 40, imposes certain duties on overseers in the case of a lunatic pauper. Held, that persons appointed overseers under the local Act, who had committed a trespass in mistakingly acting under the 9 Geo. 4, c. 40, without having pursued its directions, were not entitled to notice of action.

This was an action of trespass and false imprisonment against the overseers and other officers of the parish of St. Mary, Islington. The defendants, with the exception of Beavan, who had suffered judgment to go by default, pleaded, amongst other pleas, that the trespasses in the said declaration mentioned were acts, and each and every one thereof was an act done and committed by the said defendants, after the passing of a certain Act of Parliament made and passed in the fifth year of the reign of our Sovereign Lord King George the Fourth, entitled "An Act to Repeal several Acts for the Relief and Employment of the Poor of the Parish of St. Mary, Islington, in the county of Middlesex; for Lighting, and Watching, and preventing Nuisances and Annoyances therein; for Amending the Road from Highgate through Maiden-lane, and several other Roads in the said Parish, and for providing a Chapel of Ease and an additional Burying-ground for the same, and to make more effectual provisions in lieu thereof;" and also after the passing of a certain other Act of Parliament, made and passed in the session of Parliament held in the fifth and sixth years of the reign of our Lady the now Queen, entitled, "An Act to amend the Law relating to Double Costs, Notices of Action, Limitations of Action, and Pleas of the General Issue, under certain Acts of Parliament." And said defendants further say that the said trespasses in the said declaration mentioned were things, and each and every of the said trespasses was a thing done in pursuance of the Act of Parliament in this plea first above-mentioned, and that no notice of commencing this action was given to the clerk to the trustees in the said first Act mentioned, one calendar month before the commencing of the said action, pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, verification, &c.

To which plea the plaintiff replied, that the said trespasses in the declaration mentioned were not, nor were any of them things, nor was either of them a thing done in pursuance of the said Act of Parliament in the said last plea first mentioned in manner and form as in that plea alleged.

At the trial, before Tindal, C. J. at the Middlesex sittings after Easter Term, it appeared that the overseers had been informed by a letter from the chief clerk to the magistrates at Clerkenwell police court, that the state of mind of the plaintiff was such that the magistrate, Mr. Greenwood, thought it was a fit case for parochial interference, and required them to act under the Act 9 Geo. 4, c. 40, which is for the providing for the care and maintenance of pauper lunatics. The 38th section of that Act authorizes a justice, upon its being made known to him that any poor person is deemed to be insane, to require the overseers to bring such person before the justices for examination. The defendants, however, instead of following the requisites of the Act, caused the plaintiff to be taken to the workhouse, from whence he was afterwards brought before the magistrates, when plaintiff then appearing to be in a sound state of mind, no further step was taken, and he was dismissed. Two of the defendants were appointed overseers of the parish of St. Mary, Islington, under a local Act, 5 Geo. 4, c. 125, intituled "An Act to repeal several Acts for the Relief and Employment of the Poor of the Parish of Saint Mary, Islington, in the County of Middlesex; for Lighting, Watching, and preventing Nuisances and Annoyances therein; for amending the Road from Highgate through Maiden-lane, and several other Roads in the said Parish; and for providing a Chapel of Ease and an additional Burial ground for the same; and to make more effectual Provisions in lieu thereof." The 98th section of this Act enacts that no action or suit shall be commenced against any person or persons for any thing done in pursuance of this Act until twenty-one days notice shall be thereof given in writing to the clerk to the said trustees, nor after sufficient satisfaction or tender thereof hath been made to the party or parties aggrieved, nor after six calendar months next after the fact committed for which such action or suit shall be so brought; and all such actions or suits shall be laid and tried in the county or place where the cause of action shall have arisen, and that the defendant or defendants in such action or suit and every of them, may plead the general issue and give this Act and the special matter in evidence at any trial or trials which shall be had thereupon, and that the matter or thing for or on which such action or suit shall be brought was done in pursuance and by authority of this Act," &c.

The defendants at the trial, objected that they were entitled to notice under this section of the local Act. The learned judge, however, overruled this, and a verdict was found for the plaintiff for 400*l.* damages. A rule having been obtained in Trinity Term to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside, and instead thereof a nonsuit be entered, or why a new trial should not be had.

Talfourd, Serjt. now shewed cause, and contended that the defendants might and ought to have acted under the 9 Geo. 4, c. 40, but that they had not done so and were unable to justify under that Act. But that even if they had they were not entitled to notice, for the local Act had nothing whatever to do with the conduct of the defendants on the occasion in question. [ERLE, J.—How is this done in pursuance of the local Act?]

Shee and Byles, Serjts. (with whom was Warren) were then called on to support the rule.—It was urged that as the defendants were appointed overseers under the local Act, for whatever they did in discharge of their duty as overseers, whether such duty was imposed upon them by common law or statute, they were entitled to the notice required under the local Act. Here the 9 Geo. 4, c. 40, imposed certain duties upon overseers, and although it must be admitted the defendants had not pursued strictly the provisions of that Act, yet as they had acted bonâ fide, and honestly believing it to be in discharge of such duties which that Act had imposed, they were entitled to the protection which the local Act gave to them as overseers. It was therefore submitted that what was so done under the 9 Geo. 4, c. 40, was, in effect, done under the local Act. Hazeldine v. Grove (3 Q. B. 997) was strongly relied on. Shatwell v. Hall (2 Dowl. N. S. 567), and the opinion of Bayley, J. in Smith v. Shaw (10 B. & C. 277) were referred to.

MAULE, J.—I have no doubt that the meaning of the statute was that the defendants should be appointed and remain overseers just as overseers ordinarily were. There is nothing in the clause of the Act which makes them different from other overseers, nor could it be considered that it was intended to confer upon the overseers of St. Mary's, Islington, any privilege which did not belong to the overseers of other parishes. The case of Hazeldine v. Grove is not opposed to the case in the Exchequer of Shatwell v. Hall; what the Court of Queen's Bench decided was this; the Police Act, 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71 confers certain powers on the persons thereby appointed magistrates of the police courts, and provides that no action shall be brought against any person for any thing done in pursuance of that Act, or in the execution of the powers or authorities under it, unless a certain notice shall have been given; the Court decided that the latter, and not the former alternative applied, and that what the defendant did was in execution of such power and authority as was conferred on him by the Act. Such was therefore consistent with the judgment of the Court of Exchequer in Shatwell v. Hall, but the present would be inconsistent with that case were we here to hold the defendants entitled to the notice given by the local Act.

CRESSWELL, J. and ERLE, J. concurred.

The rule was afterwards argued upon the other grounds on which it had been obtained, viz. that the verdict was against evidence, and the damages were excessive, and was ultimately discharged on the plaintiff agreeing that the damages should be reduced to the sum of 200*l.* Rule discharged accordingly.

SHARPE, Public Officer, v. ASHBY.

Practice—Several pleas—Payment.

Channell, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why an order made by Cresswell, J. should not be set aside, and why the issue should not be set aside or amended, and the defendant be at liberty to plead the 4th and 5th pleas which had been delivered.

The plaintiff sued as the public officer of the National Provisional Bank of England, on a bill of exchange, of which the defendant was the acceptor. The 4th plea was to the effect that a bill was accepted by defendant for the drawer's accommodation, and lodged with the Banking Company for securing a debt to such company from certain parties there named, and that afterwards the bill declared on was given in lieu of the first bill, and that subsequently, with the assent of the banking company, the bill so lodged as security was paid, and the banking company then held the bill without any consideration. The 5th pleas was to the effect that the full amount of the bill had, before the commencement of the suit, been paid, satisfied and discharged to the banking company, and with their assent, to wit, by Walton the drawer, and other parties at his request. On the 27th of May, 1844, the pleas were delivered with the rule to plead several matters. On the 10th of June a summons was taken out by the plaintiff to strike out the 4th plea, on the ground that it ought not to stand together with the 5th plea, and that it was not an issuable plea. The 5th plea was also objected to as not being pleaded according to the abstract of pleas annexed, which was, 5thly, payment and satisfaction of the bill. The order of Cresswell, J. was, "I make no order of the summons of the 10th instant, the defendant undertaking to amend the last plea, and make a good plea in two days, otherwise I order the 4th plea to be struck out at the costs of the defendant." This order was dated 11th of June, and on the 13th the defendant delivered the 5th plea, amended by striking out the words "satisfied and discharged," after the word paid, and striking out also "and with their assent," and substituting an allegation that the banking company then accepted the same in full satisfaction and discharge as aforesaid. On the 18th of June the plaintiff delivered issue striking out the 4th plea, and introducing the 5th plea as amended. It was submitted, therefore, that the plaintiff had, by adopting the amended plea, treated it as satisfying the order of the learned judge, and had no right consequently to strike out the 4th plea.

The COURT said that the 5th plea ought to have been pleaded as a common plea of payment, and that if the payment was by a person whom the defendant had a right to adopt, it should have been pleaded as a payment by the defendant himself in the way of an ordinary plea of payment, according to the terms of the abstract. A rule was granted to shew cause why the fourth plea should not be restored on the fifth plea being pleaded in the terms of the abstract.

BOROUGH OF TOTNESS.

TOMS, Appellant v. CUMMING, Respondent.

Notice of objection.

The duplicate notice of objection required by the 6 Vict. c. 18, s. 100, to be delivered to the postmaster, and stamped by him, must be signed by the objector himself; a signing by an agent, in his presence, and at his request, is not sufficient. And, semble, that all notices of objection must be signed by the objector, and a signature by an agent is not sufficient.

The facts, as set forth in the case, were these. A claimant's name was objected to. The objector signed one notice, and a copy of it was made and signed with his name by another person, in his presence, and at his request. The two notices were taken to the postmaster, who transmitted the one signed by the objector to the party objected to in due course, and returned the copy stamped to the objector, by whom it was produced at the revision. But an objection being taken that the notice was not a duplicate within the meaning of the statute, the Revising Barrister held the notice of objection not to be sufficient, and allowed the vote. Against this decision the appeal was made, and other similar cases were consolidated with this one.

Kinglake, Serjt. for the appellant, contended that all that was required by the statute was that the notice of objection delivered to the party should be signed by the objector himself; it was not necessary that the one produced in the court should be so signed or worded, as in this case it was proved that a proper notice was served upon the party.

CRESSWELL, J.—The statute says only that if you produce a certain notice stamped by the postmaster, it shall be proof of service upon the party objected to; it is not evidence of the validity of the notice itself.

Kinglake, Serjt.—I contend that the objector must prove his notice, and he does so by proof that he signed a notice and took it to the postmaster, and he brings back a paper stamped which proves such service, and then he proves that the notice so served was a good notice of objection by evidence that the paper produced was a copy of that sent. He must sign the one served, but he may prove that it was a good notice by the production of a copy. Upon the larger question, whether the objector might not sign by an agent, he cited Schneider v. Norris (2 M. & S. 286).

Cockburn, Q.C. for the respondent, contended, 1st, that it was necessary that the objector should personally sign the notice; and, 2nd, that a copy which he did not sign was not such a duplicate as he is required to produce. On the first point he cited Hyde v. Johnson (2 Bing. N. C.), in which it was held that a letter written by the wife at the husband's request, and sent by him, was not a signing of an admission of a debt by him so as to take it out of the Statute of Limitations; and the very object of introducing in the late statute the words "signed by the party objecting," which were not in the former statute, was to set at rest doubts which had arisen upon the other. On the second point he contended that the Act expressly required the production of a duplicate of the notice delivered to the postmaster, and this was a copy, and not a duplicate.

Kinglake, Serjt. in reply.

TINDAL, C. J.—I am of opinion that the decision of the Revising Barrister was right. There are two questions in this. First, whether a notice of objection should be signed by the objector personally? Law, reason, and good sense require that it should be so signed. The party objected to has a right to be satisfied that the objection is bonâ fide, and to a remedy for his costs, if it be frivolous. The case of Hyde v. Johnson has settled the question of signature. Secondly, the provisions of the 100th section have not been complied with. They require the production of a duplicate of the notice delivered to the postmaster; the meaning of duplicate is, that it shall be the same in all essential particulars.

MAULE, J. was of the same opinion. Duplicates are things having the same operation, and indistinguishable as respects their essence.

CRESSWELL, J, and ERLE, J. concurred.

The house was of four stories, the apartments occupied by various tenants, each having the key of his own room and common access to the front door. The landlord did not occupy any part of the house. The Revising Barrister had admitted the vote.

AUSTIN (Appellant) v. —— (Respondent).

Practice.

Though the respondent does not appear the appellant must make out his case.

Gunning, for the appellant, stated that the respondent did not appear, and he prayed the judgment of the Court accordingly, under the provisions of the 6 Vict. c. 18, s. 64, which enacts that no appeal should be heard when the respondent does not appear unless notice be given. He was prepared to prove the notices.

By the COURT.—You must prove your case. It may be that the respondent considers the appeal too frivolous to require to be argued for him.

Gunning then proceeded with the case of

AUSTIN v. HARRIS.

The respondent was employed as a letter-carrier at Cambridge up to March 1843. By stat. 22 G. 3, c. 41, s. 1, no postmaster or person employed under him shall vote while so employed, or for twelve months afterwards. The revising barrister held that, having quitted the office before the 31st of July, the claimant was entitled to vote.

Gunning.—By 6 Vict. c. 18, s. 40, it is provided that the barrister shall expunge the name of any person not qualified on the 31st day of July, as if that were the day of election. Stat. 22 G. 3, c. 41, disqualifies a letter-carrier for one year after quitting his post: clearly, then, the respondent in this case was not entitled to be placed upon the register.

By the COURT.—We all agree that the party is not entitled.

The other case was argued, but the decision is to await the result of another case, in which the same point is raised.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Saturday, Jan. 11.

HEATH v. UNWIN.

A patent was obtained by the plaintiff for improvements in the manufacture of iron and steel, and among others, for the use of carburet of manganese in any process for the conversion of iron into cast steel. Carburet of manganese is formed by the fusion of black oxide of manganese with carbonaceous matter. The defendant had, in the course of the manufacture of cast steel, placed black oxide of manganese and carbonaceous matter together in the crucible. It was found by the jury that those substances would form, during the process, and before union with the steel, carburet of manganese. The defendant did not know that such formation would take place.

Held, that there was no infringement of the patent.

Held also, that if a party substitutes for a part of a patent invention a well-known chemical equivalent, that is a mere colourable variation, and an infringement of the patent; but where neither the world in general nor the defendant is aware that the substances substituted are equivalent, and where the defendant had no intention of imitating the patent invention, there is no infringement of the patent, either direct or indirect.

Jervis, Q.C. shewed cause last Term against a rule obtained by Martin, Q.C. to enter a verdict for the defendant, or for a new trial.

Martin, Q.C. Humfrey, and J. W. Smith, appeared in support of the rule.

The facts appear fully from the judgment itself.

JUDGMENT.

Mr BARON PARKE.—This case was argued before my brothers Alderson, Gurney, Rolfe, and myself, during the last Term, on shewing cause against a rule to enter a verdict, on the plea of Not Guilty, for the defendant, or for a new trial for misdirection.—As we are all of opinion that there was no infringement of the plaintiff's patent, and, consequently, that a verdict should be entered for the defendant, it becomes immaterial to consider the other questions raised. The plaintiff, in the year 1839, obtained a patent for certain improvements in the manufacture of iron and steel; and, in his specification, he mentions several; but the question arises upon the claim to the use of carburet of manganese, in any process whereby iron is converted into steel. The specification, after mentioning the use of oxide of manganese, in the description of another part of his invention, proceeds to describe the part of the process alleged to have been infringed in these terms:—"Lastly, I propose to make an improved quality of cast steel, by introducing into a crucible, bars of common blistered steel, broken as usual into fragments, or a mixture of cast and malleable iron, or malleable iron and carbonaceous matter along with from one to three per cent. of their weight of carburet of manganese, and exposing the crucible to the proper heat for melting the materials, &c.; but I do not claim the use of any such mixture of cast and malleable iron or malleable iron and carbonaceous matter as any part of my invention, but only the use of carburet of manganese, in any process for the conversion of iron into cast steel." And in summing up his claims, he states one of them, the third, to be the employment of oxide of manganese alone in the puddling of cast iron; and the fourth, the one in question, the employment of carburet of manganese in preparing an improved cast steel. This substance is metallic, and formed by the fusion of black oxide of manganese with carbonaceous matter. Upon the trial it appeared that the defendant never used carburet of manganese by putting any of that substance into the crucible, but he placed the black oxide and carbonaceous matter together in the crucible; and some scientific witnesses who were examined gave their opinion that these two substances would form, during the process of conversion, [illegible] with the [illegible] steel, [illegible] of fusion; and the jury found that [illegible], but also [illegible] quantity of carburet [illegible] would be less than 1 per cent. of the weight of the steel in the crucible. Upon these facts the question arose, whether the defendant had been guilty of an infringement of the plaintiff's patent. In order to decide this, we must first determine for what invention the patent, as explained by the specification, is taken out. It is not for the use of oxide of manganese in the melting of cast-steel, for carburet of manganese is expressly mentioned, and distinguished from oxide of manganese; nor could the patent for the use of the oxide have been supported, as that substance had been used long before in the process of melting steel. Nor is it for the use of oxide of manganese in any mode of combination with carbon generally. If it had been, it would have been liable to a similar objection, as oxide of manganese had been used in crucibles containing in their construction a quantity of carbonaceous matter, with a portion of which it would necessarily combine during the process. Nor is it for the use of the oxide with such a quantity of carbon as would deoxidise it and leave the manganese alone to operate upon the steel so that neither the quantity of the steel be altered, nor the crucibles destroyed by the oxide of manganese abstracting, as it otherwise would do, some quantity of carbon from them. The patent is obtained for the use of one peculiar combination of carbon and manganese—the metallic substance called carburet of manganese—and for the use of it in that state. The specification is expressly for the employment of carburet of manganese, and the mode of using it is by putting a certain quantity, by weight, of that substance in an unmelted state into the crucible. This being, in our opinion, the true construction of the specification, it is clear that the defendant has not directly infringed the plaintiff's patent, for he has never used that substance in the mode described in the specification. Then comes the question, whether he has indirectly infringed the patent by imitating and using the same process substantially, but making a colourable variation? Now there is no doubt, we think, if a defendant substitutes for a part of the plaintiff's invention some well-known equivalent, whether chemical or mechanical, he would probably be considered as only making a colourable variation. But he has not done so. It is quite clear, upon the evidence, that the defendant never meant to use the carburet of manganese at all; he certainly never knew, and there is no reason to suppose that prior to this investigation any one else knew, that the substance would be found in a state of fusion; and it is mere matter of speculative opinion (though after the verdict we must assume it to be a correct opinion amongst men of science) that it would; but it was clearly not ascertained, and still less was it a well-known fact. There was, therefore, no intention to imitate the patented invention, and we do not think the defendant can be considered to be guilty of any indirect infringement of it, if he did not intend to imitate at all. In this view of the case it becomes unnecessary to consider the other questions which were argued; and we all think the rule must be absolute to enter a verdict upon the first issue for the defendant.

The LORD CHIEF BARON.—As I was counsel in another cause which was similar to this, I have taken no part whatever in this in any stage.

Rule absolute.

HUBBARD v. PHILLIPS.

Attorney—Using plaintiff's name to bring a suit—Application by defendant that his attorney pay the costs.

Cleasby moved for a rule to shew cause why all proceedings in this case should not be stopped, and why the plaintiff's attorney should not pay all the defendant's costs.

The plaintiff's attorney had been retained by him in the suit of Hubbard v. Jones, which the plaintiff had settled by paying the whole of the defendant's costs. Nevertheless the attorney had proceeded in the action to judgment against the defendant, and had taken him in execution. Whilst the defendant Jones was thus in custody of the present defendant as sheriff, he was released by a party of Rebeccaites, and upon this the plaintiff's attorney brought an action against the sheriff, in the name of the plaintiff, as for an escape.

The plaintiff was applied to by the sheriff, and the affair explained. Hence the present application.

SMITH, qui tam, &c. v. BOND.

Semble, an attachment lies against one who assists another to destroy a judge's order, and it is not necessary to make the order a rule of court.

This was an action to recover penalties for gaming, which was tried in Trinity Term, 1843.

The defendant had obtained a judge's order calling on the plaintiff's attorney to deliver particulars of the plaintiff's residence; and the attorney had delivered [illegible] particulars of such residence an address with which the plaintiff furnished him. In fact, the plaintiff had taken lodgings with the very view of answering this application by referring to them as his place of abode, but he did not sleep there nor live there, though he paid rent, and had letters sent to him there.

Under these circumstances the defendant had applied to the Court for an attachment against the plaintiff for contempt of Court in contriving with his attorney to evade the judge's order for better particulars. The rule was drawn up on reading the affidavits, and on hearing the Master's report.

Lush now shewed cause against the rule upon two grounds; 1st, because the plaintiff was not the party called on by the judge's order to deliver particulars of residence; 2nd, because the judge's order had not been made a rule of Court.

Platt, Q. C. (Butt with him) was heard in support of the rule.

Pollock, C. B. was strongly of opinion, that attachment lies against all persons, especially parties who are suitors, for directly or indirectly interfering to prevent the process of the Court; and that there might be a contempt of Court by a disobedience to a judge's order, though that disobedience might be by mere non-feasance, and though the order had never been made a rule of Court. The rest of the Court seemed also of that opinion, but they gave no judgment upon it in this case; for the Court held, that even if they had the power to grant an attachment in this case, yet it was discretionary with them whether they would do so. And they refused, it appearing that the defendant had not been misled by the false particulars; and further, that no part of the sum due on the judgment had yet been discharged.

Rule discharged on payment of costs; to be deducted from those due to the plaintiff.

Monday, Jan. 13.

GOODLAKE v. FULLER.

Postponement of trial—Production of evidence.

This was an action for breach of promise of marriage, standing for trial this day.

Cockburn, Q. C. moved to postpone the trial, in order to afford an opportunity of filing a bill of discovery to compel the production of certain letters in the possession of the plaintiff.

Watson, Q.C. shewed cause.

Trial postponed until sittings after term.

DRAPER v. STANSFIELD.

Setting aside award.

Watson, Q. C. had obtained a rule to shew cause why an award should not be set aside, the arbitrator not having disposed of all the issues.

Hoggins shewed cause.

The question depending upon the meaning of an agreement entered into by the respective attorneys of the plaintiff and the defendant,

The COURT discharged the rule without costs, stating that they would not grant any rule for an attachment or for the payment of money, for the purpose of enforcing the award, the party to be at liberty to enforce it by action.

Case cited: Duckworth v. Harrison (4 M. & W. 432).

RANDALL v. WHITE.

Writ of trial—Pleading.

Addison had obtained a rule for judgment non obstante veredicto, on the ground that the plea was no answer to the action.

Charnock shewed cause.—This was a writ of trial before the sheriff; the rule was drawn up without any affidavit, and there was nothing before the Court to shew the issues. The plea was good after verdict.

PARKE, B.—It must be considered that the return to the writ of trial is in Court. As to the plea, the question is, whether a plea as to 3*l.* 9*s.* is an answer to an action for 20*l.*; nothing being stated as to the residue.

Rule made absolute.

PRINCE v. HOPEWELL.

Pleading.

This was an action against a merchant, carrying on business at St. Helena, for goods ordered by him when there, from the plaintiff residing in this country. The defendant, shortly after sending the order, and before the receipt of the goods, came to this country, when the present action was commenced. The defendant had been arrested, and was out on bail.

Humfrey moved for six months to plead; by which time information might be obtained from St. Helena as to the receipt of the goods, and whether they were according to order. [ALDERSON, B.—What you really seek to obtain is double the time now applied for; for after issue joined, you will be applying for a commission.] Such a delay was not the object sought, and the defendant would therefore consent to a commission going out before issue joined, and would undertake that no further commission should be applied for on behalf of his client.

Barstow, for plaintiff, acceded to this proposition.

It was then arranged that the defendant should have a week to plead such pleas as he might think requisite under the circumstances, pleading issuably.

PENNELL and OTHERS v. AUSTIN.

Pleading.

This was an action brought by assignees against defendant for money had and received to their use. Application had been made unsuccessfully at chambers for leave to plead, in addition to a plea of lien, a plea of set-off.

Humfrey having applied to the Court and obtained a rule.

Crowder, Q. C. (with whom Ball), now shewed cause.

PARKE, B.—Lien and set-off are quite different things.

Rule made absolute. Costs to be costs in the cause.

WILKINSON v. GREGS.

Writ of trial—Sealing.

Horn moved to set aside a writ of trial, and all subsequent proceedings, on the ground that the writ had not been sealed by the proper officer after it had been engrossed. (1 Chit. Ar. Pr. 294.)

PARKE, B.—The seal of "E. C." on the back of the parchment is quite sufficient.

It was then objected that the writ was directed to try the issue, there being three issues on the record.

Rule nisi on the latter ground.

CROWDE v. STUART.

Attorney—Payment of amount due on the record.

Ogle moved for a rule to shew cause why an attorney of this court should not pay the balance remaining due upon the record. The attorney had paid a part of the amount, and had promised to pay the remainder; but, having failed to do so, an application had been made to the plaintiff in the cause, for whom the attorney was supposed to have acted. An affidavit of the plaintiff was read, wherein he denied all knowledge of the transaction until the application had been made to him for payment.

Rule nisi to shew cause why the attorney should not pay the remainder of the amount and the costs of this application.

Tuesday, Jan. 14.

PETTY v. WALKER and IRONSIDE.

Certificate to give costs in trespass, under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, s. 2—Meaning of "immediate" in that section.

In this case, Corrie, for Pashley, on behalf of the plaintiff, shewed cause against a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the certificate of the under sheriff of York, given in this case, should not be set aside, and why the taxation of costs herein should not also be set aside. Defendant Ironside appeared in person.

The plaintiff had been tenant of Walker, one of the defendants, and Ironside, the other defendant, had, by direction of Walker, distrained for rent. The distress, however, was made before the rent was due, and accordingly the plaintiff brought trespass against the defendant, who suffered judgment to go by default, and the cause went before the sheriff of York, on a writ of inquiry to assess the damages. The jury gave a verdict for the defendant, damages one farthing. The under-sheriff, after receiving the verdict, was called away to attend on the judge of assize, and did not give his certificate on the instant, but afterwards, at his office, certified that the trespass was a malicious trespass.

The defendant obtained a rule nisi to set aside the certificate, on the ground that it was not given immediately after the verdict, within the words of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, s. 4.

Cur. adv. vult.

POLLOCK, C.B. now delivered the judgment of the Court. He said, that without interfering with any of the cases which interpret the words "immediately certify," in the stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, the Court would make the rule in this case absolute; for it was, at all events, the business of the functionary who should try questions in cases coming within that statute to certify, or to refuse to certify, or openly and publicly and clearly to state that he took time to consider, wherever in this case the affidavits on the one side assert, and those on the other do not negative, that the Master himself at first refused the certificate.

Rule absolute without costs.

BICKNELL v. WOOD.

New trial refused.

This case was tried at Guildhall on the 12th Dec. last, before Pollock, C.B. Verdict for plaintiff. Damages, 700*l.*

Jervis, Q.C. pursuant to leave reserved, moved to enter verdict for defendant, or for nonsuit or new trial.

The action was in assumpsit as a guarantee, which Jervis, Q.C. contended did not contain any sufficient statement of consideration; but the Court held it clearly did.

Rule refused.

WAIT v. SIMEON.

Motion on new facts to rescind a judge's order, which had been drawn up by the consent of the applicant.

Martin, Q. C. moved for a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why an order of Alderson, B. made in this cause should not be set aside on such terms as the Court would direct.

The plaintiff had brought an action against defendant on two cheques, both given in 1840.

The pleas were, gambling consideration.

The cause stood for trial on the 7th December last, and on the 6th defendant's attorney consented to an order of Alderson, B. for payment of debt and costs on the 14th December. On the 7th December, however, the defendant's attorney received information which furnished him with full evidence in support of the pleas. He would now be enabled to adduce no less than seven witnesses, who would swear to the character of the transaction. The plaintiff was merely a person put forward by one Davies, the keeper of a gambling-house, to whom the cheques had been given at a time when they were in partnership with him. In consequence of a quarrel with Davies, they would now expose the transaction. In pursuance of an order of Rolfe, B. the money had all been paid into court, and a stay of proceedings obtained.

Alderson, B.—You move on the same footing as if plaintiff had obtained a verdict. Rule nisi.

Surfling v. Ovingdon, Murphy, and Nurse.

This was an action of trespass for breaking and entering the apartments of the plaintiff. It had been tried before Pollock, C.B. Verdict for the plaintiff.

Chambers, on the part of the defendant Ovingdon, moved, pursuant to leave reserved, that the verdict should be entered for him, or for a new trial. He moved on the ground that Ovingdon was an officer of the Metropolitan Police force, acting in the execution of his duty, and that he had not received a months' notice of trial. He admitted that Ovingdon had committed an excess, inasmuch as he had acted without a warrant.

Attorney-General v. George Smith.
———— v. James Smith.
Trial at bar.

Thesiger, S. G. moved their lordships to name a day on which it would be convenient to them to have a trial at bar in this case.

Jervis suggested a question as to whether there could be a trial at bar on an information in this Court, 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Wm. 4, c. , s. 7.

The Court, after referring to the Act, said there was no doubt of it.

Parke, B.—You have a right to trial at bar. You apply under the Act to have it in vacation.

The Court named Thursday, 6th February.

Note.—Kelly moved in the same case, in a later part of the day, on the behalf of the defendants.

Playfair v. Musgrove.
New trial.

This case was tried on Friday, the 29th December last. Verdict for defendant on one issue.

Humfrey, pursuant to leave reserved, moved to enter verdict for plaintiff on that issue, for 10*l*.

The action was trespass, brought by plaintiff against the defendant, the sheriff, who had entered under a writ of fi. fa. and had for a long time kept possession.

There was a new assignment to a plea justifying the sheriff's entry and possession. The new assignment alleged a holding by the sheriff, after sale by him for an unreasonable time.

To this new assignment, the defendant had pleaded, denying the defendant's possession, and this was the issue in respect of which the present motion was made.

Humfrey said that the sale by the sheriff had not been followed up by any conveyance to the vendee, which was necessary to pass the property, and all plaintiff claimed was such possession as would entitle him to maintain trespass against a wrong-doer; the plea of leave and license from the alleged vendee had wholly failed. Rule nisi.

Belcher and Another v. Magnay and Another.
New Trial.

This was an action of trover by the assignees of a bankrupt, which had recently been tried before Pollock, C. B.

James now moved for a new trial, on the ground of the exclusion of evidence, or to reduce the damages from 100*l*. to nominal damages. No evidence had been adduced of the value of the goods alleged to have been converted. He now produced a bill of sale of the goods which had actually been sold. By some mistake, the declaration scarcely included any of these goods, and those which it did include were of very trifling value. The evidence complained of as excluded was that of Proudfoot, clerk to plaintiff's attorney. He was asked whether Mr. Belcher was the client of Lewis (the attorney on the record for the plaintiffs); he answered, "No!" James would then have asked him whether Mr. Belcher had not frequently protested against the action being brought? The Judge prevented the question, on the ground of public policy, the communication being one between attorney and client.

Pollock, C. B.—It was spoken with reference to the action; Belcher is a necessary party on the record. The case is one, as it were, of a dispute between partners, some insisting, others contending against bringing an action.

Alderson, B.—These are confidential communications, which are necessary to the conduct of the suit. How can this be one, when its object was to prevent a suit from being brought? Consider whether this was a confidential communication.

Parke, B.—The doubt on my mind is, whether Lewis, though on the record attorney for the plaintiff, is to be regarded as really the plaintiff's attorney. Rule nisi.

Stapleton v. Baker.
Motion to enter nominal damages.

This case was tried before Pollock, C.B. at Guildhall, on the 11th of December last; verdict for the plaintiff.

Martin, Q.C. moved to enter nominal damages for plaintiff. It was an action of assumpsit for having dyed a silk dress instead of cleaning it.

The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, but would not assess any damages.

Cases cited: 1 Taunt. 121; 1 Q. B. 656, Exch. Ch. Rule nisi.

Shermori v. Ayliffnn.
New trial.

This case was tried before Pollock, C.B. at the sittings after last term for Middlesex; verdict for the plaintiff.

Cockburn, Q.C. moved, pursuant to leave received, to enter verdict for defendant.

It was an action of assumpsit on an I O U for 1,486*l*. The defendant had settled accounts between defendant's father and plaintiff, and had given this I O U for the balance. There was no evidence of consideration for the promise. Rule nisi.

Attorney-General v. G. Smith.
Attorney-General v. J. Smith
Information—Application for particulars setting forth times and occasions of offences charged.

This was an information for penalties alleged to have been incurred by the defendant in each suit for offences against the Distillers' Act. Each information contained six counts, five charging different modes in which the alleged penalties had been incurred, and the sixth claiming duties alleged to have been not paid.

Kelly, Q.C. applied for particulars of the times, modes, and occasions on which these penalties had been incurred, and the duties become due.

The Chief Baron interrupted Kelly in the course of his application, requiring him, in the first instance, to shew to the Court that they had power to entertain an application of this sort in the case of a suit at the instance of the Crown. It had been entertained in several cases, and rules nisi had been granted; but these rules had always led to compromises, and the power of the Court had never been decided on.

Cases cited: Rex v. Cowl (3 N. & E.); Attorney-General v. Lambert (5 Price, 386).

The Chief Baron admitted that Kelly had produced authorities enough to shew that the question should be entertained; but he inquired if application had been made to the law officers to grant what was now sought for. On learning that it had not, the Court ordered the case to stand over till the application had been made.

Case to stand over, the affidavits to be filed.

Note.—The affidavits of the defendants expressly negatived all knowledge, nay, all suspicion even, of the charge against them.

Baildon v. Walters.
New Trial—Statute of limitations.

This case had been tried before Pollock, C. B. on the 30th of November last. Verdict for the plaintiff, damages 300*l*.

Humfrey, by leave reserved, moved to enter a nonsuit, or for a new trial.

This was an action of assumpsit by plaintiff as executor. Promises laid to the executor.

Plea, Statute of Limitations.

The only matter to take the case out of the statute was, an answer of the defendant in Chancery, at the suit of the present plaintiff, for discovery of payments of interest in respect of the present debt, where he admitted the fact of money having passed from testator to him, and admitted payments from time to time to the testator, after the rate of interest in respect of the sum which had so passed; but alleged that the principal had been given him, and that these payments were made simply by way of annuity.

The Lord Chief Baron left it to the jury to put all these facts together, and say whether the money had not been lent, not given; and whether the payments had not been payments of interest in respect of the money which had passed, and not payments by way of annuity.

Other evidence besides this answer in Chancery was adduced at the trial, viz. evidence of an account stated between the testatrix and the defendant.

Humfrey contended there was no evidence to go to the jury. The Lord Chief Baron should himself have construed the answer, and pronounced whether it was an admission sufficient to satisfy the statute of limitations. He contended that, according to the cases, the only proof of payment of interest founded on an acknowledgment must be an acknowledgment in writing of a payment quâ payment of interest.—(Willis v. Newal, 3 Y. & Jer.; Chitty on Contracts, p. 819; Baily v. Ashton, 12 N. & S.; Mager v. Oder, decided in 1841; Mills v. Foulkes, 5 B. N. C.; Benan v. Geethin, 3 Q. B.)

The Court seemed disposed to question the law of those cases which decided as Humfrey laid down.

Humfrey further argued, that an answer in Chancery was not such an acknowledgment as the statute required. It must be an acknowledgment made as such.

The Court said, the answer was not used as an acknowledgment importing a promise, but as an acknowledgment of something which did so; viz. a previous payment of interest; a previous voluntary act.

Thirdly, Humfrey moved, on the ground that the answer in Chancery itself was not produced at the trial, but only a copy thereof.

Rule nisi on all points.

Stroud v. Cooper.
Direction by arbitrator to enter verdict for a given amount may be disregarded, if it be plainly shewn that this sum is stated by him as if in an account between the parties, independently of allowances which elsewhere appear and reduce the sum actually due to a balance also appearing upon his certificate, and stated to be all that is due.

This case was tried at Guildhall, in the Sitting after last Term, and verdict had been taken for plaintiff, subject to certificate of arbitrator.

Lush moved to set aside the certificate, on the ground that the sum for which it directed the verdict to be entered for the plaintiff was larger than the plaintiff actually claimed.

But the Court held that it was quite clear what the arbitrator had meant. He had merely therein stated what was the gross amount which at any time had been due from the plaintiff. The officer might disregard this direction, and enter verdict for what in the result, as shewn by the arbitrator after all credits given, was due to the plaintiff. The arbitrator's intention was quite clear, and he had merely shewn the process by which he had arrived at the sum by him ultimately found due to plaintiff, viz. 29*l*. Rule discharged.

Wednesday, Jan. 15.

Woodroff v. Fiddes.
Service of notice of trial.

In this case defendant had pleaded in person, stating in his plea that he lived at Ravenscroft Villa, Hammersmith. Notice of trial had been delivered there to a person who stated herself to be his servant; that her master did not then reside there; she did not know where he was, but she would have it forwarded to him. The notice had also been offered to his known attorney, who refused to take it; but it did not appear that any further exertion had been made to discover his present residence.

Francillon moved that this should be deemed a sufficient service.

The Court directed that notice of trial should be served upon the attorney; also at the Villa, and in addition put up in the office, as the ground for a future application.

Miller v. Mullins.
Evidence.

Cockburn, Q.C. applied for leave to reserve the right of making a motion for a new trial if the parties should not be able to effect an arrangement now in progress. The point in question was, whether, in an action brought by assignees, the evidence of the bankrupt was admissible to prove the petitioning creditor's debt. At the trial, the Lord Chief Baron had objected to receive it. Leave granted.

Haggis v. Baker.
Setting aside award.

The cause and all matters in dispute between the parties had been referred to arbitration.

Butt, on behalf of defendant, moved to set aside the award on the following grounds:—

1st. That the arbitrator had improperly received certain matters as evidence, knowing such evidence to be inadmissible.

2nd. As to the sum of 600*l*. that the arbitrator had refused to go into the consideration thereof, as not being one of the matters in the account before him.

An affidavit was read—"That the arbitrator had decided upon receiving the evidence objected to, stating that the strict rules of law were not applicable in cases of arbitration." It did not directly state that the said sum of 600*l*. was a matter in difference between the parties.

Rule nisi on the first ground.

DOE dem. FLIGHT v. ROE.

Affidavit of service of declartion in ejectment must distinctly state that rent was in arrear.

Yarnold moved for judgment against the casual ejector, under the 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, s. 2. The premises were abandoned by the tenant of the lessor; the lessor was dead; the rent was in arrear 39*l.*; the premises shut up and abandoned, and a copy of the declaration had been placed on the door.

PARKE, B.—Does your affidavit swear distinctly that half a year's rent was due? It does not.

By the COURT.—Then you are not entitled.

Rule refused.

Evidence.

Charnock moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict in this cause (tried before the sheriff) should not be set aside, and a new trial had, on the ground that the verdict was against evidence, and that evidence had been improperly rejected. An account, receipted, striking a balance, was admissible in evidence without a stamp. Two documents had been tendered, the one a bill for 5*l.* for a certain article, with an acknowledgment of payment underwritten; the other, a bill for a larger amount, with several sums of 2*l.* and one sum of 10*l.* placed to the credit of the defendant, in the hand-writing of the plaintiff. The first document the sheriff had rejected; the other he had received as to all the sums of 2*l.* but rejected as to the sum of 10*l.* (Brooks v. Davis, 2 C. & P. 186; Wright v. Shawcross, 2 B. & Al. 501.)

PARKE, B.—One of these being expressly a receipt for the amount of the bill, without reference to any antecedent matter, was properly rejected; but when an account is put in with debits on the one side and credits on the other, it is admissible. Rule nisi.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Saturday.

HEATH v. UNWIN.—PARKE, B. delivered the judgment of the Court that a verdict should be entered for plaintiff, on the issue on the first plea.

EGLINTOUN v. BUCK.—Jerris, Q.C. applied to enter a nonsuit, reserved, or verdict for defendant by leave. The Court ordered the question to be turned into a special case.

ARTHUR v. DARTCH.—Lush moved to set aside the verdict for plaintiff, and to enter a nonsuit.

Rule nisi.

BAIIDON v. WALKER.—Jerris, Q.C. moved to increase the damages by 32*l.* 17s. 7d. by leave reserved. Rule nisi.

After disposing of the above cases, the Court took those in the Peremptory Paper.

JONES v. EVANS.—Rule discharged; no one appeared to support it.

KILBURNE v. KILBURNE.—Cur. adv. vult.

Monday.

HAWLEY v. GILBERT.—Hill moved for a rule to shew cause why verdict for plaintiff should not be set aside and a new trial had, the verdict being against the weight of evidence. Rule nisi.

CLARENCE RAILWAY COMPANY v. GREAT NORTH OF ENGLAND, CLARENCE, AND HARTLEPOOL RAILWAY COMPANY.—Tomlinson applied to have a day named for the hearing of this cause. To stand first on list for Monday.

CLARK v. WELSH and OTHERS.—Humfrey moved for judgment against the casual ejector.

Rule granted.

CHAMBERS v. SALES.— ——— moved for a rule, calling on an attorney of this Court to shew cause why he should not pay the sum of 10*l.* 4s. costs in pursuance of an order entered into before a judge at chambers. Rule nisi.

ROYLE v. BRANDON.—Kennedy moved for a rule for a new trial on the grounds of misdirection and improper admission of evidence. Rule nisi.

SKINNER v. HARDEN.—Crowder, Q. C. moved for a rule for a new trial on the ground of misdirection, or to shew cause why the damages should not be reduced. Rule nisi to reduce damages.

PARNELL v. WILLIAMS AND ANOTHER.—Knowles, Q. C. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict for the plaintiff should not be set aside, as being against evidence, and a new trial had, on the ground of misdirection.

Rule nisi for verdict against evidence.

BELCHER v. MAGNAY AND OTHERS.—In this cause the defendants had severed in their pleas; a verdict had been given against all of them, and the Lord Chief Baron had reserved leave to move to enter a verdict for some of the defendants, on the ground that certain evidence given was inadmissible as against them. Jervis, Q. C. now moved accordingly, or for a new trial, or for judgment non obstante veredicto.

Rule nisi to shew cause why there should not be a new trial on the ground of the improper reception of evidence as against the sheriff (a defendant in the suit).

ATKINSON v. CLARK.—It was moved to set aside the verdict for plaintiff, and to enter a nonsuit, by leave of the sheriff of Middlesex, before whom the cause was tried. Rule nisi.

LOCKIER v. ENGLAND.—Arnold moved for a new trial, the verdict being against evidence.

Rule nisi.

ATHERLEY v. GREEN.—Simon moved to make absolute a rule for an attachment for non-payment of money under an award. No cause had been shewn.

Rule absolute.

DAVEY v. WARNE.—Humfrey moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict for the defendant should not be set aside, and a new trial had, on the ground of misdirection, or why the plaintiff should not have judgment non obstante veredicto.

Rule nisi.

Wednesday.

MOADE v. RAPHAEL.—Bagley moved for a rule to shew cause why the trial had before the sheriff of Middlesex should not be set aside for irregularity.

Rule nisi.

GARBUTT v. BROWN AND ANOTHER.—Corrie moved to set aside an order of Mr. Baron Rolfe, "that upon payment of debt without costs all further proceedings should be stayed." Rule nisi.

NEWALL v. WEBSTER.—The Solicitor-General moved for a rule to shew cause why a nonsuit should not be entered, leave having been reserved for that purpose, or why there should not be a new trial on the ground of misdirection. Cases cited: Rex v. Wheeler (2 B. & Ald. 350-2); Hall v. Cooke (Webster's Pat. Cas. 100); Brunton v. Hawkes (4 B. & Ald. 541); Lewis v. Davis (3 Car. & P. 502).

Rule nisi.

RICHARDS v. MACEY.—At the trial of this cause before the Lord Chief Baron, a bill of exceptions had been tendered by Jerris, Q. C. who now waived the bill of exceptions, and moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside, and a new trial had, on the ground of misdirection. The COURT took time to look over his lordship's notes; leave having been reserved to apply to amend the pleas. Martin, Q. C. now applied. Leave granted.

COOK v. STRATFORD.—Crowder, Q. C. moved for a rule to shew cause why the Master's alterations should not be set aside for irregularity, or the taxation reviewed. Rule nisi.

WHITMORE v. HIND.—Martin, Q. C. moved for a rule to shew cause why there should not be a new trial on the ground of misdirection. Rule nisi.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. BRYAN.—Chambers moved for a rule to shew cause why there should not be a new trial on the ground of the exclusion of evidence. Cited, 1 Phil. on Ev. 281, 7 edit.; Hardy's case, 24 St. Tr.; Watson's case, 1 Gur. Notes; 2 How. St. Tr. 178.

BELCHER v. MAGNAY and OTHERS.—Humfrey suggested that in case of a new trial in this cause, he should not be precluded from shewing that the verdict in favour of Savage was contrary to evidence.

Acceded to.

HANCOCK v. WATERS.—Edwards moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside, and a new trial had. The cause had been tried before the sheriff of Carmarthen, in the summer of 1843, but the present application was made upon arrangement between the parties. POLLOCK, C. B.—The parties are too late; the Court cannot take notice of this arrangement between them.

CURLEWIS v. CORRY.—Bull had obtained a rule nisi for a special jury. James shewed cause.

Rule absolute, plaintiff to have judgment of the term; the costs of the rule and of this application (if any) to be paid by the plaintiff.

DOE dem. ROBERTS v. ROE.—Welsby moved for a rule to shew cause why an order of Mr. Baron Rolfe for setting aside a judgment against the casual ejector should not be amended as to the terms upon which it was set aside, viz. with costs. Rule nisi.

HOPKINS v. WEAVER.—Carrow moved for a rule to shew cause why a nonsuit should not be set aside, and a new trial had, and if necessary, why an amendment should not be made in the writ of trial.

Rule nisi on payment of costs.

WHITWORTH v. LLEWELLYN.—Jervis, Q. C. moved for a rule to shew cause why there should not be a new trial, on the ground of the improper admission of evidence. (Cosh v. Taylor, 8 L. J. K. B. (Old Series) 262.) Rule refused.

FAVRE v. BRUN.—Lane moved for a rule to shew cause why the bail should not pay a further sum of 36*l.* before an execution should be entered on the bail-piece. [ALDERSON, B.—Would not this exceed double the amount mentioned in the order for arrest?] It would. Case cited: Van Sandau v. Nash (2 Dow. P. C. 767; 10 Bing. 329; 3 M. & Scott, 834, S. C.)

Rule refused.

BAIL COURT.

Monday, Jan. 13.

(Before Mr. Justice WILLIAMS.)

Re JOHN BROWN.

Motion to quash a coroner's inquisition for defects apparent on its face.

Addison moved for a rule nisi to quash an inquisition taken on the view of the body of one John Brown, who met with his death by a concussion of trains on the Newcastle and Darlington Junction Railway, on the following grounds:—

1st. That the inquisition does not state that the party died of the wound received.

2nd. That it does not shew with sufficient certainty how the death arose.

3rd. That the engine upon which the deodand is assessed is stated to be the property of John Williams and others, whereas the full names of all the proprietors should have been stated. Rule nisi.

Tuesday, Jan. 14.

Ex parte T. CRAWFORD.

Application to compel the master of an articled clerk to make and sign the answers preliminary to the clerk's examination.

Hoggins moved on behalf of the above gentleman for a rule calling upon Mr. T. W. Lee to sign the usual answers to the questions proposed by the examiners forthwith, and that in default thereof Mr. Crawford may be permitted to present himself for examination without such questions and answers being filed, and that in the meantime he should be at liberty to go before the examiners to be examined.

This rule was moved in consequence of the master of Mr. Crawford, who is an articled clerk, refusing to make and sign the answers to the questions put by the examiners preliminary to the clerk's examination.

Rule nisi.

REG v. KNOWLES.

Ex parte STONES.

Quo warranto to a town councillor, to shew by what right he fills the office.

Cowling moved, on behalf of a Mr. Stones for a rule calling on Mr. Knowles to shew cause why a quo warranto should not issue, commanding him to shew by what right he fills the office of town councillor of the borough of Bolton.

It appeared on affidavits, that the borough of Bolton, which has recently had a charter of incorporation granted to it, is divided into six wards, having six councillors for each ward, two of whom are elected annually; that on the 1st of November last (on which day the municipal elections take place), there were four candidates for one of the wards of the borough, named West ward; that the names of the candidates were Slater, Knowles, Stones, and Cooper; that the alderman of the ward (with the two assessors) declared the number of votes to be as follows: Slater, 271, Knowles 258, Stones 257, and Cooper 246, whereupon the two first were declared duly elected (Knowles having a majority of one over Stones); that amongst the voting papers for Knowles were found those of four persons of the names of Epey, Hibbert, Hicks, and Richardson, who all made affidavits of having in fact voted on the other side (for the two last candidates), and that some persons must have voted in their names, there being no other persons of the same names and descriptions as themselves: that two persons voted for the two first candidates in the names of Thornton and Robinson, who in fact did not vote at all. (These bad votes would give Stones a majority over Knowles of several votes. Rule nisi.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF BUCKINGHAMSHIRE.

Certiorari to remove an order of bastardy into this court, with the view to quashing the same for defects apparent on its face.

Archbold moved for a certiorari to remove an order of bastardy into this court with the view to quashing the same for the following defects, viz.

1st. That the order does not shew that the application by the mother was to a justice at a petty sessions for the division.

2nd. That it does not state that the child was born within six months before the passing of the Act, but merely that it was born within twelve months prior to the application.

3rd. That it does not state that the original application was to a justice for the county, but merely that he was acting for the county.

4th. That there is no statement of any complaint having been made.

5th. That there is no statement of the time of the birth of the child.

6th. That the order states that an order was applied for, without stating for what the order was applied, the 2nd section providing that the mother may make application for a summons to be served, &c. and saying nothing about any order.

7th. That the order does not state the evidence of the mother, nor that in corroboration.

8th. That the order does not state that the evidence was taken upon oath. Rule nisi.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF LANCASHIRE.

Re W. S. RUTTER, Esq.

Certiorari to bring up an order of sessions.

Cowling moved for a certiorari to remove into this court an order of sessions directing the treasurer of the county of Lancaster to pay to Mr. Rutter, one of the county coroners, the sum of 129*l.* for inquests holden by him before the passing of the late Coroners' Act, 6 Vict. c. 12, s. 1. In this case a doubt had arisen as to whether or not the coroner for the county is entitled to the above fees which were ordered in respect of 94 inquests on persons who had received the causes of their deaths in Manchester and Bolton, but who had died within the county. THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

No news has reached us during the week relative to Legislation projected.

BILLS FOR THE ENSUING SESSION.—Towards the close of the last session a number of bills were ordered to be printed for consideration, with the view of affording business at an early period of the next session, in order to preclude the objections which have for several years been made, that many measures were delayed until the session had far advanced. There are three bills in respect to railways, joint-stock companies, and lands, which have for their object an uniformity of practice in the three matters. The bills are entitled "Railway Clauses Consolidation," "Companies Clauses Consolidation," and "Lands Clauses Consolidation." These three bills are to bring into consolidation the laws relating to the objects mentioned, so that one law may prevail, and those appointed to administer the laws on the several branches have their attention directed to the matters under consideration without, as now exists, being called upon to refer to several statutes having reference to the same subjects. The medical bill, which has been so much discussed by the profession, stands for consideration, as also the measure relating to the appointment of clerks and other officers of petty sessions. The other bills are the Mines Resgistration and the Field Gardens: the object of the former is to give to the Board of Trade a general power over all mines, which are to be registered and subjected to the superintendence of the Board, in order to prevent the useless expenditure of fortunes on reckless speculations: and the purport of the latter to obtain field gardens for labourers, with the view of benefiting their conditions. These bills, and one to consolidate parochial settlements, stand for consideration in the House of Commons, and are expected to be brought forward at an early period of the ensuing session.—Times.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

SOME comments on the able and interesting report on the Bill for regulating the fees of Clerks of Petty Sessions, which we published at length last week, will be found among the leading articles.

It will be seen by reference to the advertisements of new publications in to-day's LAW TIMES, that Mr. SYMONS, whose valuable commentaries upon Magistrates' Law are so well known to the readers of the LAW TIMES, is, as we intimated last week, preparing a series of Forms in Bastardy which shall be free from the objections that have lately proved so fatal to others.

These will appear in three shapes.

First, as an Appendix to Bittleston and Symons's Reports of Magistrates' Cases to be bound with the first volume of that work.

Second, as a distinct publication for the use of those who will not so receive it, and to them also it will be transmitted stamped, if desired.

Thirdly, in SHEETS, for use, not for reference, which may be had either by the dozen, quire, or the hundred, as ordered. But it would be convenient if orders for these were sent at once, that the publisher might regulate the printing.

The following forms are in the press and the others are almost ready, namely:—

- Informations before Birth.
- Informations after Birth.
- Summonses to the Father.
- Ditto for Witnesses to give Evidence.
- Orders.
- Notices of Appeal.

The Informations may also be had in Books.

A complete series of Magistrates' and Poor Law Forms is in preparation.

EVIDENCE ON APPEALS AGAINST ORDERS OF BASTARDY.

THE bastardy clauses of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, continue to give rise to great doubt and difficulty. The poor law department of legislation is peculiarly infelicitous in the art of utterance. Scarcely is there a Poor Law Act which is throughout intelligible.

It is to that part of section 3 which relates to the evidence of the mothers of bastard children that we desire to draw attention. It directs that the "justices in such petty sessions shall hear the evidence of such woman, and such other evidence as she may produce," &c. The 4th section then gives appeal to the putative father from the decision of the petty session: "to the General Quarter Sessions of the Peace;" but no provision is there made for examining the mother, as in section 3.

A correspondent, whose letter appeared in the LAW TIMES of last week, states, that the Quarter Sessions for the East-Riding of Yorkshire, at the Epiphany sessions, after a lengthened argument, decided that the mother could not be examined on the hearing of the appeal, and accordingly quashed the order! The same view has, we hear, been broached elsewhere.

This conclusion appears to proceed upon the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, s. 1, which, after declaring that interest in a suit, &c. or criminality on the part of a witness, shall not render the evidence of such person inadmissible, goes on to provide that the Act "shall not render competent any party to any suit, action, or proceeding individually named in the record." Now it was the object of this Act not to exclude, but to enlarge the admissibility of evidence; the first words of the preamble being—"Whereas the inquiry after Truth in Courts of Justice is often obstructed by Incapacities created by the present Law," &c. Most unquestionably, therefore, it cannot be the effect of the Act to exclude any evidence previously admissible: the proviso itself goes no further than to say that the Act shall not "render competent any party," &c. and certainly does not render any one incompetent who was competent before.

From the origin of bastardy law to this time, we find by uniform practice, no less than by express provision, the evidence of the mother has been receivable in the affiliation of a bastard child. In Burn's Justice of the Peace, vol. 1, p. 383, edit. 1845, it is said, under title "Bastard," "the mother's testimony, if living, is nearly always resorted to." In Rex v. Reading (2 Sess. Cases, 175), the mother, a married woman, on the appeal against an order of bastardy, was allowed to give evidence of facts of incontinency towards her husband. This case was in 1733. In the case of Rex v. Clayton (3 East, 58) the evidence of the mother taken before two justices was put in after her death, and held admissible at the appeal to the Quarter Sessions, and that case was based upon the authority of a similar judgment in Rex. v. Ravenstone (5 T. R. 373). The statutes have equally upheld the same doctrine. The 18 Eliz. c. 3, gives power to two or more justices not only to hear the evidence of the mother, but to compel her to give it. See Ex parte Martin (6 Barn. & Cr. 83, per Abbott, C. J.). The 6 Geo. 2, c 31 provides likewise that the mother's evidence be taken. The 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 72, impliedly directs her evidence to be taken at the quarter sessions. According to that statute, the original order was to be made "after hearing both parties" at the General Quarter Sessions, and this was analogous(a) to the appeal clause under the new Act; and yet orders were constantly made (till the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 85, vested this power in the petty sessions) upon the examination of the mother, corroborated by other testimony in some material particular, as the section required it should be. (See Rex v. Read, 9 Ad. & Ell. 619.) Thus, whether at the original adjudication, or at the subsequent appeal, the practice has uniformly been to receive the mother's evidence under all stages of the law.

We will venture to say that had not the new Act made any express provision that the mother's evidence should be received at the petty sessions, no doubt would ever have arisen as to its admissibility on appeal.

What is the meaning of an appeal? Is it not in these cases its object to test the sufficiency of the evidence on which an order is made? If so, how can that be done without examining the same witnesses? And what witness can speak to the paternity of her own child but the mother? It is a clear matter of inference that the provision for taking the mother's evidence for the original order extends to the hearing of an appeal against that order. This is so, no less by law than by reason.

It is a plain and well-established rule for the construction of statutes, that nothing shall be inferred which is repugnant to the plain intention of the Legislature. (Edmonds v. Lawley, 6 M. & W. 289.) It has also been expressly ruled by the highest court in the land (the House of Lords), that "where a statute, expressive as to some points, is silent as to the others, usage may well supply the defect, if not inconsistent with express directions of the statute." (Dunbar Magistrates v. Roxbury, 3 Clark & Fin. 335.) Where also some enacting clauses are more expressive than others, the Courts will give extensive effect to them, if such, from a view of the whole statute, appear to have been its intention. (Doe dem. Bywater v. Brandling, 7 B. & Cr. 643.)

These rules are clearly applicable to this case. The usage is undoubted; the intent of the statute cannot be questioned, for the power of appeal would be nullified were the objection to prevail; nor is there any thing expressed in the statute from the beginning to the end which is in the least inconsistent with the admission of the evidence of the mother on appeal, but exactly the reverse; it would be repugnant to the obvious spirit of the Act, were it excluded.

We are only at a loss to conceive how the question ever arose. As to the report that Mr. Archbold entertains an opinion of the inadmissibility of the evidence, we regard it as a mistake. Mr. Archbold is assuredly not among the number of the quacks who are mischievously busy in misleading their dupes on this and other points of parochial law.

BASTARDY FORMS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—As to the bastardy orders, with reference to the communication from your correspondent from the West-Riding of York, in your's of Saturday last, I beg to state there was an appeal against an order at the last Suffolk Sessions at Ipswich, and it was quashed on the ground that it did not state that the evidence was taken on oath, and therefore that the magistrates were acting upon illegal evidence; this form was not Mr. Lumley's, but the same objection may be raised upon his also. Having to attend our magistrates' meeting this morning, and being aware that an order would be applied for, I was bold enough to draw up a form of an order, and get a few printed off, one of which I inclose.

I cannot flatter myself that the ingenuity of counsel may not find some objections to it, but it certainly states upon the face of it, the omissions mentioned by your Yorkshire correspondents, in four or five of the objections.

I have also read with interest the remarks in your paper as to chargeability under orders of removal. In all orders my plan is very simple; I take the examination of the relieving officer, and make him state the actual relief given, including some small matter of relief, on the morning the orders are made, by which means the paupers are, as they were under the old law, actually chargeable at the time of making the order.

I think the certificate in nine cases out of ten only misleads.

These discussions clearly shew the great use of your paper in these practical matters, and I hope all your readers who can will inform us what other objections have been taken to these bastardy orders.

I am, yours, &c.

JOHN MARRIOTT.

Stowmarket, Jan. 13, 1845.

Suffolk, to wit. } At a petty session of the peace, holden in and for the division of the hundred of Stow, in the county of Suffolk, at the King's Arms Inn, at Stowmarket, in the division of the hundred and county aforesaid, on the day of in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty before us her Majesty's justices of the peace for the said county, and acting in and for the said division of the said hundred.

Whereas at in the said division of the hundred and county aforesaid single-woman, residing at day of within the said division of the hundred aforesaid, did on the day of one thousand eight hundred and forty go and make oath before one of her Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the said county, and usually acting in and for the said division of the hundred aforesaid, that she had been delivered of a bastard child on the day of 184 and after the passing of a certain Act of Parliament made and passed in the 7th and 8th years of the reign of her Majesty Queen Victoria, intituled "An Act for the further amendment of the Laws relating to the Poor in England," and further on her oath alleged that of was the father of the said bastard child. And the said at the time and place aforesaid, being within twelve months from the birth of the said bastard child, also made an application to the said justice for a summons to be served upon the said and the said justice thereupon issued his summons to the said to appear at a petty sessions to be holden on this day for the said division of the hundred aforesaid, to answer the complaint of the said touching the premises.

And whereas it hath been duly proved before us the said justices upon oath, that the said summons was served on the said by leaving the same at his last place of abode, six days at least before the day of the said petty session.

And whereas the said hath appeared before us the said justices in pursuance of such summons.

And whereas the said hath now applied to us the said justices at our petty sessions, held as aforesaid on this day, being within the space of forty days from the service of the summons after the birth of the said bastard child, for an order upon the said according to the form of the said statute in such case made and provided.

And whereas it is now proved before us the said justices on the oath of the said , in the presence and hearing of the said , that she was delivered of a bastard child on the day of one thousand eight hundred and forty , and since the passing of the said Act, and that the said is the father of the said bastard child.

And whereas we the said justices have (in the presence and hearing of the said) heard as well the evidence of the said , as also such other evidence upon oath as she hath produced.

And whereas we the said justices have also duly heard upon oath all the evidence tendered by and on behalf of the said

And whereas the evidence of the said the mother of the said bastard child, hath also been corroborated to the satisfaction of us the said justices in some material particular by other testimony, also taken on oath before us in the presence and hearing of the said .

Whereupon all and singular the premises, being duly considered by us the said justices, we do therefore hereby adjudge the said to be the putative father of the said bastard child, and having regard to all the circumstances of this case, We do now hereby order that the said do pay from the time of the said application unto the said , the mother of the said bastard child, so long as she shall live and is of sound mind, and is not in any gaol or prison, or under sentence of transportation, or to the person who may be appointed to have the custody of the said bastard child under the provisions of the said statute, the sum of weekly and per week; provided always that this our said order made for the maintenance and support of the said bastard child shall not (except for the purpose of recovering money due thereon) be of any force or validity after the said bastard child shall have attained the age of thirteen years, or after the marriage of the said mother of the said bastard child, or after the death of the said bastard child.

And we do hereby further order the said the sum of being the costs incurred in obtaining this order.

Given under our hands and seals at the sessions aforesaid.

MEETING OF THE JUSTICES' CLERKS' SOCIETY.

A very numerous meeting of the Justices' Clerks' Society took place at the Law Institution on Wednesday last, which was attended by about forty gentlemen from all parts of the kingdom. The special subject for consideration was the proposed Bill of Sir James Graham for regulating the office of Justices' Clerk, and the report prepared by the committee of the society on the subject, which was printed at length in our last number, was approved and adopted. The meeting was animated by the best feeling, and expressed the utmost confidence in the managing committee, whose elaborate and valuable report appeared to give universal satisfaction. A resolution was passed confirmatory of the principle of payment by a fixed salary in lieu of fees; and the committee were requested to obtain an interview with the Home Secretary, to urge on him the several points connected with the measure which required revision and amendment; and it was understood that the members would be called together again when the question shall have assumed a more decided form.

To the Editors of the Justice of the Peace.

ATTORNEYS—RIGHT TO PLEAD AT QUARTER SESSIONS, &c.

Gentlemen,—Under the above head in 8 J. P. you say (inter alia), "if an attorney may take upon himself the duty of a barrister, and dispense with his aid, a barrister may take upon himself the duty of an attorney, and dispense with his aid or intervention between him and the public," &c. Now, gentlemen, I beg to remind you that a barrister cannot act as an attorney without being admitted as such in the courts of law, to entitle him to which admission he must have previously served five years under articles to an attorney.

It is plain the whole article in question is written by a barrister, not by an attorney.

I subscribe myself, Gentlemen,
Your obedient servant,
AN ATTORNEY AND SUBSCRIBER.

[Our correspondent is angry without reason, and appears also to have mistaken our meaning. We did not design to say more, by the passage he has cited, than this; that if an attorney trespassed on the province of a barrister, a barrister might trespass upon his, as far as receiving briefs from the parties themselves instead of the attorneys, as we have seen indeed lately done at the Central Criminal Court, contrary to all professional etiquette; and, therefore, we recommended that each should keep strictly to his own walk in the profession, for the credit of both. We of course are aware that a barrister cannot practise as an attorney. We are afraid the subject is rather a sore one in places where attorneys have been in the habit of pleading at the quarter sessions, and we do not wonder at it; nevertheless, we fear we must continue to think, that barristers ought to have pre-audience in a court in which they have the leave of the court to attend. Whether the statement objected to were written by a barrister or attorney cannot matter; whether it is true must be the question. And our correspondent, we predict, will find that from the nature of things the bar must eventually carry the day; as in this country, two such conflicting claimants are seldom allowed to exist, and one must fall before the operation of public opinion, if nothing else. We may mention that the society of Gray's Inn has just disbarred a barrister for practising as an attorney also (perhaps taking a brief without the intervention of an attorney); he has appealed to the judges.—Eds. of the Justice of the Peace.]

POISONING IN FRANCE.—In a long statistical account, in one of our Paris contemporaries, of the number of persons in France accused of the crime of poisoning, from 1830 to 1842 inclusively, we find the following results:—The number accused is 541. Of these 251 were acquitted; 65 condemned to death, of whom 37 were executed, and 28 had their judgments commuted; 138 sentenced to hard labour at the hulks for life, and 58 for various limited terms; 29 to minor punishments. Of the total, 541, 295 were men, and 246 women; but the poisonings of husbands by their wives were more numerous than of wives by their husbands. To the total number of 541 there is to be added 6 who have been tried and condemned in default of appearance. It is necessary to add two more items to this sad account, viz. in the 10 years from 1830 to 1839 inclusively there were 200, and in the 3 years from 1840 to 1842 there were 113 ascertained acts of poisoning, the perpetrators of which have not been discovered. From the whole statement, it is proved that this crime in France has been latterly greatly on the increase.—Galignani's Messenger.

FEES IN POLICE-COURTS.—Some reduction is likely to take place in the course of a few days in the fees received at the metropolitan police courts. The Commissioners of police have within a few days past received instructions to that effect from the Home office, which will be soon made known to the public.—Globe.

The Right Hon. Henry Hobhouse has resigned the chairmanship of the Somerset Quarter Sessions, a position which he has filled with dignity for a long series of years. The right hon. gentleman's retirement has given occasion to expressions of warm regard from a large body of the county magistracy.

At the Berkshire quarter sessions, just concluded, the Earl of Falmouth took the oath, and qualified as a magistrate for the county.

The following new magistrates took the oaths, and qualified for the north riding of Yorkshire last week—viz. Dr. Whytehead, of Craike, near Easingwold; Joseph Dent, Esq. of Ribston Park; and the Rev. John Hutton Fisher, Kendrew.

The following buildings have been duly registered for the solemnization of marriages, pursuant to the Act of the 6th & 7th Wm. 4, c. 85. The Independent Chapel, situated at Richmond, in the city of York, in the district of the Richmond union. Countess of Huntingdon's Chapel, situated at Worcester, in the parishes of St. Swithin, in the city of Worcester, in the west district. The Birch-meadow Chapel, situated at Birch-meadow, in the parish of Broseley, in the county of Salop, in the district of Modeley.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

The Globe of Saturday last puts forth a startling announcement of changes contemplated in the high places of the law. It affirms that the Lord Chancellor is about to retire, to be succeeded by Mr. Pemberton Leigh; that the venerable Chief Justice of the Common Pleas would give place to Sir F. Thesiger; that the Attorney-General, unable to re-enter upon the active duties of his Profession, would withdraw into private life; that Mr. Kelly is to take his place, and Mr. Wortley to be appointed Solicitor-General. Some of these promotions seem probable enough, whenever a change occurs, but others are manifestly absurd, and would be altogether inconsistent with the sound judgment which has been hitherto exhibited in its law appointments by the present Government. The Standard, a ministerial paper, positively contradicts the rumour, and we are inclined to put no faith in it. As for the health of Sir W. W. Follett, we are assured that it is so improved that he will be enabled shortly to return, not only to England, but to the courts of which he is so great an ornament.

The business of Term, and a variety of very interesting and important matter, compels us to be brief; so we but refer the reader to almost every column for something deserving notice.

LAWS OF FRANCE.

No. V.

COUR ROYALE OF PARIS.

However long a foreigner may have resided in France, he does not become legally domiciled, unless he has obtained the King's authorization conformably to Article XIII. of the Civil Code. Such is the interpretation of Article X''. of the law of the 17th of April, 1832, on writs of arrest.

Mr. Upton, allied to English families of rank, was residing a few months since at Meurice's Hotel, in Paris. On the 30th of December, 1843, he signed a bill for 9,039f. payable to the order of M. Caillé, proprietor of Meurice's Hotel, on the 1st of February following. Desirous of inspiring perfect confidence to his creditor, Mr. Upton gave him moreover his word of honour that he would not leave Paris without discharging his debt.

Shortly after subscribing to this engagement, Mr. Upton, pleading the necessity of a journey to London to obtain funds, gained M. Caillé's permission to quit France for a time, on condition that a respectable person would guarantee his return before the 1st of February, 1844.

Mr. Dremmlin, a professor at the preparatory school for the staff, persuaded by Mr. Upton's promises, generously undertook the responsibility, and engaged to pay the debt if the debtor did not return at the appointed time.

Mr. Upton has not returned to France.

The condition, the fulfilment of which would have released Mr. Dremmlin from his engagement, being unaccomplished, proceedings were taken against him by the bearer of the bill signed by Mr. Upton, and he was condemned by the Tribunal de Commerce, and by an arrest as a foreigner, to pay the sum.

Mr. Dremmlin appealed against this judgment. His counsel stated that his client, of German extraction, had resided in France upwards of fifteen years, that he had married a Frenchwoman, that he was father of seven children, destined to become French citizens; that, moreover, he was the owner of a school, and had been for ten years appointed by the Minister of War to a professorship in the preparatory school for the staff. And he maintained that all these united circumstances established in favour of Mr. Dremmlin a domicile in France, such as is required by art. 14 of the law of the 17th April, 1832, to emancipate the foreigner from an arrest.

The counsel for M. Boivin, bearer of the bill, maintained that the French law only recognized the domicile, properly so called, of a foreigner, inasmuch as he had obtained the royal authorization required by art. 13 of the Civil Code. The law of the 17th April, 1832, had not innovated upon this rule, which could neither admit of an equivalent, or be modified in this case by the circumstances insisted on by his adversary, however favourable they might be for M. Dremmlin.

The Attorney-General drew up his conclusions in favour of the defendant.

But the Court, conformably to its jurisprudence, confined the verdict of the first judges for the following motives:—

Touching the arrest claimed against Dremmlin as a foreigner.

Considering that it is acknowledged and proved in the suit that Dremmlin is a foreigner, that he has never obtained the King's permission to establish his domicile in France, conformably to art. 13 of the Civil Code.

That the long residence of Dremmlin in France, the establishment of a school which he directs, and the other reasons which he advances to obtain a release from the arrest, only prove the existence of one fact, namely, that he resides in France, but do not establish that he has a domicile in France legally authorized, which alone could free him from an arrest issued against a foreigner not domiciled in consequence of a condemnation he has incurred.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

DONCASTER BOROUGH SESSIONS.

Thursday, Jan. 9.

COUNSEL AND ATTORNEYS.

It was stated that there were two appeals on the paper, and Fisher, solicitor, rose to make a motion on the subject of one of them.

The Recorder (Sir Gregory Lewin).—Who are you?

Fisher.—I am a solicitor practising in Doncaster, and was the senior advocate in this court previous to the intrusion of counsel.

The Recorder.—I have already decided that point; and in the presence of counsel I cannot hear a solicitor.

Fisher.—But the matter has lately undergone discussion, and the opinion of Lord Denman been had.

The Recorder.—Judicially?

Fisher.—Not judicially.

The Recorder.—Then I cannot hear you.

Fisher.—I say, Sir, that this Court has not the power to make any such order as was formerly made on this subject.

The Recorder.—I have made that order, and I consider I had the power to make it; and, further, I mean to abide by it, unless you can shew me a judicial authority superior to mine, shewing that such an order was erroneous. I told you and all the attorneys that if you disputed my authority, or the law I laid down, I would afford you every facility to take a higher opinion. You have not done so, although you have had sufficient opportunities. If you have now found any new case, founded upon some authentic source, I am bound to hear any argument or motion you may be disposed to make.

Fisher.—I need scarcely say, sir, that Lord Denman is high judicial authority.

The Recorder.—What do you quote from?

Fisher.—The opinion of Lord Denman expressed to Mr. Waddington, of Lichfield, on a case arising at Lichfield sessions.

The Recorder.—Did Lord Denman express that opinion judicially?

Fisher.—He was consulted as Lord Chief Justice by the Recorder of Lichfield.

The Recorder.—From whom did you learn that?

Fisher.—From the Town Clerk of Lichfield.

The Recorder.—Then the Town Clerk of Lichfield will have no authority here. If Lord Denman had given any judicial authority on the subject, I would hear any motion; but I will hear no statements coming second-hand, as representing Lord Denman to have used certain statements. I know my duty too well to attend to any such, and it would ill become me to take notice of hearsay statements of that sort.

Fisher.—As far as the practice is concerned, it is immaterial to me. I merely stand here as representing the attorneys of the town. And I will say this, that there is but one opinion on the part of the profession, on the subject in question.

The Recorder.—I shall be happy to afford the solicitors of Doncaster every facility in my power, if they wish to obtain superior judgment. I have done what I believe was my duty; and if I did not support my decisions, I should be unworthy of the situation I have the honour to hold.

Fisher.—When you say you will render every facility in your power, I must say that at present there is no order to which we can refer and take the judgment of a superior Court, or the opinion of any Court. There is no order whatever.

The Recorder.—There is an order, because I made one; and the officers of the court are bound to take notice of the orders delivered by the judge, whatever they may be. And if an order is so delivered, if not taken down in writing, it still exists as it was originally delivered. I should be the last person in the world to take a technical objection to any application you may make; and you have the court at York close at hand, where you may try the case and get the judgment of one of the judges of the land on the subject.

Fisher.—My professional friends have applied to see an order in court, but up to this moment they have never seen it. If the officer of the court has no such order, one should now be drawn up.

The Recorder.—I have delivered viva voce my order on this matter.

Fisher.—Then, sir, there is no order upon which we can take the opinion of another Court.

The Recorder.—You may go to the Queen's Bench in any way you please; but I shall not allow attorneys to practise in this court when four barristers are present. That is my order. If a superior court decide that I am wrong, I shall bow to such decision.

Mr. Fisher then retired, and the Court proceeded with the ordinary business.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS' COURT.

NEW RULES AND ORDERS.

The following new rules and orders have been agreed upon and issued by the Court, with a view to shorten the period of the imprisonment of applicants, and thereby to assimilate the practice of the Court to the spirit of recent acts of the legislature:—

"The Court for Relief of Insolvent Debtors, on the 9th day of January, 1845.

"It is ordered,—That henceforth no order for hearing by a commissioner on circuit shall be issued later than the twenty-first day before the day notified in the Gazette.

"That personal service of a copy of the order for hearing be made fourteen days at least before the day of hearing.

"That service of such copy by post letter be made sixteen days at least before the day of hearing.

"That advertisement in the London or other Gazette be published fourteen days at least before the day of hearing.

"That advertisement in the country newspaper be published eleven days at least before the hearing.

"That notice of opposition be given two clear days instead of three.

By the Court.

"N.B.—The length of notice required on application for discharge on recognisance of sureties has been reduced from three days to two days."

THE NEW PROJECTED RAILWAYS.

(From the Gazette of last night.)

Whitehall, Jan. 14.

Notice is hereby given, that the Board constituted by the minute of the Lords of the Committee of the Privy Council for Trade, of the 24th of August, 1844, for the transaction of railway business, having had under consideration the following schemes for extending railway communication to Portsmouth, viz:—

DALHOUSIE. G. R. PORTER.
C. W. PASLEY. S. LAING.
D. O'BRIEN.

WHITEHALL, JAN. 7.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed James Pashley Burbeary of Sheffield, in the county of York, Gent.; and Charles Chalk of Brighton, in the county of Sussex, Gent. to be Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

WHITEHALL, Jan. 16.—The Right Honourable Sir Nicholas Conyngham Tindal, Knight Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas, has appointed Charles John Dene, of Barnstaple, in the county of Devon, attorney and solicitor, to be one of the Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women, under the Act passed for the abolition of fines and recoveries, and for the substitution of more simple modes of assurance, in and for the county of Devon.

MR. BARON GURNEY.—We regret to learn that Mr. Baron Gurney is labouring under severe indisposition, which prevents his lordship attending to his judicial duties. The learned baron at present is residing at Brighton. The last accounts were favourable.—Standard.

SIR W. FOLLETT.—It is whispered in Exeter, that we may expect an election very soon after the opening of Parliament. Sir William Follett's health will not, it is said, permit him to hold the office of Attorney-General; neither his mind nor body being at all equal to the discharge of the laborious duties attached to the responsible office which he now holds. —Western Times.

SIR W. FOLLETT.—(From a Correspondent.)—We have been favoured with the perusal of a letter from Naples, dated the 30th of December, from which we learn that the learned Attorney-General and Lady Follett had arrived in that capital from Rome. We are gratified to be assured, on the same authority, that the learned gentleman's health had improved. Sir William was, according to the arrangements then made, to embark at Naples on board the Government steamer ordered to convey himself and family to this country, about the 15th instant, so that he may be expected home in about three weeks at latest.

MIDDLE TEMPLE, Jan. 14.—Mr. W. J. Alexander, recently appointed one of Her Majesty's counsel, took his seat this day as a bencher of the Hon. Society of the Middle Temple.

EQUITY BUSINESS FOR HILARY TERM.—The amount of business of the Chancery Courts for the present term appears to be of an average character with that of the preceding terms of late years. Of appeal causes for hearing before the Lord Chancellor up to the present period there are 38; causes before the Master of the Rolls, about 92; of causes before the Vice-Chancellor of England, 90; before Vice-Chancellor K. Bruce there are 34; and before Vice-Chancellor Wigram, 46—making a total of 300.

Richard Spoooner, esq. M. P. has been appointed a deputy-lieutenant for the county of Worcester.

CLERKS OF MASTERS IN CHANCERY.—The death of the Chief Clerk of Master Richards having occasioned a vacancy in that office, the Master has exercised his right of appointment in favour of Mr. John Philpot, sen. of Southampton Street. This appointment of a solicitor much esteemed by his brethren and of long experience, will, no doubt, give general satisfaction to the practitioners.

ASSIZES.—It is said that the suggestion of Mr. Baron Alderson to supersede the third assizes in Yorkshire and South Lancashire, and other populous districts of England, by the establishment of assizes to commence early in the month of January, and about the usual time at Midsummer, and thus to divide the year into two equal parts, has been heard with favour in influential quarters, and that it is not improbable that this very natural arrangement may be ultimately adopted.—Leeds Mercury.

THE SPRING CIRCUITS.—Yesterday (Thursday) the Judges assembled in the Exchequer-room, when they chose the following circuits of the Special Assizes:—Home—Lord Denman, Baron Alderson. Midland—Lord Chief Justice Tindal, Baron Gurney. Oxford—Lord Chief Baron Pollock, Judge Maule. Norfolk—Baron Parke, Judge Patteson. North Wales—Judge Williams. South Wales—Judge Cresswell. Western—Judge Coleridge, Judge Erle. Northern—Judge Coltman, Judge Wightman. Baron Rolfe remains in town.—Times.

ATTORNEYS.—One hundred and twenty-four gentlemen have given the requisite notice of intending to apply during the present Term to be admitted to practise as attorneys in the Court of Queen's Bench; and there are no less than thirty-three notices for re-admission, making a total of one hundred and fifty-seven.

HILARY TERM EXAMINATION.—The examiners appointed for the examination of persons applying to be admitted attorneys, have appointed the candidates to attend on Thursday, the 23rd instant, at half-past nine in the forenoon, at the Hall of the Incorporated Law Society, in Chancery-lane. The examination will commence at ten o'clock precisely. The articles of clerkship, with answers to the questions as to due service, according to the regulations approved by the judges, must be left on or before Friday, the 17th instant. Where the articles have not expired, but will expire during the Term, the candidate may be examined conditionally, but the articles must be left within the first seven days of Term, and answers up to that time.—Legal Observer.

Sir James Dowling, Chief Justice of New South Wales, has been granted leave of absence for two years, and is returning to England to recruit his health. His labours were unremitting for sixteen years; and in consequence of the removal of Mr. Justice Burton to Madras, before the arrival of his successor, the extra duties thrown on the chief justice and his only remaining coadjutor, Judge Stephens, he completely broke down. Mr. Dickenson, the new judge, was expected out in October; and Mr. A'Beckett, the Solicitor-General, has been appointed to act as third judge until the return of Sir James.—Observer.

THE RUMOURED LAW CHANGES.—[From a correspondent.]—On Saturday last, the Globe announced that Lord Lyndhurst, it was expected, retired from the woolsack to make way for Mr. Pemberton Leigh; that Sir N. C. Tindal was about to resign the High office of Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, which he had filled for many years, with so much distinction and credit, and was to be succeeded by the Solicitor-General (Sir F. Thesiger), Mr. F. Kelly to be Attorney-General, Mr. Stuart Wortley, Solicitor-General, &c. &c. As this report has been copied into some of the morning papers, we notice it for the purpose of giving the statement a positive, unqualified contradiction. No such changes have ever been in contemplation. The "rumour" did not gain credence for a single moment in Westminster Hall; it certainly caused a laugh, and was then forgotten.—Standard.

JERSEY LAW.—We have heard that his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor wrote some time ago to the Home Secretary for instructions how to act, should a Writ of Rebellion, on account of the resistance to the Habeas Corpus writs, be sent to Jersey. The Secretary evaded a direct answer, but cautioned his Excellency to be "as conciliatory as possible." Jersey Times.

ALTERATIONS IN CONVEYANCING PRACTICE SINCE THE 1ST OF JANUARY.—It may be useful to state, that so far as we have observed ourselves, or have been informed, no material alteration has been made in the practice of conveyancing since the new act 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76, came into operation. We have heard indeed of certain instruments on parchment being in existence, commencing "This deed," but we apprehend the great majority, and certainly all that we have seen, begin, as heretofore, with those apparently immortal words "This indenture." The reference to the act dispensing with the lease for a year, 4 & 5 Vict. c. 21, has, we believe, in no case been omitted in a deed intended to operate as a lease and release. But in settlements of real estate the usual limitation "to trustees to preserve contingent remainders," has in many cases been struck out.—Legal Observer.

BANKRUPTCY ANALYSIS FOR 1844.—Ale merchants 4, apothecaries 9, attorneys 3, auctioneers 9, bakers 9, bankers 4, booksellers 10, boot and shoe makers 10, brewers 8, brickmakers 5, brokers 8, builders 44, butchers 14, cabinet makers 11, calico printers 4, carpenters 21, carpet manufacturers 4, cattle dealers 7, cheesemongers 6, chemists and druggists 15, clothiers 5, cloth manufacturers 4, coal merchants 2, coach makers 5, coach and omnibus proprietors 5, coal merchants 11, commission agents 10, contractors (road, railway, and gas) 3, cooks and confectioners 4, corn merchants and dealers 17, cotton manufacturers 3, curriers 10, cutlers 3, dairymen 3, dealers 15, earthenware dealers 3, eating and coffee house keepers 3, engineers 6, engravers 2, farmers 7, flannel makers 2, fruit merchants 4, furriers 4, glass merchants 3, grocers 53, hatters 6, horse dealers 3, hosiers 4, innkeepers 22, ironfounders 11, ironmongers 19, jewellers 7, lacemen 3, leather sellers 3, lime burners 2, linendrapers 23, linen manufacturers 2, livery stable keepers 7, lodging house keepers 5, machinists 2, maltsters 7, market gardeners 2, mercers 2, merchants 38, millers 19, milliners 3, money scriveners 5, musical instrument makers 2, nail manufacturers 2, oil merchants 3, painters 2, paper hangers 2, paper makers, 3, pawnbrokers 3, plumbers and glaziers 13, printers 5, printsellers 2, provision merchants 4, saddlers 10, sail cloth manufacturers 3, ship brokers 3, shipowners 7, shipwrights 4, silk manufacturers 4, silk throwsters 4, silversmiths 4, soap makers 2, stationers 12, straw bonnet manufacturers 2, surgeons, 13, tailors 28, tallow chandlers 7, tanners 3, tea dealers 8, timber merchants 3, tobacconists 4, toymen 2, trimming makers 2, upholsterers 9, victuallers 47, warehousemen 10, watchmakers 4, wheelwrights 1, wine and spirit merchants 36, woollen drapers 8, woollen manufacturers 3, woolstaplers 2, worsted manufacturers 3, worsted spinners 3, various 76. Total 1,064.—Globe.

CASE OF MISTAKEN IDENTITY AT THE YORKSHIRE WEST-RIDING SESSIONS.—Henry Cutts, a young man who was tried at last Doncaster Sessions, for a riot and assault at the Manor, near Sheffield, connected with the colliers' strike, and sentenced to six months' imprisonment with hard labour, and who has since been liberated from prison, in consequence of evidence which had been forwarded to the Secretary of State, by the prisoner's solicitor Mr. Eyre, was called into the witness box, when Mr. Dennison, the chairman, addressed him as follows:—"Henry Cutts, you were convicted before me at the sessions at Doncaster for a riot and assault, upon the evidence of two witnesses, each of whom spoke so positively to your being the man who committed the offence for which you were then tried, that the jury found you guilty, and I must say they were upon that evidence fully justified in doing so, but being afterwards fully satisfied that those two witnesses were mistaken as to your identity, and that it was another man who committed the assault, upon my recommendation to the Secretary of State you received her Majesty's pardon, and was liberated from prison. I take this opportunity, therefore, of publicly expressing my opinion of your innocence of the offence for which you were so tried and found guilty. And I do this in justice to your character, from a full conviction of your innocence, as well as to contradict a report that has been raised that it was for other reasons you were pardoned."—Doncaster Gazette.

WILL OF THE LATE ROBERT FOSTER, ESQ.—This gentleman, who died at his residence in Wolvey, in the county of Warwick, on the 17th December last, in his 67th year, by his will, dated the 24th October, 1843, directed the following legacies to be paid clear of legacy duty: the Clergy Orphan Society, 1,000*l.*; Christian Knowledge Society, 1,000*l.*; the National Society for Educating the Poor, 500*l.*; Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, 1,000*l.*; Society for Building Churches, 2,000*l.*; Society for the Employment of Additional Curates, 1,000*l.*; Schools at Knighton, near Leicester, 200*l.*; General Hospital, Birmingham, 500*l.*; Leicester Infirmary, 300*l.*; total, 7,500*l.* The deceased had, for some years, been a subscriber or occasional contributor to each of the above charitable institutions. Thomas Edward Dicey, Esq. of Claybrooke hall, near Lutterworth, Leicestershire, is appointed sole executor.—Historical Register.

WILL OF THE LATE SIR H. HALFORD, BART. one of the physicians in ordinary to the Queen, was proved in Doctors' Commons, by his son, Sir Henry Halford, Bart. the sole executor, to whom the whole of the property, real and personal, is bequeathed—the personal estate sworn under 9,000*l.* The will, which is in the deceased's handwriting, is remarkably short, being contained on one side of letter paper; it is dated 18th September, 1833, and signed 'Henry Halford, Bart.' Witnesses, Wm. Macmichael, M.D. Thos. Turner, M.D. J. Bright, M.D. The baronet was late of Wiston hall, Leicester. and of Curzon street, May Fair, and died at the latter place March 9th, 1844.—Ibid.

OPENING OF HILARY TERM.

This being the first day of Hilary term the courts were opened with the customary formalities.

Shortly after two o'clock the Lord Chancellor entered the Court of Chancery, when the following gentlemen, having been previously sworn before Judge Perrin, were called to the bar:—

Moses Wilson Gray, esq. son of John Gray, esq. of Claremorris, county Mayo.

Augustus Hugh Barton, esq. son of Dunbar Barton, esq. of Fitzwilliam-square, Dublin.

Henry W. Lover, esq. son of M. F. Lover, esq. Rathmines, county Dublin.

Robert William Osborne, esq. son of Jonathan Osborne, esq. of Harcourt-street.

William Annesley Mayne, esq. son of William Mayne, esq. of Freame Mount, county Monaghan.

John Davis, esq. son of Roger Green Davis, esq. of Drumdiah, Killeagh, county Cork.

George Ponder, esq. jun. son of George Ponder, esq. Upper Temple street, Dublin.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

THE SIXTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF MANAGEMENT OF THE MANCHESTER LAW ASSOCIATION.

The committee have sincere gratification in presenting the members, at their annual meeting, a short epitome of their proceedings during their period of office.

On no former occasion have the advantages of associations like the present been so strikingly apparent or so generally admitted; and the great increase of members, and the commendations of the public press, are gratifying proofs that the efforts of your committee fully to carry into effect the objects of the society have not been unsuccessful.

Several measures of great importance to the Profession were introduced into Parliament during the last session, to all of which the best consideration was given; but before alluding to them in detail, your committee have to acknowledge the courtesy of the members for the Borough, who, prior to the commencement of the session, sought an interview with your committee for the purpose of obtaining their views on the various Bills interesting to the Profession, of which notice of introduction had been given. To M. Phillips, E. Buckley, and J. Brotherton, esqrs. your committee are deeply indebted for their attention in forwarding to the Honorary Secretary the Bills as they were severally introduced, and for the consideration given by them to all communications from this society.

Among the Bills alluded to were several measures for the more speedy recovery of small debts. The one brought in by Sir James Graham was found to be by far the least objectionable, and your committee, hoping through the medium of this Bill to get rid of the Salford Hundred and Manchester Manor Courts, determined (with certain modifications) to give it all the support in their power. A petition, therefore, numerously signed, strongly setting forth the evils of the above courts, and suggesting the introduction of a clause destroying altogether their civil jurisdiction, was forwarded to Sir James Graham for presentation.

Your committee have pleasure in stating that although those courts still exist, yet through their representations, the "Bailiffs of Inferior Courts Bill" passed, which will be found to remedy many of the evils complained of. A further opportunity of endeavouring to get rid of the civil jurisdiction of those courts altogether within the borough of Manchester may present itself to the committee for next year, as it is intended to apply to Parliament for powers to bring into operation the Borough Court of Record. The Bill for that purpose will require watching by the committee, to take care that it contains no clause which will prevent any attorney in the superior courts from practising in the Borough Court of Record.

To the County Courts Bill for the county palatine of Lancaster, introduced by Lord Granville Somerset, your committee offered the most strenuous opposition, considering the measure totally unnecessary and highly objectionable, inasmuch as it created another and distinct jurisdiction, applicable only to a particular locality, with all the various offices, &c. centred in Preston, a distance of thirty miles from this town. Reasons against the Bill were prepared with great care, and a deputation of this society, consisting of such of the members as were then in London, waited upon his lordship, by appointment, and discussed at considerable length the provisions of the Bill.

The Bills introduced by Mr. Jarvis and Mr. Watson, for improving the jurisdiction of the superior courts, your committee considered equally objectionable; but as all the Bills alluded to were ultimately withdrawn, it is not considered necessary to state in detail the measures they had arranged for opposing their further progress.

The Bill introduced by the Lord Chancellor, for simplifying the transfer of real property, received the consideration so important a measure demanded; and as it was found that the alterations sought to be effected were generally great improvements upon the old system, without at the same time touching upon any important principle, a petition from the Society in favour of the measure was presented by his lordship. The Bill subsequently, with the omission of some clauses, passed into a law.

Your committee endeavoured to carry into effect the recommendation contained in last year's report, to get a clause introduced into the Ecclesiastical Courts Bill, enabling solicitors to share in the fees paid to proctors, and a petition to that effect was prepared and presented to the House; but the Bill was withdrawn before any thing could be accomplished.

Numerous points of practice have been submitted for decision during the past year, and as a uniform system is highly desirable, your committee strongly recommend that notice of the various opinions of the committee should from time to time be sent to the members.

Your committee considered it their duty to call the attention of the Incorporated Society (with whom they had been in frequent and friendly correspondence) to two persons in this town who had given notice of their intention to apply for a renewal of their certificates. They considered that in both instances the application should be opposed. The result was, that neither of the parties alluded to persisted in his application.

By far the most important object which has occupied the attention of your committee is the union of provincial law societies. At a general meeting of the Yorkshire society, held in March last, the great importance of a permanent union between the different law societies in the country was strongly urged, and Manchester was fixed upon as the proposed place of meetings.

Your committee, having received a copy of the resolutions passed at the above meetings, passed a resolution pledging themselves to render every assistance in their power in endeavouring to promote the union, and to render the meeting effective for the important objects sought to be attained. Your committee have pleasure in stating that the proposal met with the cordial concurrence of most of the principal law societies, and the following have signified their intention of joining the union; viz. Birmingham, Cumberland, East Kent, Gloucestershire, Hull, Leeds, Lincolnshire, Liverpool, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, Oxford, Plymouth, Somersetshire (Bridgewater Junior Club), West Riding of Yorkshire, and Lancaster.

The objects of the union are chiefly to protect the interests and watch over all legislative and other interference with the just rights of the Profession; to assist in obtaining all useful and practicable amendments of the law; and to adopt measures for maintaining the respectability of the Profession.

Your committee feel assured, that if these objects are fully carried out, and a means of mutual and cordial co-operation firmly established, the union will prove of incalculable advantage to the Profession, by concentrating the power and influence which they as a body possess.

Your committee, owing to the additional accommodation that would be required for the purposes of the union, strongly recommended that the premises, No. 4, Norfolk-street, should be taken for the purposes of this society, and seven of the members at once consented to become lessees for twenty-one years, at the annual rent of 200*l*.

The lessees have arranged that the rooms on the ground floor shall be used for sales, and have fitted them up accordingly. The loss of time, expense, and inconvenience of sales being held at hotels, and in the evening, have long been felt, and your committee were convinced if suitable rooms were provided in a central situation, not only the evils alluded to might be avoided, but that there would be a much greater probability (if sales were held at more convenient hours for business) of the property offered bringing its legitimate value. The experiment has been tried, and the results up to the present time have fully borne out the expectations they had formed.

The lessees have arranged with the committee of the Law Library for the letting to that society of two rooms in that building, and the remainder of the premises will be used for references, meetings of creditors, and other purposes connected with the Profession. A moderate scale of charges has been fixed for the use of the rooms, and your committee confidently trust that the members will at once see the importance of aiding the lessees in carrying out their views, by doing which your committee feel assured a considerable revenue for the purposes of the society may be relied upon.

Your committee also strongly urge the importance of the members meeting daily, whenever practicable, for a short time, in the committee-room. This arrangement will, in their opinion, tend in many ways to facilitate the transaction of a vast amount of legal business between the members, with the greatest economy of time, and prove of peculiar advantage to those residing at a distance.

Your committee, considering it highly important that law students should have the opportunity of attending lectures, have arranged, with the kind assistance of a resident barrister, to give, during the present winter, a course of 13 lectures, on different branches of the law, to which all the members and their articled clerks have free admission.

Your committee trust that should the experiment be found to answer their expectations their successors will devise some means of continuing so important an advantage.

Your committee, in concluding their report, cannot avoid congratulating the members on the high standing to which your society has attained, and expressing a hope that nothing will occur to diminish its influence or take away from its utility; and they wish forcibly to impress upon the members that at no former period were active exertion and cordial co-operation more essentially necessary for the preservation of the best interests of the Profession.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE MANCHESTER LAW ASSOCIATION.

UNION OF PROVINCIAL LAW ASSOCIATIONS.

(Abridged from the Manchester Guardian.)

The annual meeting and dinner of the members of the Manchester Law Association took place on the 10th inst. on which day also an important meeting of deputations from various provincial law societies was held, with a view to the formation of a general association of such societies. The gentlemen forming deputations from the different societies to which invitations had been sent were met by a sub-committee, appointed by the Manchester Association, at the Law Society's Rooms, Norfolk-street, in the forenoon, for the transaction of business. The following are the names of the gentlemen present, and the places they represented:—Mr. Thomas Eyre Lee and Mr. Arthur Ryland, Birmingham; Mr. George Hicks Seymour and Mr. Thomas Hodgson, York; Mr. John Hope Shaw, Mr. Richard E. Payne, and Mr John Sangster, Leeds; Mr. Charles Frost and Mr. C. H. Phillips, Hull; Mr. John Freeman, Huddersfield (West Riding Society); Mr. James Westell, Witney, Oxfordshire, and Mr. John Marriott Davenport, Oxford; Mr. Thomas Avison, Mr. Ambrose Lace, and Mr. J. Eden, Liverpool; Mr. Julius G. Shepherd, Faversham, Kent; Mr. Edward Knocker, Dover; Mr. John Sharp and Mr. J. H. Sherson, Lancaster; Mr. J. Bourne, Alford, Lincolnshire; Mr. E. A. Bromehead, Lincoln; Mr. Henry Abbott, Long Ashton, Somersetshire. The sub-committee of the Manchester Law Association consisted of Messrs. R. H. Wilson, J. Grave, R. M. Whitlow, Stephen Heelis, James Crossley, Charles Gibson and Thomas Taylor.

Mr. R. H. Wilson was called to the chair, and the resolutions appear among our advertisements. At the close of the meeting thanks were given to Mr. Thomas Taylor, honorary secretary; and to Mr. Thomas Hodgson, of York, for their services in the formation of the association.

The proceedings connected exclusively with the annual meeting of the Manchester Association commenced at three o'clock in the afternoon. The report was highly satisfactory as to the progress of the association, which, we understand, numbers about 200 members. Mr. R. H. Wilson was elected president for the ensuing year, in the room of Mr. John Taylor (of Mosley-street), who held the office during the past year.

THE DINNER.

The annual dinner of the members of the association took place in the New Concert Room at the Albion Hotel, Piccadilly. There were about 80 gentlemen present, including a number of gentlemen from different and distant parts of the kingdom, who had attended the morning meeting. The attendance also included several gentlemen resident in the neighbouring towns included within the limits of the association. Mr. R. H. Wilson (of Mosley-street), the president for the ensuing year, occupied the chair, and was supported on the right by Alexander Kay, Esq. Mayor of Manchester; and on the left by Mr. G. H. Seymour, of York, president of the newly-formed union of provincial law societies. Mr. Joseph Heron, Town-clerk of Manchester, and Mr. Nicholas Earle, officiated as vice-chairmen.

After the cloth had been withdrawn the usual loyal toasts were given. The Chairman then gave, "The Manchester Law Association, and prosperity to it." He would not make any lengthened observations upon the great advantages that had, and would arise from that association and other similar associations, but would leave that to be done by their friend Mr. Heelis, upon whom he would call to respond to the toast. Mr. S. Heelis, in responding, said he should ill discharge the duty imposed upon him if he did not, on behalf of the members of the association, insist that it did not originate simply from a wish to benefit the Profession, but from a circumstance which shewed the necessity of protecting the interests of the public. (Hear, hear.) That was not the only occasion in which its services had been directed to the promotion of public interests; and although he should be sorry to affect that they did not also endeavour to look after their own, yet he hoped the day would never arrive when they should not make their own private interests subservient to those of a higher class. (Hear, hear.) He had frequently had compliments paid to him for attention to the interests of the association, but he thought the climax of their exertions had arrived, because they had that day associated themselves with other similar societies, he believed for very great public benefits, and he hoped also for their mutual special advantage. (Hear, hear.) It had been said that day, that the Manchester Law Association had on various occasions come forward, and probably they had borne a great deal of the brunt of the battle, although the original suggestion for a general union was not with them. However, they should be happy, as an association, to do all they could to carry out those objects, which were not only more particularly within their province as a local association, but also those which related to the interests of the Profession and the community in other parts of the kingdom. The Chairman next gave "The Judges of the land;" after which he proposed, in a highly complimentary speech, "The health of John Taylor, Esq., the president of the association during the past year." Mr. Taylor had practised in this town for about 55 years, and was the father of the profession here. The Chairman, in proposing the next toast, said the great advantage arising from law associations, and the absolute necessity for a general union of them, were facts so well known, that it was unnecessary to offer any remarks upon those subjects. The advantages, amongst others, which arose to the public and to the profession from law associations, were the promotion of the respectability of the profession generally; the promotion of liberal, fair, and honourable practices amongst them; the putting down of all petty practices and petty practitioners, who were alike injurious to the public and to the profession. (Hear, hear.) But there was another and still more important benefit derived by the profession. Those associations tended to bring them together as men and brethren— (hear, hear);—to create friendly feelings amongst them, and confidence in each other; and he need hardly point out the advantage the public would derive from the existence of a good understanding amongst the professional men they employed. He considered the fact of a professional gentleman being a member of one of the law associations quite sufficient to create confidence in the honour and integrity of his intentions, and that he would adopt every fair practice in his intercourse with members of the same profession. (Hear, hear.) And with respect to the necessity for forming associations, the transactions of almost every day tended to convince them of it, in order to protect their rights and interests, and to put down the encroachments which were daily practised upon the profession by such men as Lords Brougham and Campbell; who, in point of fact, had risen to their present elevated positions in society through the instrumentality, in the first instance, of those professional men whom they reviled, and at all opportunities attempted to degrade and vilify. (Hear, hear.) The members of the profession, however, were a most powerful and influential body; and if united throughout the kingdom, as they ought to be, they would soon teach Lords Brougham and Campbell, and such superficial law-tinkers, that they would not long trespass upon the rights of the profession with impunity, as they now did. (Hear.) He would now give, "The Law Associations forming the provincial union of law societies, with our best wishes for our future union and prosperity." (Applause.) He would couple with the toast the name of Mr. Seymour, of York, who had been elected president of the united association for the ensuing year. (Applause.) — Mr. H. Seymour, in responding, said, the honour which had been conferred upon him, in electing him president of the newly-formed association for the ensuing year, was entirely unlooked for on his part; and he attributed his election, not to any thing which was due to himself, but to the society which he represented, which was the parent of these societies, though now outstripped by some of her children. However, be that as it might, he considered his election a high honour; and whatever exertions might be wanted on his part, he should consider it both a duty and a privilege to render them to the best of his ability. (Hear, hear.) He had had the honour of being introduced to the respected gentleman who filled a high civic station in this town. It so happened that, in the city of York, the chief magistrate (Mr. William Gray) was also a member of the legal profession, and he (Mr. Seymour) was in office as chairman of the city commissioners. He did not mention this as a matter of pride, but as shewing that, if gentlemen of their profession would observe a respectable mode of conduct, the practice of the profession was no bar to obtaining civic honours. (Hear, hear.) — The Chairman said the toast he had to propose followed very appropriately after the observations of Mr. Seymour, and when he announced that it was "The health of their respected guest, Alexander Kay, Esq. Mayor of Manchester." Alexander Kay, Esq. the mayor, returned thanks. He knew not why he should have been selected by his fellow-townsmen to fill twice the high office of chief magistrate. He never expected, ten years ago, that it would be his fate and fortune to be placed in such a position; and the only feeling he entertained was, that during the period he had held the office, he hoped he had done no discredit to the profession to which he belonged. (Hear, hear.) His position was a very simple one; and there was not a gentleman in the room, who, by following the same course, might not attain to the same honours if he chose to set about it. He was born in Manchester, the son of a cotton merchant, and entertained greater expectations in early life than he found on attaining manhood; and he determined, therefore, when he found those expectations disappointed, to realize that which he was certain every man in his profession, with common honour and common honesty, might attain to. (Hear, hear.) He claimed for himself no particular talent; but if there was any one thing more than another to which he owed his present position, it was to a constant assiduity in his professional career, and his determination, under no circumstances, and under no views whatever that were presented to him, ever to forget the interests which were confided to him. It was sometimes difficult for a professional man to ascertain what the true interests of his clients were; but if he kept those interests steadily in view, he would not make many mistakes of an important character. But, leaving this, he would turn to a subject much more agreeable to himself, namely, the progress and prospects of the Manchester Law Association. Many gentlemen would recollect that a law association existed in Manchester some thirty years ago. It was not his fortune to be a member of that association; because, being then a young man, he had seen and heard enough to lead him to think that the association was intended by the elder members of the profession to keep down the younger ones, rather than to take the course which such a society ought to follow with reference to the profession and the community; and he was happy to think that a different course was taken by the association of the present day.— The Chairman next gave "The health of Mr. Whitlow, the treasurer," to whom the association was under great obligations for his valuable services. (Applause.) — Mr. Whitlow returned thanks, and remarked, that for any services he had rendered to the association, he had been amply repaid by the feeling exhibited that evening.—The Mayor proposed "The health of Mr. Wilson, the president of the association for the ensuing year." (Applause.)—The Chairman acknowledged the compliment, and, in the course of his speech, took occasion to reply to a remark of his friend, the mayor, in allusion to the old law association some thirty-five years ago. He (the chairman) believed he was the only person present who was a member of that association: and he thought the mayor had done them a little injustice, not intentionally, but for want of knowing what were the real motives and views of the association. He would take the present opportunity of suggesting, as a means of still further extending the usefulness of the association, that some provision should be made for the charitable support of members of the profession in advanced periods of life, who might not have been so successful as others, and also of the families of deceased members when left in a state of distress. (Applause.) He merely threw out the suggestion, thinking the association might take it into consideration at a future time.—Mr. James Crossley in proposing the next toast, "The committee of management for the past year," said, he believed there never was a period since the origin of the association in which so much valuable time and active exertion had been devoted to its interests as during the period since the last adnual meeting. When he looked back from their present position, and saw how much had been accomplished in, comparatively speaking, a short period of time, he could scarcely place any limits to their future progress. He little thought, at the meeting at which the society took its rise, and at which he had the honour to preside, that he should be present at such an assembly as the present, combining so large a proportion of the respectable solicitors of this district, with the municipal head of Manchester, and a number of friends and distinguished ornaments of the profession from various and distant parts of the kingdom. (Hear.) He little thought that he should have the future privilege of sitting an admiring auditor in a sort of legal lyceum of their own, and hearing a worthy and accomplished member of their body, whom he was glad to see present on that occasion, deliver, to a numerous class of instructed ancherites, as able a lecture as ever came from the professor's chair. (Applause.) He hailed the union of societies that day formed, having a firm conviction that all their efforts would be required, if they maintained their place as an integral and most important part of an enlightened profession; as a body of men to whom the public might look with confidence for the discharge of duties for which the highest moral qualifications, as well as the highest intellectual powers, were required. At present, he looked upon their state to be somewhat analogous to that of a beleagured citadel, assailed on all sides, and their members as the selected victims of that erratic legislation, which, seizing the subjects of its experimental philosophy rather for its own amusement than for their improvement or for the public necessity, required every vigilance in order to avert the evils of its most mischievous activity. ("Hear, hear," and applause.) From the stream and tendency of legislation, indeed, as applied to their body, it might almost be considered that the public were alarmed at their plethoric habits, and were consequently calling to the quack doctors of the state to reduce them to what Falstaff would call "reasonable dimensions" by a perpetual succession of parliamentary drastic medicines, never forgetting the lancet and the blister. (Applause and laughter.) But he did say, and it was a most singular fact, that theirs was the only body or class of public men who, in the exact proportion as they had endeavoured to merit encouragement from the legislature, in exactly the same proportion had they received systematical discouragement. (Hear, hear.) He could give, were it necessary, fifty instances to corroborate the truth of what he had asserted, but it was perfectly unnecessary to do so in the present company. To combat, however, that unwise and partial spirit by efficacious, yet by legal means, it must be admitted that a general movement of associations was necessary; and with the increased resources and energy which would be derived from the union that day cemented, he entertained no doubt that in future the fair claims of the body of solicitors would be fully maintained and upheld, in so far as they were consistent with the interests of the public; and to that extent only as a body did they require to be considered and protected. (Hear, hear.)—Mr. G. Thorley, as chairman of the committee for the past year, responded to the toast, and remarked on the important benefits which might be expected from the friendly compacts which had been formed with similar societies in different parts of the kingdom.—The Chairman then gave in highly complimentary terms, "The health of Mr. Thomas Taylor, honorary secretary to the association." — Mr. Taylor returned thanks, remarking that from the first he had been sanguine as to the success of the association; but the result had exceeded his highest expectations, and had amply rewarded him for his exertions. (Applause.)— The next toast from the chair was "The gentlemen representing the law societies who have honoured us with their company on this occasion." The toast was received with great applause, and was responded to by Mr. J. G. Shepherd, of Faversham, Kent, and by Mr. Bourne, of Alford.—The Chairman next gave, "The vice-presidents, and thanks to them for their services;" to which Mr. Joseph Heron, Town Clerk of Manchester, responded.—Mr. Cooper gave "The Incorporated Law Society."—Mr. Eyre Lee, of Birmingham, acknowledged the toast, and said that no provincial law society need hesitate to correspond with the society in the metropolis whenever they wanted assistance.—The Chairman then gave "The Corporations of Manchester and Salford." (Applause.) — Mr. Heron responded on behalf of the Corporation of Manchester. Mr. Charles Gibson, Town Clerk of Salford, returned thanks in behalf of the corporation of that borough, and proposed "The health of the gentlemen who have kindly undertaken to give lectures during the winter."—The toast was responded to by Mr. J. Grave, of Manchester, and Mr. Summerscales, of Oldham.—The remaining toasts were, "The members for the southern division of this county," proposed by Mr. N. Earle; "The members for Manchester and Salford," proposed by Mr. Grave; "The town and trade of Manchester:" "The dinner committee;" "The Lancashire Witches." — The company separated about twelve o'clock.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ATTORNEYS AT QUARTER SESSIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—I send you (No. 1) an extract from the Staffordshire Advertiser, containing a report of what took place at our Lichfield Quarter Sessions in July last, and an extract (No. 2) from the same paper of the decision of the learned Recorder given at our October Sessions, confirming the right of attorneys to practise at borough sessions both for prosecutors and prisoners, even when counsel are present.

Having been professionally engaged on both occasions, I can testify to the correctness of both reports.

The brief report given in your former numbers stated the decision to be that of the Chairman of our sessions. This is not strictly correct, for you will perceive it is the deliberate decision of our learned Recorder, Mr. Waddington, after previous communication with Lord Denman on the point in dispute.

Your Norwich correspondent should recommend Mr. Recorder Jeremy to confer with his learned brother Recorder, Waddington, on the subject.

I am, yours, &c.

ALFRED EGGINGTON.

"LICHFIELD QUARTER SESSIONS.

"Thursday, July 11.

"(Before HORACE WADDINGTON, Esq. Recorder.)

"The magistrates present were T. G. Lomax, esq. (mayor,) John Mott, esq. the Rev. T. O. B. Floyer, Thomas Johnson, esq. and R. C. Chawner, esq.

"The proclamation against vice, immorality, &c. having been read, the Recorder briefly addressed the grand jury, of which Mr. Weldhen was foreman; when the trial of prisoners was proceeded with.

"William Arnold was indicted for stealing five pints of milk, the property of the Rev. W. Gresley, on the 19th of May last.

"Mr. Breynton, barrister, conducted the prosecution; and on Mr. Passman, solicitor, of Stafford, appearing for the defence, both Mr. Breynton and Mr. Keyser protested against attorneys appearing as advocates, when there were two barristers present who regularly attended these sessions.

"Mr. Passman insisted on his right, and produced a report from Mr. Carrington, a barrister on the Oxford circuit, of the dispute between the attorneys and barristers at the Oxford sessions, before Mr. Serjeant Manning, (the Recorder of that city,) which dispute was settled by the Recorder taking the opinion of Lord Denman upon the subject, and that learned judge gave it as his opinion that barristers had pre-audience, but not sole audience.

"The RECORDER said he should not, of course, pronounce any opinion in opposition to Lord Denman's. It was an important point, and he should, before the next session, consult his lordship, and lay down a distinct rule to be acted upon for the future. He should hear Mr. Passman and the other attorneys to-day.

"The case for the prosecution against Arnold having closed, Mr. Passman addressed the jury for the prisoner, who was acquitted."

(From the Staffordshire Advertiser of 26th October, 1844.)

"LICHFIELD QUARTER SESSIONS.

"The Michaelmas Quarter Sessions for the city of Lichfield were held on the 23rd instant, before Horace Waddington, esq. Recorder; T. G. Lomax, esq. Mayor; the Rev. T. O. B. Floyer; and W. H. Hewitt, esq.

"Robbery from the person.

"Emma Reynolds and Thomas Fletzher alias Fincher, were indicted, the former for stealing one sovereign, on the 28th September, from the person of Mr. Henry Vale, and the latter for receiving the same, knowing it to have been stolen.

"Mr. Kayser (barrister) appeared for the prosecution, and Mr. A. Eggington (solicitor) appeared for the prisoners.

"The evidence for the prosecution was very contradictory; and after an address from Mr. Eggington, the jury acquitted the prisoners. They were admonished by the Recorder, and discharged.

"Mr. C. B. Passman, on behalf of himself and the other attorneys in court, Mr. A. Eggington and Mr. Birch, begged to ask the learned Recorder for his decision of the question which arose at the last sessions, viz. whether attorneys would be allowed to appear as advocates in this court; in answer to which,

"The RECORDER replied, that he had since communicated with Lord Denman on the subject, and decided that attorneys would be allowed to plead both for prosecutors and prisoners. Barristers would be allowed pre-audience, but not exclusive audience."

LAW OF SETTLEMENT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I am induced, by your remarks and opinion "that the present Law of Settlement will remain unaltered for some years, from the great difficulty of substituting a better in lieu of it," to call your attention to the gross defectiveness of the law as it now stands, and in doing so to state that at present no professional man, however experienced and cautious he may be, even after incurring the expense of advising with counsel, as is generally done, can enter the Court of Quarter Sessions certain of having the merits of his case relating to a pauper's place of settlement gone into. This degree of uncertainty is applicable to the appellants on their grounds of appeal, &c. &c.; and equally so to the respondent's or the pauper's examination, &c.; and if you have personally attended such courts, you cannot fail of being fully aware that the majority of these cases go off on technical points of objection, in no manner affecting the real merits of the pauper's place of settlement, and that the time of the Court is chiefly occupied in hearing arguments of counsel thereon, when the orders of removal are either confirmed or quashed on these points of objection alone, which arise and appear by the ingenuity of counsel, to the utter surprise of the parties concerned therein, in such different and various characters at almost every court of quarter sessions, that it is next to impossible to guard against them; and although they frequently present an insignificant position, yet ultimately prove fatal to the merits. Surely if Sir James Graham is aware of these defects in the law, which materially affect the rights of the poor in respect of settlement, as well as the exceeding great loss and costs sustained by parishes relating thereto, he must see the urgent necessity of amending the present law by substituting one more steady in its operation, and by so doing, insure for the parties concerned the certainty of a fair trial, and decision by the Court upon the real merits of each case, void of these frivolous objections which now constantly defeat the ends of justice.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

P. TAYLOR.

USEFUL HINTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES AND THE VERULAM SOCIETY.

SIR,—In your LAW TIMES and your contemplated publications of a Law Dictionary and Legal Cyclopædia, I would beg to suggest a few observations, which may not be unworthy of notice by the editor of the two latter desirable books, if got up under able hands, and they may be applicable to either one or both of such books.

Let every ancient law term, whether in Latin or French, be given, and attended with an English translation.

Let extracts be judiciously chosen, and the authorities given.

Let there be at the commencement of the work, or when concluded, a table of all ancient and modern reports in chronological order, with their names, and when contemporaries marked, as also what courts they take, with their usual abbreviations, that they may be understood and referred to when necessary. The numerous reporters of late years render this indispensably necessary.

Let there be a table of precedence of the Bench, and of those who have sat on the bench from the earliest times to the present, with the periods when they so sat or were promoted.

Let there be a history of each different court given, i. e. as to its origin and priority, or rank, with the others.

Let an account of the different inns of court be given.

Let all the old words and ancient terms found in old deeds and law books be given and explained—law and equity maxims.

In your LAW TIMES you page the advertisements independent from the other part, which is very desirable; but, unfortunately, your list of bankrupts is sometimes partly in one division, and partly on the other, so that a day or week's list is separated when bound, and then rendered imperfect. Surely this might be altered without trouble, sacrifice, or encroachment, and it will be much more perfect and compact; because a list of bankrupts, easily referred to, is the only thing which renders the advertisement part worth keeping.

Another object much to be desired is a list of magistrates in the various counties, and their residences, which to a professional man is necessary to be known. We had occasion to get a recognizance taken the other day before a Staffordshire magistrate, but were at a loss to find out the one nearest to us without a deal of trouble and travelling further than we should have done had we had proper information at hand. Surely there should be a publication of the sort extant; and it might be in sections, so that we might have our neighbouring counties without being at the expense of purchasing the whole country.

I am sure you will excuse me troubling you with these observations, as it is only for general utility that I venture to suggest them.

I am, Sir, your very obedient servant,

Whitchurch, Salop, JOHN JESSOPP.

[We thank our correspondent for these useful suggestions. The "Legal Cyclopædia" is intended to contain the greater portion of the information desired. The Table just published at the LAW TIMES office, and advertised in another column, supplies, for a shilling, the required list of abbreviations and chronological list of the Reports, and in the much more convenient form of a sheet, which can be readily referred to by the reader. For some months past the Gazettes have been invariably contained in the inner form of the LAW TIMES, so that they are now never divided, as occasionally used to be.—ED. LAW T.]

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY ACT.—AFFIDAVIT VERIFYING CERTIFICATE OF ACKNOWLEDGMENT. — PROMISSORY NOTES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Will any practical men give their opinions on the following points?

1. Section 13 of the Transfer of Property Act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76, enacts that the Act shall not extend to any estate, right, or interest created before the 1st of January, 1845. Suppose a contract entered into for the sale and purchase of real property before the 1st of January, 1845, would a conveyance in the proposed new form by deed be sufficient to pass the interest created under such contract? or will practitioners in such case revert to the recent form of release "made in pursuance, &c." and therein state when the contract was entered into? If the new deed be used, surely an attorney would not be justified in destroying the written contract in order to preclude the probability, on a future investigation of the title, of its revealing the fact of the estate, right, or interest having been originally created before the 1st of January, 1845.

2. In the case of Watts and Others v. Smith (4 Law T. 158), it appears that Tindal, C.J. said generally that he was not aware of any rule that the affidavit verifying the certificate of acknowledgment might not be taken before another of the commissioners who is qualified to take oaths. Now, in the common and more usual case, where there are two commissioners, and the affidavit is made by one of them, can such affidavit properly be made before the other commissioner if he be qualified to take oaths? or is the chief justice's dictum to be confined to circumstances similar to those in the case above cited?

3. A promissory note made in this form:—

14th January, 1845.

Six months after date I promise to pay to C D, his order, twenty-five pounds, together with all lawful interest, from the date hereof, for value received.

A B.

Could C D or his indorsee claim on the note more than 5*l.* per cent. interest under the non-usury Acts, provided he could prove aliunde an agreement to pay such higher rate of interest entered into by A B at the time the note was made? The above form of note appears to be still adhered to in practice, but is it quite correct since the non-usury acts have been in operation?

I am yours, &c.

THOS. L. SHUCKARD,

Wellingborough, Jan. 14, 1845.

INDENTURES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I observe that in the newly-suggested forms of conveyances, under the Transfer of Property Act, your correspondents retain the old construction of the introductory part of the deed, viz. "This indenture or this deed, made the day of , between A B and C D, &c. Whereas, &c."

Before recitals were introduced into deeds, this construction was all very well, proceeding thus, viz. "This indenture made, &c. Witnesseth, &c." But it has often appeared to me that to retain this form of introduction to a deed when recitals are interposed between it and the testatum was not only ungrammatical, but unnecessary. I, therefore, would suggest that when recitals are to be introduced, it would be better to adopt the form following, viz. "Deed made the day of , between A B of the one part, and C D of the other part. Whereas, &c. Now this deed witnesseth, &c."

But when there are no recitals, then the other form may be adopted, viz. "This deed made, &c. Witnesseth, &c. I am yours, &c.

CLERKS OF PETTY SESSIONS BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In prosecutions for offences, even when conducted at the expense of the county, prosecutors have hitherto enjoyed the privilege of employing their own attorneys; but it would seem that by section 9 of the Bill "To Regulate the Appointment and Payment of Clerks and other Officers of the Courts of Petty and Quarter Sessions of the Peace," it is intended that all prosecutions after the passing of that Bill shall be conducted exclusively by justices' clerks. Here, then, is another nibble at the yearly-diminishing emoluments of the general practitioner. In South Wales this branch of Professional business would be taken almost entirely out of the hands of the Profession, the great majority of justices' clerks being non-professional persons. But, apart from this local consideration, it is submitted that every encroachment on the business of the general practitioner in favour of an exclusive class of officials is a direct blow and discouragement to the Profession as a body.

I am yours, &c.

Aberayron, S. Wales, Jan. 13, 1845. J. P.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Dear Sir,—Whilst referring to another case, I found the one undermentioned, cited in 3rd vol. Bosanq. & Pull. 617, which I venture to send in the hope it may be of service to you.

A. delivered goods under the value of 40s. to a carrier in London, pursuant to an order from B, resident in Leicestershire, and received the goods in the latter county. Held that no action for the goods could be maintained in the County Court of Leicestershire, and that the Court of Common Pleas, therefore, could not stay proceedings in an action commenced therein. The action was commenced in the Court of Common Pleas. (Harwood v. Lester, H. 44, G. 3.)

I beg to thank you for the kindness evinced towards me in your last note.

I remain &c.

UNION OF PROVINCIAL LAW SOCIETIES.

We refer to an advertisement of the Resolutions passed at the meeting of the deputies of the various provincial Law Associations, held at Manchester a few days since, as satisfactory proof that the members of the Profession are at length fairly roused to a sense of the necessity of combined efforts for the purification of their Profession and for its protection against the invasions which of late years have been unscrupulously made upon it by successive Parliaments and by all parties. Often have we endeavoured to point out to the attorneys what a power is in their hands, if they would but concentrate it and direct it wisely. Union only could accomplish this, and union is practicable only by a well-planned organization, which might link together in the common cause of their mutual interests all the practitioners resident within certain districts. For years past, Law Clubs have existed in most, if not in all, of the counties; but what were they in practice? Societies of jovial gentlemen, who met at the assizes, devoured a few good dinners, drank their wine, made some complimentary speeches, and parted. For all the purposes of association they were almost worthless, if they were not actually pernicious, by giving an aspect of business which was not performed, and thus deterring individual exertions.

Very early in the career of the Law Times, we, who had practically seen and felt the insufficiency of the existing Attorneys' Clubs, ventured to recommend a reform of the entire system, and we took upon us to frame a scheme for a formal organization of the Profession, which should involve no great change of the existing arrangements, but tend to make them more efficient for the professed purposes of their existence. Our plan was after this wise. We proposed that in each of the large towns, and in each county, or division of a county, there should be formed, where such a society did not already exist, a Law Association; that each Association should send its chairman and secretary to an annual central meeting in London, shortly after the meeting of Parliament, when measures affecting the law and lawyers were likely to be developed; that the business of the central committee should be to consult on all matters bearing upon the interests of the Profession generally, and to recommend to the provincial societies the course to be adopted on the various questions in agitation, and to act, by their united influence, directly upon the members of the legislature for the furtherance or defeat of measures, as they might appear to be beneficial or noxious.

Of this advice, often and earnestly urged, one portion was speedily adopted. Many new Law Societies sprung up, and all appeared to be animated with a fresh spirit, and to be resolved thenceforward to fulfil the purposes of their formation, and devote themselves to the advancement of the true interests of the Profession.

The next movement towards the accomplishment of the grand design we had put forth was suggested by Mr. Taylor, the able and active secretary of the Manchester Law Association, which, under his guidance, has become the most powerful and influential Law Society in England, second in importance only to the Incorporated Society, and more efficient, because more energetic. Mr. Taylor proposed an union of the Provincial Law Societies, and his proposition received very general approval. Deputations from a few of the Societies in the North held a meeting, and the plan was cordially adopted, with what entire success will be seen by the Resolutions which appear among our advertisements to-day.

We are still of opinion that the metropolis would be the most convenient spot for the assembly of a general union of all the Provincial Law Societies in England and Wales, and we hope the Union will, ere long, comprise them all. We are quite aware of, and fully appreciate, the feelings that dictate a meeting in the provinces. We know that there is a fear that a gathering in London might be subject to metropolitan influences, and having seen in what manner other associations, avowedly founded for the benefit of the whole Profession, have been worked for the interests of a few of the powerful in one locality, we are not surprised that there should be a dread of a similar result attending a new movement. But we are satisfied that such a fear, if it exist, is without foundation. The causes that have led to the perversion of other societies could not possibly operate upon this, which, representing exclusively the Provincial Associations, would be of necessity freed from the sway of local interests. And the advantages of a meeting here would be manifest. Here, without inconvenience, and at lesser cost, could come the deputies from every part of the country; to few of them would it be a loss even of that which is as valuable to a professional man as money—his time; for here they would have other business which would make their absence from home less inconvenient. Here, too, they would be upon the spot to apply at once, and most effectively, their united efforts for the staying of noxious legislation, pending or threatened.

However, there will be no difficulty in changing the place of meeting whenever it may be found expedient, and as the Union grows, as grow it must until it embraces all the societies in England and Wales, experience will best shew how its objects may be most efficiently carried out. It is in excellent hands, as the list of officers will prove; and nothing that activity and good sense can do will be wanting to secure its success.

MAGISTRATES' CLERKS BILL.

Last week we published at length the very interesting Report of the Committee of Magistrates' Clerks upon the pending measure for regulating the fees of Petty Sessions. It is a document very creditable to the society from which it emanates. It is conceived in a spirit of liberal concession to the demands for improvement in the administration of the extensive branch of law confided to magistrates. Every word deserves attentive perusal, and there will, we believe, be but few dissentients from the views propounded. We have noted but one portion of the commentary as exceptionable. It is the objection taken to the provision of the Bill that confines the choice of future magistrates' clerks to attorneys. This was a fair and just admission of the principle, that lawyers, properly educated, should be alone employed, if paid, to assist in the administration of the law. It is well known that magistrates, for the most part, being gentlemen ignorant of the law, at least not being regularly instructed in its mysteries, must rely upon their clerks for aid in all questions of law which they are called upon to decide. It is, therefore, of primary importance that the clerk should be a lawyer, or it will be a case of the blind leading the blind. The Government has done wisely in requiring that all future clerks shall be lawyers, and securing this by limiting the choice of justices to an attorney who has been subjected to a formal examination, and so proved his fitness before he is admitted to practise.

We trust that this most wholesome provision will be persevered in, and that the Law Societies will watch it well to see that it is not expunged. We cannot conceive how it came to be objected to by the magistrates' clerks committee, unless it were in deference to some existing interests, to the transmission of which to expectant relations or friends the provision in question was an impediment. But it is well to be known that it has opponents, that the Profession may be prepared to support it with the resolution that a proposal so complimentary to them and so important in itself will deserve.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

The second number of Practice Cases is just ready, and the third is in the press. These will contain the cases of last Term. They will be followed by two more numbers of Real Property Cases, the materials for which are already sent in by the reporters.

The circular proposing various publications for the Society, including the statutes of the coming session, has been distributed, and we hope the members will return them with as little delay as possible.

We direct the attention of the members to the suggestions thrown out in a letter which will be found among the correspondence. They will, we hope, form a new and useful feature of the proposed Cyclopædia of Law.

As the time is come when printers and reporters must be paid, we shall be obliged by the immediate transmission of their entrance fees and subscriptions for the past year, by those who have not yet paid them. As payment of the subscription in advance is the rule of the Society, it would save much trouble and expense if the members would forward their subscription for the present year at their earliest convenience.

It is, we hope, clearly understood that the subscriptions paid are credited to the member's account, and that he will be entitled to its repayment in any of the present or future publications of the Society. The single purpose of having a minimum of subscription is to ensure that each member shall not expend less than a guinea a year with the Society, without which its operations could not be conducted.

The following new members have been enrolled during the past week:—

MR. GEORGE FARREN.

Justice to Mr. Farren, to the Profession, and to ourselves, undoubtedly requires that the Law Times should not, now that it is decided, pass in silence a case which it had been the medium for making public.

Perhaps the fairest course to all the parties concerned will be to recal the facts as they occurred, and then to make such comments upon them as a calm review of the whole may justly claim from gentlemanly feeling.

The facts of this case, then, are shortly as follow:—

About a twelvemonth since an attorney in the country, having a large practice in conveyancing, received by the post a printed Table of Fees for drawing wills, with the name of George Farren, Chancery barrister, printed at the foot of it.

This table was accompanied by a letter, soliciting attention to the inclosed table, asking for business, and offering a commission of 5 per cent. for any business the party addressed might be the means of sending to the writer; and this letter, which was a written one, was subscribed, like the printed table inclosed with it, "George Farren, Chancery barrister."

The solicitor to whom it was addressed knew nothing of any Mr. Farren, and he threw the advertisement and letter into his drawer.

It was some time after this that the Law Times began to call attention to professional malpractices, and published, with due reprobation, divers advertisements by attorneys.

These recalled to the solicitor who had received it the Table of Fees subscribed "George Farren," and deeming that an advertisement by a barrister, and especially such an one as this, was at least as unprofessional as any that had been put forth by attorneys, he forthwith forwarded it to the Law Times, nothing doubting that it was the genuine production of the party whose name and address were upon the face of it.

Neither could we entertain any rational doubt of its authenticity. There appeared no probable motive for any other person taking the trouble to compile, or incurring the cost of printing, so ingenious and elaborately framed a document, for the friendly purpose of obtaining business for Mr. Farren, or with the hostile design of injuring him. We had exposed like practices among the attorneys; in fairness we could not refuse to do the same with the Bar. Accordingly, we published in the columns of the Law Times a fac-simile of this advertisement.

We accompanied it with severe though deserved reprobation of the document itself; but we left it open to Mr. Farren to deny its authenticity, if he could. Our words were these:—"We would fain cherish the hope that it is a fraud; that some enemy hath done it to damage Mr. Farren, and to throw discredit upon the Profession of which he is a member. We will wait for a week, that an opportunity may be given for contradiction or explanation."

Before the next publication, we received a letter from Mr. Farren upon the subject. In this letter he did not indignantly and explicitly deny the charge and repudiate the document; he did not say that it was the doing of an enemy; but he treated it evasively, and, moreover, admitted that his practice, in some particulars, was precisely that which was set forth in a portion of the advertisement.

We must confess that this letter removed any doubt we might have entertained before, and produced in our mind a feeling of absolute conviction that the document, as it purported, had really proceeded from Mr. Farren. And our conclusion was not unnatural. We might be wrong in the supposition, but, judging by what would be our own feelings and conduct in such a case, we presumed that a gentleman publicly charged with an act so unprofessional would, if he were guiltless of it, instantly have denied it upon his honour, asserted that it was a vile forgery, and called upon us to give him such aid as we could render to discover the perpetrator of an outrage so monstrous.

But the assurance produced by the manner in which Mr. Farren first met the imputation, was rendered, in our minds, doubly sure when the next post brought us, from our correspondent, the letter that accompanied the advertisement. Comparing that letter with the letter Mr. Farren had just before addressed to us, we had no hesitation in concluding that the same hand had written both. So like were they, that we still question whether, if a hundred persons who might inspect them side by side, one would be found who would hesitate to swear to his belief that the writer of the one was the writer of the other.

We confidently ask, then, whether, upon the ordinary presumptions which in human affairs men must make from circumstances, we were not fully justified in accepting such an accumulation of evidence as satisfactory proof?

That letter we published also. Again Mr. Farren had an opportunity of giving an explicit denial to the authenticity both of letter and advertisement.

Again he did not do so, although our columns were opened to him for that or for any purpose of explanation. But, instead of so doing, he addressed a letter to the Legal Observer, a copy of which he sent to us, in which he uses the remarkable expression, in relation to the charge of his having [illegible] the advertisement [illegible] perhaps I did not."

At this stage of the matter it was taken up by the Benchers of Lincoln's Inn, of which Society Mr. Farren is a member. At the request of the Benchers we gave to them all the information we possessed as to the manner in which the documents in question came into our hands.

Mr. Farren then for the first time denied upon his honour having composed or caused to be printed or circulated the Table of Fees to which his name was appended, or being in any manner cognizant of it; and the letter that accompanied it he declared to be a forgery of his handwriting and signature; and that, perfectly as it imitated his handwriting, it had not been written by him.

Beyond this, it was of course impossible to carry the proof. It was impossible to produce any person to prove that he saw Mr. Farren write the advertisement or the letter, or put them into the post-office. Nothing less than absolute proof would have justified conviction in the face of a solemn assertion by the accused that the documents were forgeries. So, as we understand, the benchers came to the conclusion, and it was a righteous one, that the charge was not established.

They have discharged their duty with a promptitude, a patience of investigation, and a justice of decision, which will deserve and receive the cordial thanks of the Profession whose integrity and reputation they have been so zealous to protect.

But now a duty devolves upon the Law Times, which it will not be slow to perform.

The Law Times was the public instrument through which the charge was preferred. That charge being held to be "not proven," (to employ the useful and expressive Scotch verdict), the question presents itself, what course do justice and gentlemanly feeling dictate as proper to be pursued by the Law Times?

To determine this we must first resolve the only question that can arise upon the facts we have narrated; namely, "Did the evidence justify the publication?" For there will be no difference of opinion that the severity of our comments upon the advertisement and letters, supposing them to be genuine, was amply deserved by the occasion; but were we entitled to treat them as genuine?

Upon maturest deliberation we are satisfied that we were justified in accepting them as authentic. Editors, equally with other persons, are entitled to act upon the ordinary presumptions that guide reasonable men. Among these presumptions are, 1st, That a printed paper, with a name and address subscribed, emanates from the party whose name it bears; 2nd, That a letter or paper in the handwriting of any man is not a forgery; 3rd, That when charged with the production of the printed paper to which his name appears, and the letter apparently in his handwriting, those documents being offences against the laws of etiquette, not instantly to disown them is tacitly to admit their authenticity. We say that these were presumptions which we were entitled to form; and that in foro conscientiæ we were justified in accepting them as evidence, if not conclusive, at least so strong as to put Mr. Farren upon his defence, and to call upon him for a contradiction.

We are satisfied, therefore, that the Law Times has in this matter done no more than was its duty, nor acted in aught unfairly or inconsiderately.

Mr. Farren complains that, before their publication in the Law Times, the documents were not presented to him to ascertain if they were authentic.

But we cannot admit the justice of this complaint. As we have before observed, certain presumptions are permissible, nay, necessary, in human affairs. Of these, one is that a book, an address, or an advertisement, is written by the party whose production it is on the face of it stated to be, unless there be something in its contents to indicate an imposition. Another is, that a letter in a man's handwriting, and bearing his signature, is the writing it purports to be, and not a forgery; nor, in dealing with either, is it in practice deemed necessary, before it is treated as authentic, to ask the apparent author if it was his book, or the apparent writer if it be a forgery? We readily allow that this reasonable presumption is not sufficient to justify a conviction and its consequences; but it is enough to put the party upon his defence and to require of him a contradiction.

And if Mr. Farren had, in the first instance, as he ought to have done, positively asserted his innocence, declared the documents to be forgeries, and sought to trace the offender, instead of saying "perhaps I did—perhaps I didn't," there would have been an end of the matter; for such a contradiction would have been at once accepted by everybody as quite satisfactory. He has but himself to blame for results which he might have avoided by candidly stating at the first that which he stated at last.

Nor does the LAW TIMES owe any apology to Mr. FARREN for having brought the matter forward. It is, indeed, for him a most fortunate circumstance that it did so. But for the notice taken of it here, there would have been still circulating through the country forged advertisements and forged letters, bearing his name, in their contents most disreputable to his professional character, and he might never have known the fact, never have had the opportunity of discovering the perpetrator which has now been afforded to him.

All, therefore, that justice requires of the LAW TIMES, and most cheerfully does it perform the duty, is to spread Mr. FARREN's positive denial as widely as it circulated the charge, and to retract, which it does in the amplest manner, whatever expressions it may have applied to him under the impression that he was the author of the advertisement and letter that bore his name.

We cannot quit the subject, without expressing an opinion that Mr. FARREN ought to use the most strenuous exertions to discover the perpetrator of these monstrous and most unaccountable forgeries. We will readily join him in offering a handsome reward to any person who may give information that may lead to detection. We will gladly share with him the cost of having the advertisement copied and the letter lithographed and circulated, with a reward to any printer, compositor, pressman, or other person, who will give information where or when such a document was printed, or to any person who, having in possession, or having even seen, a copy of it, may enable us to trace it to its source.

Such a reward offered by Mr. FARREN would most probably bring to light the author of the forgery, for the rules of secrecy observed in printing offices would no longer stand in the way of discovery if he would request those who know aught about it to speak out.

Or will Mr. FARREN authorize us to publish such an advertisement in his name? We should not regard some cost to trace this imposture to its author.

We scarcely need add, that if any of our readers have received similar circulars, or have seen such, or can inform us aught about them, they will confer a very great obligation on Mr. FARREN by transmitting to us all the particulars their memories or files may enable them to furnish. It is the duty of the members of the Profession, nay of every person, to aid in the discovery of a forgery of this monstrous nature, against which no character is safe.

Since the above was written, we have learned that some misconstruction is afloat as to the manner in which the facts above stated came to the knowledge of the LAW TIMES. Our correspondent's first letter, inclosing the advertisement, was mislaid among the heavy mass of our daily correspondence. The second, inclosing Mr. FARREN's letter, was anonymous. In consequence of a request in our columns for information as to the manner in which the documents came to our correspondent, whose name we did not know, he called in person upon the editor, and stated the facts detailed above. He declined to give us his name or address, which are still unknown to us; but he quitted us with a promise that he would consult his agent, and if so advised by him, would communicate the whole of the facts, with his name in confidence to one of the Benchers of Lincoln's-inn. We are not informed whether he has done this, but if he have not, we must call upon him, in justice to Mr. FARREN as well as to ourselves, to do so, that we may be enabled to trace the forgery forthwith. If this be not done, we shall be compelled to take measures for identifying him by means of his handwriting in our possession. We appeal to him as a gentleman to give to the Bencher we named to him, if not already communicated, the promised particulars, which, if he pleases, he may do confidentially. We hope in a day or two to hear from him that this has been done, and he may rely upon it that he shall be subjected to no inconvenience, and that he may with perfect safety commit himself to the confidence which the LAW TIMES will never violate.

THE CRITIC.

New Works.

Table of the Abbreviations most commonly used in citing the Reports, together with a Chronological Table of the Reports. London: LAW TIMES Office.

THE most valuable contributions to the office are those which appear in the tabular form, printed upon sheets, or mounted upon boards, so that they may be suspended within range of the eye. Every lawyer must have found within his own experience how apt we are all to neglect a reference when it can be made only by rising from the seat and exploring the library. Nor is this the only mischief. No inconsiderable time is wasted in travelling through an index, and turning over pages, and not unfrequently we are unable to find on the moment the information we seek. But well-digested and well-arranged Tables require but a turn of the eye to furnish the fact sought for, without waste of time or trial of patience.

Experience of the great convenience of such tables as the Profession already possesses, and of the want of others not yet supplied, occasioned us some time since to suggest to the most industrious and ingenious of our contributors the propriety of preparing such as seemed to be most needed.

And there appeared to be no more immediate requirement than a Table of the Abbreviations commonly used in citing the Reports. Who does not find himself daily perplexed by initial letters attached to cases? And who has not felt how useful would be a Table that should present them in alphabetical order, so that the eye might immediately light upon a solution of the mystery? Accordingly we recommended the preparation of such a Table to one of our contributors, who, with the most commendable industry, succeeded in perfecting it, and it was presented to our readers in the columns of the LAW TIMES.

But if limited to the pages of a crowded volume, it was evident that its utility would be very considerably curtailed. We have, therefore, induced the compiler to add to the list many that had been there omitted, and lists of the Irish and Scotch Reports, and a still more useful and valuable chronological table of the English Reports, exhibiting the dates of each, and their order in time. The work, thus made complete, has been printed on a sheet for suspension in the office, or in chambers, and is transmitted through the post, or can be had ready mounted upon mill-board, but in this form it can only be inclosed in a parcel, or procured through booksellers.

This is, we believe, the first complete work of the kind ever attempted, and we trust it will be found in practice as useful as its projectors anticipated. At all events no labour has been spared in the framing of it to ensure accuracy, and the printer has performed his portion of it with great taste.

Should this first essay meet with approbation, some other works of a similar class will be attempted.

THE REPORTS.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Saturday, Jan. 11.

TOLEDO v. VIETA.

Revivor—Guardian or curator of incapacitated person—Executor—Costs.

Where a bill had been filed by a person appointed by a foreign court of competent jurisdiction to be the curator or guardian of a person, a native of that foreign country, found to be of unsound mind, and by the lunatic, against a trustee in whose name funds had been invested by the lunatic for the benefit of third parties, and the suit had abated by the death of the lunatic, when the trustee of the fund obtained probate of his will, it was held that such defendant could not call upon the guardian to revive the suit in order to obtain the dismissal of the bill with costs.

This was a motion to discharge an order made by the Vice-Chancellor of England upon a motion by the defendant Vieta, that the bill might be dismissed as against that defendant, unless Don Emanuel Toledo, the survivor, should within two weeks revive the suit. The suit had been originally commenced by Toledo and the Duke del Infantado, to set aside a trust which had been created by the duke in favour of Madame Montenagro and her infant children, on the ground of fraud and the incompetency of the duke. The trust fund consisted of about 10,000*l.* Consols, standing in the name of Vieta, a Spanish physician, as trustee for Madame Montenagro and her children. This lady had lived with the duke as his mistress for many years, and the children were the duke's. The duke was a very old man at the time of the creation of the trust. Having been found, in 1839, by the proper tribunal at Madrid, to be of unsound mind, and incompetent to manage his property, the plaintiff Toledo was appointed his curator, or guardian. In that character Toledo, in his own name and that of the duke, commenced a suit in equity against Vieta, the trustee, and against Madame Montenagro and her children, to set aside the trust, and compel the transfer of the fund to the plaintiff Toledo, as the duke's curator.

Before the cause came to a hearing the duke died, in November 1841, and after some contest in the Ecclesiastical Court, the defendant Vieta obtained probate of his will, by which he, Vieta, was appointed executor. This will was dated prior to the date of the finding of the duke's insanity by the Spanish tribunal, and was limited to the disposal of this trust-fund. The duke had died in Paris, where he and Madame Montenagro were domiciled, and the question as to the validity of the trust was contested between the duke's heirs and Madame Montenagro in the French courts, and there, after several appeals, declared to be a good and subsisting trust. Vieta had alone appeared in this suit, the other defendants being out of the jurisdiction.

After the duke's death, and pending the contest of his probate in the Ecclesiastical Court, the Vice-Chancellor of England directed Toledo, the curator, as surviving plaintiff, to file a bill for the preservation of the trust-fund, in which suit the defendant Vieta was enjoined from transferring it. Probate was granted to the defendant in Nov. 1842, when he obtained an ex parte order for dissolving the injunction, on payment of the costs of Toledo out of the fund. But upon an appeal to the Lord Chancellor that part of the order which directed the costs of the plaintiff Toledo to be paid out of the fund was discharged.

The object of the present motion was, that the plaintiff might revive the original bill, that it might be dismissed with costs. The sole question was, whether on the death of a lunatic co-plaintiff the defendant can compel the committee to revive or have the bill dismissed with costs.

Rolt, for the motion, cited Chowick v. Dimes (7 Beav. 290), and Canham v. Vincent (in a note to that case).

Lloyd and Bennet contrà.—It was like the case of the death of a sole plaintiff, where it is held by the Master of the Rolls and the Vice-Chancellor of England the defendant can move against the personal representative to revive. Still the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce and Wigram held the contrary.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The defendant now represents the Duke del Infantado, for whose benefit the surviving plaintiff, Toledo, commenced the suit. He fills both characters, plaintiff and defendant. He alone can revive the suit. The estate is now out of the plaintiff, and how can he go on with the suit? The event by which the suit has been determined was the act of God. Here the surviving plaintiff cannot revive, and the defendant must take the consequences. The plaintiff cannot go on with the suit; he cannot proceed with the cause by reason of the act of Heaven. I cannot say to the plaintiff, you must revive or pay the costs; for in effect an order to revive would be an order for costs, occasioned by the death of the person the surviving plaintiff represents. It is from an act of Providence that he cannot proceed in the suit. Vieta will not let him proceed, for he fills two characters. He represents the duke and Madame Montenagro. This has the effect of a stet processus. The plaintiff is prevented by a superior power. Each party must remain in his actual position.

Motion refused, with costs of the appeal.

Non-payment of costs of former application—Second rehearing—Practice.

Though a defendant who is in contempt for non-payment of costs is entitled to be heard on an application to discharge the very order in respect of which he is in contempt, that does not entitle him to apply for a second re-hearing until the costs awarded against him on the first have been paid.

The defendant in these suits having given notice of a motion to get rid of the effect of certain orders which have been made upon him,

Cooper was proceeding to open the motion in the first cause, when Calvert, for the plaintiffs, objected that the question raised by the present motion was substantially the same as that which his lordship had decided upon the former motion, of which the costs awarded against the defendant were still unpaid. The defendant was, therefore, in contempt, and could not be heard.

Cooper contended that the present motion was to get rid of the order by which the defendant was in contempt, and therefore that he had a right to move for its discharge without first paying the costs.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The defendant is coming here to ask for a second re-hearing without having paid the costs he was ordered to pay upon the first re-hearing. He is in contempt by my order of the 11th of January, 1843, whereby he was directed to pay certain costs, and you are not now moving to discharge that order; and you cannot apply to discharge that order, because it would be a second re-hearing. He cannot renew the motion without having paid the costs of the first. A defendant can move to discharge the very order by which he is in contempt, but he cannot apply for a second re-hearing without having paid the costs upon the first. The defendant cannot go on.

The motions in the two causes refused with costs.

ROLLS COURT.

Saturday, Nov 9, 1844, and Jan. 11, 1845.

Ex parte JOLLIFFE.

Construction of the statute 56 Geo. 3, c. 60—Forgery—Personation—Transfer of stock—Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt.

Executors by accident overlook stock standing in the name of their testator, and the dividends being unclaimed thereon for ten years, the stock is transferred to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, pursuant to stat. 56 Geo. 3, c. 60. A person falsely pretending to be the grandson, executor, and sole residuary legatee of the testator, obtains from the Ecclesiastical Court probate of a paper writing, purporting to be the will of the testator, but of a later date than the real will; and on production of the probate at the bank, obtains a transfer of the stock in question, pursuant to the Act. The forgery being discovered, the pretended executor is transported, and so unable to refund. Held, that the executors of the real will were entitled to a transfer from the commissioners.

This was an application to the Court under the 56 Geo. 3, c. 60, for an order to re-transfer a sum of stock which had been transferred to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, under and by virtue of the said Act, which enacts that if stock, the dividends on which shall remain unclaimed for ten years, shall be transferred to the commissioners, and that the dividends shall accumulate, &c. The Act also indemnifies the bank for making the transfer, and authorizes a re-transfer to any claimant, upon his establishing his title thereto. It also directs that a second claimant proving his right to the stock, and unable to obtain the transfer or payment thereof from the first claimant, may obtain an order from the Court of Chancery, &c. upon petition, presented in a summary way, to the commissioners, to transfer so much as shall be sufficient to meet his claim. The Act also directs a list to be kept at the bank for the entry of the particulars of transfers, and to be open for public inspection.

This application arose out of the proceedings in the case of the notorious Barber, Fletcher, and Saunders, and was as follows:—Mary Hunt, of Bristol, widow, died so long ago as the year 1806, possessed of (among other sums of stock) 1,210*l.* Three per Cent. Consols, and having by her will duly appointed Peter William Jolliffe, Cornwall Jolliffe, and William Burgess, her executors and trustees, who proved the will and got in all the property but the 1,210*l.* Consols. The way this happened was this. Messrs. Grote and Co. of London, received the dividends on the several stocks, under a power of attorney, and transmitted them to Messrs. Bayley and Co. (formerly Messrs. Tyndal & Co.), their correspondents in Bristol, but who were not the bankers of Mary Hunt. Messrs. Bayley and Co. were in the habit of entering the dividends received, not under the name of the person entitled to them, but under the particular stock (as a head of account) for which they had been received. On the death of Mrs. Hunt, the executors, by their solicitors, the Messrs. Maltby, applied at the bank of Messrs. Bayley and Co. and an account of the other stocks was obtained, but unfortunately the 1,210*l.* Consols were overlooked. The executors, on presenting probate of the will at the Bank of England, got the transfer of the other stocks; but Messrs. Grote, who knew nothing of Mary Hunt, continued, from 1807 to 1830, to receive the dividends on the 1,210*l.* Consols, and to transmit them to Messrs. Bayley. In 1830 the survivor of the partners of the firm, to whom the power of attorney had been given, died, and no dividends being claimed afterwards, and down to 1840, the stock in question was transferred into the names of the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt. In 1842, William Saunders, representing himself to be Thomas Hunt, grandson and executor and sole residuary legatee of Mary Hunt, formerly of Bristol, but late of Marylebone, in the county of Middlesex, under her will, bearing date the 11th of December, 1829, of which he duly took out probate, obtained a re-transfer of the stock, and payment of the dividends thereon. This will being discovered, in the proceedings alluded to, to be a fabrication, and Saunders being convicted and transported, the Messrs. Jolliffe, the surviving executors of the real will of Mrs. Hunt, now applied for an order for the transfer by the commissioners of such sum of stock as they should think right, Saunders being, of course, unable to satisfy their claim.

Kindersley and Hetherington, for the petition.

Tuiss (with him Wray), contrà.—The true construction of the Act (s. 7) is, that if, under the circumstances, there should not have been a transfer, and the bank would have had no defence for making it, neither would the commissioners, and vice versâ. In this case there is no just claim, for the bank were quite justified. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Your proposition is this, if the bank would have been justified in making the transfer, so are the commissioners?] Yes; the Legislature put their agents, the commissioners, in the place of the bank, indemnifying them where the bank would be indemnified; and leaving them liable where the bank would have been liable. Here the payment has been made to a lawful probate, and the debt is gone on the part of the bank, and therefore of the commissioners. (Allen v. Dundas, 3 T. R. 823; Woolley v. Clark, 5 B. & Ald. 744; Digby and Hollis v. Wray, Bac. Ab. tit. Ex. & Ad. E. 13.) But next, the executors are guilty of laches, because, first, they did not search the papers of Mary Hunt, where they would have found information; secondly, they did not give correct particulars at the bank to the clerk, who stated there were many Mary Hunts; and, thirdly, they permitted the power of attorney to be exercised after her death. The bankers at Bristol were negligent certainly, but that is the negligence of the executors, whose agents they were. The authority of the probate was good to the bank as long as it stood, and they could not resist payment. As to costs, they came out of the fund recovered in the absence of special circumstances; here there are none. (Ex parte Ram, 3 My. & Cr. 25; Ex parte Loferti, V. C. 22 April, 1837; Re Holland, 1 Phil. 379.)

Kindersley, in reply.—I admit the general practice is so as to costs. It is admitted the executors had the right, and have lost it by payment to a lawful probate, i. e. the probate of the Ecclesiastical Court to an executor of a Mary Hunt, who died in 1829. I am supposing a real Thomas Hunt as represented, and a real Mary Hunt, who died in 1829. If Saunders had represented him, and got payment, would not the right Thomas Hunt have got the transfer?

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I will read the Act; but I cannot think there is much doubt about the case.

JUDGMENT.

Saturday, Nov. 11.—The MASTER of the ROLLS.—[His lordship stated the facts.] The surviving executors having become aware that Mary Hunt was entitled to the 1,210*l.* Consols, applied to the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, asking for a transfer, but they were told that in 1842 the stock had been transferred to Thomas Hunt. They therefore, by this petition, asked that the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt might re-transfer the stock to them. From the evidence which has been brought forward, it appears that the stock was the property of Mary Hunt, and that the petitioners, as her executors, were entitled to it, and they might have had it any time before the 5th of January, 1840, and also before the transfer made to Thomas Hunt. But in 1842, a paper writing, purporting to be the will of Mary Hunt, formerly of Bristol, but late of Marylebone, and bearing date the 14th day of December, 1829, was forged, and by that will, after stating that Mary Hunt was possessed of a sum of about 1,210*l.* Consols, it bequeathed the stock to Thomas Hunt. This supposed legatee was personated by William Saunders, who, by fraud and perjury, obtained probate of the forged will, and got the 1,210*l.* transferred to him. Under the circumstances, therefore, it must be considered that the Governor and Company of the Bank of England were indemnified under the provision of the 5 & 6 Geo. 3, c. 60, but it did not extend further. The executors had now established their right, but they were unable to recover the stock from the person to whom it had been transferred, and under section 7 of the Act, it was said the commissioners were not bound to transfer the stock, as they had been induced to make an erroneous transfer. It could not be considered that the commissioners had a right to that protection which the bank might have had. They had no authority to consider William Saunders as Thomas Hunt, or that he should be treated as Thomas Hunt. It was also argued that the executors had been guilty of laches, and that they might have discovered the stock from the papers of the deceased, as also from her agents; but the mode in which the bankers kept their accounts gave no information that Mary Hunt had the stock in question. I do not, therefore, think the executors have forfeited their right; on the contrary, they have a right to the order, but in deference to precedents, the costs must come out of the fraud.

Re ELDERTON.

The 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, gives no jurisdiction to adjudicate on petition as to the taxation of a bill of costs where there is a special agreement as to the payment thereof.

Mr. Elderton was employed by Mr. Winkworth, the petitioner in this case, as his solicitor, in several transactions down to 1840; and four several bills of costs, amounting in all to 125*l.* 6*s.* 7*d.* were delivered to the petitioner. It was then agreed that Mr. Elderton should accept 100*l.* in full for all demands, which accordingly, on the 27th February, 1840, he did, in two bills of exchange amounting together to that sum. There was business afterwards transacted by him for the petitioner, and a bill of costs, amounting to about 29*l.* was delivered; but it was stated that one of the items of it was an item included in one of the former bills, and upon Mr. Elderton's attention being drawn to that circumstance, he said it did appear singular, but he would waive that item, and so the bill would only amount to about 25*l.* This being refused, Mr. Elderton brought his action at law. The petitioner now wished to make out that by including the item in question in the last bill the agreement was annulled by Mr. Elderton, and on that footing sought to have taxation of all the bills.

Turner, for the petition.

Elderton, contra.

The MASTER of the ROLLS stated the facts, and said he could not grant the petition, as he could not, under the Act, adjudicate upon the agreement. Taxation of the last bill must be allowed, but the part waived by Elderton must not be included. There must also be costs.

Re WOOD.

Taxation of a bill of costs—Payment within the year under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 78.

This case is reported in 4 Law T. 100, and it stood over for an affidavit as to the specific payment there mentioned. It now appeared from the affidavit of Wood that the bill was not fully paid, as stated, by mistake on the 27th of August, 1842, but on the 3rd Nov. 1842, 5*l.* was paid, and that 3*s.* 1*d.* the balance, was allowed by him (Wood) to Shillito, the bankrupt. This was also sworn to by Shillito, but there was no entry of the 5*l.* in his books.

Wright contended that this was payment of the first bill one year before the petition for taxation. As to the second bill, there was only a sum of 5*l.* on a bill of 21*l.* 12*s.* 10*d.* objected to, and that two guineas for a draft of a statement of evidence to lay before counsel, one of the items, was not too much; nor was two guineas for engrossing it on parchment, and two sums of 6*s.* 8*d.* for attendance, extravagant.

Turner, contra, said there was an item in the second bill corresponding to the 3*s.* 1*d.* allowed in the first, and so there was no payment of the first till the date of payment of the second, and therefore it was taxable, being in time.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I cannot presume either of the two guineas in the second bill an improper charge—it seems reasonable; and if those are the only items objected to, I ought not, in mercy to the petitioner, to grant the petition. I must take the first bill to have been paid, but the evidence is very unsatisfactory. I dismiss the petition without costs.

Re CAREW.

The Vice-Chancellors have jurisdiction to make orders for the taxation of bills of costs as well as the Master of the Rolls, though the latter and the Lord Chancellor only are mentioned in the Solicitors Act.

In this case, which is reported in 4 Law T. 231, costs were asked to be taxed as between solicitor and client by a third party who was liable to pay them, though in the first instance incurred by a trustee to his solicitor.

The MASTER of the ROLLS allowed the same taxation as the trustee might himself have had against the solicitor, and took occasion to observe that he was astonished all petitions for taxation were set down at the Rolls, though if presented to the Lord Chancellor, he had jurisdiction, by the Solicitors Act, to hear them, and could transfer that jurisdiction to any of the Vice-Chancellors, who could, of course, then hear them.

Transfer of supplemental suits—Practice.

This was an application for an order respecting the removal of this cause to Vice-Chancellor Wigram's paper. A decree had been made so long ago as 1834 at the Rolls, and a supplemental suit having been instituted, an order was made on the 11th of May, 1842, to transfer it from the Rolls to Vice-Chancellor Wigram's Court. In 1843 a fresh supplemental bill was filed, and in both supplemental suits a decree was made, reserving further directions. A motion being made in the original cause, a question arose whether it had been transferred from the Rolls, and on its appearing that it had not, the Vice-Chancellor suggested that the case should be mentioned to the Lord Chancellor, who directed application to be made to the Master of the Rolls, who knew the merits of the question. Accordingly, Piggott now applied for an order to transfer, and mentioned what had taken place. It had been assumed, he said, that the necessary effect of the transfer of the supplemental suit was to transfer the original cause. Nothing could now be done at the Rolls.

Rolt, contra, said his client had instructed him to oppose the application, as it would be very inconvenient.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Mere inconvenience is not a sufficient objection. The motion must be granted; the only difficulty is the form of the order. The supplemental cause was in the paper, and therefore a fit subject of transfer; but the original cause is not in the paper, and is, therefore, not a fit subject of transfer. The order must be to carry the cause to Vice-Chancellor Wigram's paper, with directions that all proceedings taken therein shall be considered as taken at the Rolls. I will think of the form.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Saturday, January 11.
GARMSTONE v. GAUNT.

Vendor and purchaser—Renewal fines.

A gift by will to trustees of leaseholds for lives in trust during the life of A. B. by and out of the rents and profits, or otherwise, to keep the premises in repair and full lived, and to pay the fines and expenses attending any renewals and repairs thereof, does not authorize the sale of the whole lease in order to meet the expenses of renewal.

A decree having been made for the purpose of raising money for the renewal of a lease for lives vested in trustees whose trusts did not authorize a sale of the whole, the Court, upon the motion of a purchaser of the whole, to be discharged from the payment of his purchase-money, suggested that a good title might be made by a reference to the Master upon this motion, and upon one which might be made for a sale by a party who had already advanced money to pay the fines, and who claimed a lien on account thereof, and upon the second motion being made accordingly, the Court directed a reference for the purpose of curing the defect of title.

William Weaver, of Glaines, in the county of Worcester, gentleman, by his will dated the 29th of May, 1838, gave certain leaseholds for lives to trustees, "in trust during the life of his daughter, Mary Weaver, by and out of the rents and profits, or otherwise to keep the premises in repair and full lived, and to pay the fines and expenses attending any renewals and repairs thereof, and subject thereto to permit his daughter Mary Weaver to receive the rents and profits thereof for her life, and after her death, in trust for all and every her children." The testator then proceeded to give to trustees other premises, also leaseholds for lives, for the benefit of Jane Hammond, William Weaver, and Ezekiel Gummery respectively, and in each of these cases the trusts were expressed in similar terms, except that the words "or otherwise," were omitted. The testator then gave to trustees other premises, leasehold for lives, "in trust during the life of his daughter Emma, to keep the same full lived and in tenantable repair, and to pay the fines and expenses attending the renewal and repairs, and subject thereto, in trust, &c.," as in the first case.

The whole of the property was held under one lease, and the bill filed was for the general administration of the testator's estate, and also for provision to be made for the keeping up the lease by renewal of the lives. A reference having been made to the Master, he found that on account of the poverty of the family, and other circumstances mentioned in his report, it would be proper that the whole of the property should be sold. A decree was made according to the Master's report, but the special circumstances of the case were not then brought under the attention of the Court. To prevent the lease from falling in, a Mr. Williams advanced the money for the renewal. A sale having afterwards been made of the property under the decree, Shapter now, on behalf of the purchaser, moved that he might be discharged from payment of the purchase-money, the Court not having jurisdiction to order the sale of the whole lease. He cited Pelo v. Gardner (2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 312), and Calvert v. Godfrey (6 Bea. 97), to shew that however beneficial a sale might be for infants, the Court could not order it under such circumstances as the present. The cases of Stone v. Theed (2 Bro. Ch. Ca. 243), and Reeves v. Creswick (3 Y. & Coll. 315), were also cited.

Terrell, for the plaintiffs, opposed the application, and contended that a sale was the only mode by which the trust estate could be made available for the cestuique trust, and that the words of the will authorized a sale. He cited Allen v. Backhouse (2 Ves. & Bea. 65), and Mondey v. Mondey (1 Ves. & Bea. 223).

Temple, for one of the defendants, in the same interest as the plaintiffs, urged that it was impossible that the purchaser's title could ever be placed in jeopardy.

K. Parker, for other defendants.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that it appeared to him that, considering what had been done in Allen v. Backhouse, and the principle applicable to such a case, if Mr. Williams had applied to the Court, stating that he had advanced the money, &c. then, upon his motion and Mr. Shapter's, a reference being made to the Master, a good title might be made upon the Master's report. In the case of Allen v. Backhouse the only reference was to inquire as to the raising money by sale or mortgage. But the learned judge who decided that case did not think of going beyond the sale of part. If the present application had been that of a person substantially a mortgagee, the case might be different. His Honour considered this title to be too doubtful to force upon a purchaser, but if the purchaser were willing to take, and Mr. Williams's counsel were to move in the way His Honour mentioned, a good title might perhaps be made.

Temple then moved on behalf of Mr. Williams.

Shapter argued that there was no title in the trustees even to mortgage, and cited Wilson v. Halliley (1 R. & Myl. 590); Ridout v. Earl of Plymouth (2 Atk. 104); and Henneage v. Lord Andover (3 Y. & J. 360).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he should make an order on the two motions, all the parties to the suit appearing on Mr. Williams's motion and not opposing. Mr. Williams's motion would be, that since the order of the Court Mr. Williams having advanced the moneys necessary for renewal on behalf of the parties interested therein, and that the amount so paid was the sum of £—, and that he was desirous that the same should be raised by sale or mortgage, he moves that the property included in the lease may be sold or otherwise made applicable for the purpose of discharging his lien, he submitting to the jurisdiction of the Court; whereupon the Court refers it to the Master to inquire whether he has paid the sum, and when, and whether the same was a proper payment; and if the Master shall find that the same was so made as alleged by him, and was properly so made, then let the Master inquire whether, having regard to that circumstance and to the rights of all parties interested, it will be for the benefit of the parties interested or to be interested under the testator's will, that the sale made to Mr. Shapter's client be carried into effect. His Honour added, that he was of opinion that the title had been properly questioned by the purchaser's counsel, but he thought that this order would remedy it.

January 14.—Shapter this morning mentioned that he was willing to take the order suggested by the Court without a reference to the Master, and accordingly it was arranged between the parties that the proposed order should be made upon Mr. Williams's affidavit as to the sum advanced by him.

MURRAY v. VIBART.

Service of subpœna to appear and answer.

Quære, whether, where a party is resident abroad, a subpœna to appear and answer a bill may be served on a solicitor who has a general power to act for that party in all matters connected with the subject of the suit?

Anderson moved ex parte for an injunction to restrain the transfer of certain stock standing in the name of one of the defendants in the books of the Bank of England. The defendant was resident at Boulogne, and it was asked that the Court would order that the service of the subpœna to appear and answer might be made upon the solicitor who was acting for the defendant in all the matters connected with the suit. The case of Hobhouse v. Courtney (12 Sim. 140) was cited.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR granted the injunction, but said that he should prefer the question as to the service to be brought before the Lord Chancellor.

Monday, January 13.
SAMUEL v. GIBBS.
Trustees—Composition of debt.

Trustees are not justified, without an express authority, to compound debts, however expedient and beneficial such composition may be shewn to be.

This cause came on on further directions. The defendants were trustees under a deed of the 2nd of November, 1833, and they had compromised a debt of one Captain Coode under an indenture of the 20th of August, 1835. The Master had reported in favour of the arrangement, though no power was given to the trustees to compromise. The question now raised by the plaintiff was, as to the right of the defendants to compromise the debt.

R. Parker and Wilcock, for the plaintiff.

Simpkinson and S. Miller, for the defendants.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I think that the plaintiff was entitled to reject the arrangement of 1835, however expedient and beneficial. He has exercised that right, and receiving no damage he can claim no benefit under it. It has been suggested that the inquiry as to the expediency and beneficial nature of the arrangement implied or intimated an opinion on the part of the Court that the arrangement, if expedient and beneficial, would bind the plaintiff. I am not, and was not at the time, of that opinion. But there were other material purposes to be answered by that inquiry apart from any notion that if the arrangement were expedient and beneficial, it would not have been in the power of the plaintiff, if he desired, to reject it. As the case stands, all the creditors have been satisfied and have released except the plaintiff and another creditor named Blencoe. Upon the footing of rejecting the arrangement of 1835, the trustees have now in their hands the sum of 74*l*. 4s. 2d. I think upon that sum there can be no claim except those of the plaintiff and Blencoe, and that that sum should be divided between them in proportion to the amount of their debts. The trustees must pay the plaintiff his share, and they must retain another portion for Blencoe. It was then said that a case existed for impeaching the trustees, which could be made out either directly or by instituting an inquiry into their conduct, which would fix them with wilful default. I do not see sufficient materials to warrant me in this stage of the cause in directing such an inquiry. I do not give a positive opinion, for very probably the arrangement of 1835 did not amount to a release of the covenant in the former deed; but whether it does or not, it is not so put in issue before me, or made matter of complaint. With regard to the circumstances of Coode we have information that the sale of his commission was expedient and beneficial to the creditors under the deed of 1833: such was the finding of the Master. It must not be supposed that more could have been produced. It is then said that Coode's personal representative has received assets. That may be so. If the plaintiff is desirous of ascertaining what can be done under the covenant or otherwise, he may proceed against the executrix of Coode, using the names of the covenantees in the deed of 1833, indemnifying them and undertaking to deal with the produce of the action, if there should be any, as the Court shall direct. Then come the costs. Primâ facie trustees are entitled to deduct their costs out of the trust fund. But these trustees—though with the best intentions—have acted in a manner not strictly regular. They have sought to bind the plaintiff by a transaction which was not capable of binding him, and they have dealt with his interests in a manner which they were not authorized to do. From these circumstances, in a great measure, have arisen the costs of this suit. On the whole, though I impute no intentions, except good intentions, to these trustees, I think that I cannot allow their costs. Honestly, and with the best intentions, they made an arrangement which the Master finds was expedient and beneficial for all the creditors, under the circumstances of the case, and considering if the plaintiff had desired to have such payment as he was entitled to under the deed of 1833, he might have had it, I think I am acting with sufficient strictness in merely refusing costs. I give no costs on either side.

VICE-CHANCELLOR WIGRAM'S COURT.

Wednesday, Jan. 22.
JUDGMENT.
WILSON v. GOODMAN.
Contribution—Liability of bankrupt after obtaining their certificates.

The bill in this cause was filed for obtaining contribution from such of the trustees of certain turnpike roads as were not immediately liable, on the ground of their having attended the meetings of the trustees, and taken part in certain transactions alleged in the bill. One of the trustees (a defendant) had, subsequently to the time the liabilities were incurred, become a bankrupt, and obtained his certificate.

His HONOUR said that it was quite clear that if trustees for making a turnpike road under an Act of Parliament, similar to the one in the present case, acted strictly according as the Act directed, they would not incur any personal liability. Such a liability could only arise from a contract, express or implied; and when such existed, it must always depend upon the acts of each trustee whether as against him any liability could attach; and each trustee who by any act made himself liable to a creditor, would, as between himself and other persons, be liable only to his proportion of the debt; and that if any one were compelled by the creditor to pay the whole debt, such person might enforce contribution as against the others who had not paid, but who really were jointly liable. One of the parties who had so made himself liable to contribute his proportion of the debt paid by the plaintiff, had, since his liability was incurred, become a bankrupt, and the question therefore arose, whether he was by his certificate discharged, or was still liable to contribute. He thought he was, in law, discharged by his certificate. The question, however, could not be finally determined, as the assignees had not been made parties to the record. The bill must, therefore, be dismissed as against the bankrupt, but without costs, and the case may stand over, in order to allow the plaintiff time to consider the question of parties.

Patent—New Trial.

Platt, Q. C., moved for a rule to shew cause why there should not be a new trial, or a nonsuit in this action, on the grounds of misdirection, improper rejection of evidence, and verdict against the evidence. There were five pleas pleaded, of which the chief were, that it was not a new invention, but had been publicly used before, and that the description was insufficient. Notice of the objection was given according to the statute, that the specification did not sufficiently specify the invention, which related to a new mode of propelling vessels by a screw and revolving blades. The description was, that the vessel was propelled by "curved blades set or affixed below the water-line of the vessel, and running from stem to stern." These were further described to run on an axis parallel to the keel. The defendant had proved various patents by Shorter, Mellington, and others, on precisely the same principle as that he had used. If this were not the same, then there was no infringement. Nevertheless there was a verdict for the plaintiff. Rule nisi.

GRENFELL v. EDGCOMBE.
To set aside an award.

Crowder, Q. C. moved for a rule to shew cause why this award should not be set aside. This was an action upon the case by a reversioner for a nuisance, for continuing a mill that had been erected on the plaintiff's land. It was a condition that the Bishop of Exeter should be a party. The award was moved to be set aside on the ground that it was not final, and the entry on the issues inconsistent. On one of the issues the finding was, I award that nothing shall be done. This was clearly bad. (Ross v. Clifton, 9 Dowl. 356.) Angus v. Redford (11 M. & W. 69) is distinguishable. Francom v. Falmouth (6 Car. P. 529) was also cited. Rule nisi.

Re CARUS WILSON.
Prerogative writs run, but judicial writs do not run, to the Channel Islands.

A writ of habeas corpus cum causâ having been obtained in the Bail Court before Patteson, J, directed to the Keeper of the Royal Prison of Jersey, the Solicitor-General subsequently obtained a rule to shew cause why this writ should not be quashed, on the ground that it was improvidently made; 1st, because writs of habeas corpus do not lie to the islands of Guernsey and Jersey; 2ndly, if they do lie, that it is matter of discretion with the Court to issue them, and that the discretion was in this case badly exercised.

Kelly, Q. C. now shewed cause. Writs of habeas corpus run to the Channel Islands by express enactment. The 31 Chas. 2, c. s. 11, enacts "That an habeas corpus, according to the true intent and meaning of this Act, may be directed and run into any County Palatine, the Cinque Ports, or other privileged places within the kingdom of England, dominion of Wales, or Town of Berwick upon Tweed, and the Islands of Jersey or Guernsey, any law or usage to the contrary notwithstanding." Provision is also made in the same Act for marking, serving the writs, and for levying fines of 100*l*. and upwards upon all such gaolers and others, as shall neglect to deliver up the body in pursuance of the writ. But the 8th sec. expressly limits the writ to criminal cases, and exempts all prisoners charged with debt on civil process from its operation. But the 56 Geo. 3, c. 100, was passed to extend the statute of Charles to civil as well as criminal cases, and sec. 1 enacts, that where any person shall be confined or restrained of his or her liberty, otherwise than for some criminal or supposed criminal matter, except persons imprisoned for debt, and if it shall appear, whether by affidavit or affirmation, that there is a probable and reasonable ground for such complaint, for any judge of the superior courts, to award in vacation time a writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum. Section 5, expressly enacts that such writ "may be directed and run into any County Palatine &c. and the Isles of Jersey, Guernsey, and Man;" and sect. 6, provides that process of contempt may be awarded against persons who disobey the writ. Thus the language of the Legislature is clear and unequivocal, that the writ may run to Jersey. In applying for this rule, doubts were thrown out whether the writ lay. No opinion was hazarded that at common law the writ would not lie also. Hale, C. J., lays it down in his History of the Common Law of England, p. 186-7, that in cases of Quare impedit, Quo warranto, and Information for a riot, "suits have been maintained by the king in his court of B. R. here, though for matters arising within these Islands." Paschæ 16 E. 2 Coram Rege Rol. 82;—Mich. 18 E. 2 Rol. 123 &c.; and Pas. 1 E. 3 Rol. 59. And Hale also says, "A writ of habeas corpus lies into those islands for one imprisoned there, for the king may demand, and must have an account of the cause of any of his subjects' loss of liberty * * * for no liberty, whether of a County Palatine or other, holds place against those brevia mandatoria." A writ of error will not lie, because we have no judicial authority over an island in which the laws of Normandy prevail; there may, however, be appeal from a sentence of its Courts to the Queen in Council. (Hale Hist. C. L. 187). But in this case the Queen's prerogative is involved, and the writ goes as a writ of prerogative, and the statute law of England declares that to it a return shall be made. It is the Queen's writ, issued out of the first court in the kingdom to a place where the Sovereign h[illegible] jurisdiction. There are two instances in the books where the writ actually issued: the first is that of Roy v. Overton (Siderfin, 386), thus reported:—"La fuit un habeas corpus grant direct al Governour de Jersey p. porter icy le corps del O. le Proch Ter, quel ad le prisoner la several ans." See also Anonymous (Ventris, 357), where a writ of habeas corpus was sent to Ireland, because writs mandatory ran to Jersey, Calais, &c. These cases shew that in point of fact these writs have run to Jersey. In the case of Rex v. Cowle (2 Burr. 834), a writ of certiorari was held to lie to Berwick-on-Tweed, and Lord Mansfield held that though judicial writs would not run, prerogative writs did run to Berwick; and he added:—"Upon a proper case they may issue to every dominion of the Crown of England. There is no doubt as to the power of this Court where the place is under the subjection of the Crown of England; the only question is as to the propriety." These islands are part of the empire. [The Solicitor-General.—They have been conquered and reconquered.] They came to England with the Conqueror, and were not dissevered from it when King John was deprived of his duchy, for he kept these islands; and when, afterwards, they were taken forcibly from him, he, by force, regained them; and Hale says, "they have ever since continued in the possession of the Crown of England." p. 184, (edit. 1716.) This is not a writ which it is in the discretion of this Court to give or withhold. It is a writ of right, though not a writ of course. It is not even a question for this Court what jurisdiction England has to issue writs to Jersey. The statute has expressly enacted that the judges shall award them to run there, and I presume that if an Act of Parliament order your lordships to issue a latitat to Berlin, though it might be a breach of the law of nations to do so, this Court would have no option in the matter, and so it is with regard to writs of habeas corpus into Jersey. Whatever the people of Jersey may think on the subject, your lordships might indeed resign your offices if against your consciences to award this writ; but while you hold your office you have no power to refuse this writ. It is also objected that the writ running to Jersey, the discretion was ill exercised in awarding it. It is not possible to commit a greater perversion of the truth than to say so. The law is, that the moment it appears on affidavit that a subject of England is ill used by his imprisonment, there is no discretion left, if reasonable and probable cause be stated. Such are the terms of the statute. There is discretion only as to the existence of that probable cause, and when that is found to exist, there ends the discretion of this Court, and it is compelled to issue the writ. (Hobhouse's case,

2 Chit. Rep. 207; 3 B. & Ald. 420.) True it is that Abbott, C.J. there said that it seemed to him the Court was not bound as of course, and without cause shewn, to grant this writ in the first instance, overruling a dictum of Lord Kenyon in Rex v. Flower (8 T. R. 324). If malefactors could have this writ, of course sentence might always be delayed; but it is there held that, on probable cause shewn, though not a writ of course, it is a writ of right and not of grace or favour. (Wilmot's Opinions and Judgments, 81.) All that Hobhouse's case decides is that the writ shall not be granted simply because it is asked for; but the moment ground is shewn, it is matter of right on the part of the prisoner to have it, and of duty on the part of the Court to grant it. Cause must be shewn even before a judge in chambers. [PATTESON, J.—The words of the Act direct that the writ be granted upon view of copy of commitment, and a request in writing, and does not seem to require an affidavit of the circumstances.] I need not say even that; I am making a concession; we must shew some cause. [COLERIDGE, J.—Suppose the party applying was a lunatic, he would not be within the statute: should the writ issue?] That would depend upon the ground shewn. Rex v. Schiever, 2 Burr. 765, is cited as a case in which this writ was refused, but it was on the ground that the prisoner shewed himself that he was a prisoner of war. Habeas corpus is the most celebrated writ known to the law of England. (3 Blackstone's Com. 131.) It is a matter of vast importance to uphold the prerogatives of the crown in the Channel Islands. Mr. Wilson was seized at Jersey on 23rd September last, and imprisoned, and applied frequently for the warrant of his committal. The keeper of the prison declared he had nothing of the kind to shew the prisoner. On the 29th, a paper was given to him to this effect—"Carus Wilson condemned, Sept. 23rd, 1844, to pay a fine of 10*l.* to her Majesty, and make an apology to the Court, in default of which he is condemned to remain in the gaol until this is done.—P. Lecouteur, Viscompte." Mr. Wilson swears he does not know for what he is committed. Here alone is ground for the writ; probable cause is shewn, and Jersey and Hampshire or Surrey are on the same footing as to the right of the writ to issue there. The paper writing is a nullity. The presumption is, it is no warrant, for the gaoler said he had none when asked by Mr. Wilson. Neither does it state what gaol, nor in what mode Mr. Wilson can make the apology. No jailer is named; no officer is named; no means are afforded of ever obtaining his liberty. Mr. Wilson believes that the cause was an alleged contempt of Court, because he had said it was illegally constituted. If this were an entirely legal proceeding, according to the laws and usages of Jersey, let that be shewn on the return to the writ; that question cannot be properly argued upon affidavit. We have, however, shewn probable cause of illegality, and that the judge rightly issued a writ which, upon reasonable cause shewn, and satisfactory primâ facie case made out, it was his bounden duty to issue.

Peacock, on the same side, assured the Court he had kept back no information he ought to have given, in obtaining the writ before the learned judge. [PATTESON, J.—I never meant to say that at all; what I said was, that if I had had any doubt about the propriety of granting this writ, which I had not, I should have made it a rule nisi for further information. I, however, thought the right to the writ too clear, according to the statute, to do so.] The other side have no right to oppose this writ by going into matter now on motion, which they may do on the return of the writ. Where is the precedent that the party having an interest may come by affidavits to oppose the issue of a writ of habeas corpus once granted? (Leonard Watson's case, 9 Ad. & Ell. 94, per Lord Denman.) We might be amused by an antiquarian discussion, but should we not be tampering with the privilege of the writ? Who makes this opposing affidavit? The Procureur-General. Why is he to come here by affidavit? When the writ is returned he may shew cause against the discharge; but he has no right to follow this unprecedented course. It is said, we ought to have gone to her Majesty in Council for redress; so that there is another remedy. If we had done so, the Privy Council would have told us to come here. It would have said, whilst you have a usual remedy expressly provided for this case by Act of Parliament, empowering you to issue a writ of habeas corpus, avail yourself first of that. We have a right to this writ, no less by the common law than the statute law of the land. We have shewn probable ground of illegal imprisonment. If a legal judgment appeared by the return, we should not ask your lordships to decide as a court of error; but here there is no judgment at all. What, therefore, are we to appeal from? There is no discretion in the Court to refuse this writ; its only discretion is to act according to law—the law commands the Court to issue it. Scire per legem quid sit justum (10 Coke, Rep. 604). Here is an unlawful confinement. [COLERIDGE, J.—The statute does not say unlawfully confined.] So much the stronger for our argument; for we need shew still less cause than under the common law. The statute of Charles was passed to get rid of such cases as that of the pirate (Rex v. March, 3 Bulstr. 27), in the reign of James I. where the writ was refused, because it was supposed the prisoners were felons. Hallam states that it was difficult in the reign of Charles I. to obtain a writ of the judges. (2 Hallam, Cons. Hist. 497.) And in 2 Rol. 138, there is another case of refusal. In the case of the Spanish sailors (2 Wm. Bl. 1324), the writ was refused, because they were believed to be alien enemies. The Solicitor general, omitting to notice the 11th sec. of 31 Chas. 2, dwelt on the 12th sec. which provides against illegal transportation. Clarendon had caused persons to be imprisoned in remote islands, and this was guarded against; but has nothing to do with the 11th sec. which comes first, and enacts that the writ shall run. Hallam (3 Const. Hist. 15) explains the object of the two sections, which are perfectly distinct. If any person is aggrieved by imprisonment they always have had a right to be brought, devant le roi, due cause shewn, as early as Edward II. (2 Pet. Parl. 486.) In 1831 an order in Council was issued in the case of Mr. John Gapes, an overseer, who went to Jersey with some paupers who had been born there. I have an affidavit of this order.—[Solicitor-General.—I have seen no such affidavit; it cannot be used.] I will cite it then as matter of public notoriety. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—What book are you reading from, Mr. Peacock?] [Solicitor-General.—A little book written by an editor of a Jersey newspaper, my Lord.] Enough has been already shewn without this last case to prove that Mr. Wilson has a right to this writ both by common and statute law, and that the writ has actually run to Jersey.

The Solicitor-General.—There has been a very unfair suppression from the knowledge of the learned judge, who granted this writ, of the facts of the case. This is a matter of the greatest importance to the island of Jersey. This is the first writ issued there since the reign of Charles. This writ has issued at common law, and not under the statute. The 16 Chas. I. c. 10 was the first statute on the subject. If the writ issued under the statute it would be wrong, for it is not signed by the person who awards the same as the statute directs. The statutes did not extend the power to issue writs. [COLERIDGE, J.—Does that apply to vacation?] This was a rule of the full Court, given in the Bail Court, which is the same thing. [COLERIDGE, J.—The 4th section provides that like proceeding may be had with respect to any writ, although awarded by the Court itself.] I read that as applying to the writ at common law: the judge may direct the return to be made to the full Court. The terms of the statute do not apply to writs issued at common law by the full Court. [COLERIDGE, J.—The words are although, not "as if," as you imply.] [PATTESON, J.—If you were right, we should be in this singular position that one judge might be compelled to grant a writ in vacation on a mere application, which the full Court had refused during Term.] A discretion is clearly vested in the Court (Blake's case, 2 M. & Sel. 426) where the Court refused to make a rule absolute for the writ. [WIGHTMAN, J.—There might then have been a discussion on making the rule absolute.] Peacock.—I did not argue that point; if I had I should have contended that a rule nisi could not go to Jersey.] The facts were suppressed. I do not know if your lordships are bound to take official notice that the laws of Jersey are different from our own. They have but one court at Jersey, where they try every thing, whether civil or criminal, so that Mr. Wilson must have known to what court to apologise. There is no necessity to have any warrant. The Procureur-General swears that warrants are not the law in Jersey according to the custom of its courts; they only enter an order authorising any person to be imprisoned in the royal goal, which suffices there. The commitment is the warrant, and it ought to have been brought before the Court. [COLERIDGE, J.—By whom?] The party who applies for the writ. If a man is a prisoner for felony, he must satisfy the court he is unjustly imprisoned, and contrary to the law of the country in which he lives. The laws of Jersey are those of Normandy, and Acts of Parliament have no effect there unless specially named. It appeared that just as judgment was about to be passed upon Mr. Wilson in the Royal Court, he cried that the court was only a couple of sub-bailiffs, and was incompetent to give judgment at all; for which gross contempt of the Court it had by royal ordonnance compelled him to pay a fine of 10*l.* and in default to be committed to the gaol. The Procureur-General is the only personage who maintains the authority of the Court, and he, therefore, makes affidavits of these facts. [WIGHTMAN, J.—But the gaoler to whom the writ is directed may return very different facts.] But why should the Court assume he will state untruths? The Procureur-General happened to be here: so we obtained this affidavit from him, to save time. Overton, for whom the writ was sent, named in the case in Siderfin, was one of the regicides, and it is not very likely that he went there of his own accord. There is a case in Carter Rep. 221. There is a great doubt whether Jersey ever was reconquered from England. It is held by the treaty of Brittany, of which the sixth article conceded regal supremacy to the King of England over Calais and all the islands, "qu'il tient." It is a question well worthy of the consideration of the Court how this writ is to be enforced if it does go, and the authorities of Jersey refuse to comply with it. But this is a judicial writ, and none but mandatory writs can run to Jersey under any circumstances.

Wortley, Q. C. on the same side.—This is a writ cum causa, not a habeas corpus ad subjiciendum, which is a prerogative writ, and can alone run to Jersey. This is ad faciendum et respondendum. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—Mr. Peacock, you do not contend that judicial writs can run to Jersey?]

Peacock assented; but a great question was at stake, and in the absence of Mr. Kelly he did not undertake that no fresh writ should be issued.

The Solicitor-General. If Mr. Wilson is not very much enamoured of gaol, he will find easy egress.

W. H. Smith, on the same side, was not heard.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—The Solicitor-general does not contend, and I do not see how it is possible to contend, that prerogative writs do not run to the Channel Islands. Is it, therefore, worth while to contest the matter further? It is a question for the discretion of the counsel for the prisoner whether to press us to give a judgment. Let the matter stand over till Monday, when Mr. Peacock will have consulted with Mr. Kelly.

EDDY v. BROWN.

New trial.

This was an action brought against Mr. Brown, for certain clothes supplied to his son by the plaintiff, who is a tailor. The son being a minor the defendant pleaded non assumpsit, except as to 20*l.* and as to that sum payment into court. The amount claimed was for a much larger sum.

The defence was, that the credit had been given to the son, and that the clothes were not necessary, but in summing up the case to the jury, Mr. Justice Williams told them that as the defendant had paid 20*l.* into court he had admitted his liability generally, and, therefore, the only question for them was to say the amount due to the plaintiff. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for the whole amount claimed.

Platt, Q. C. now moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, citing Kington v. Robins (5 M. & W. 94); Stapleton v. Nowell (6 M. & W. 8); Archer v. English (9 Dowl. 21; 1 Scott N. R. 156).

BAKER v. BEDELL.

A replication to a plea of set-off which amounts to nil debet must tender issue.

Debt, by the administratrix of Thomas Baker, for work and labour and money expended.

The material plea was one of set-off of debts alleged to have been due from Thomas Baker to the defendant, at the time of Thomas Baker's death. Verification.

Replication.—That T. C. Baker was not indebted in respect of the debts and other causes of set-off, &c. no conclusion, and the Statute of Limitations, concluding with prayer of judgment.

Demurrer.—Because that part of the replication which amounts to nil debet does not tender issue.

Ogle, in support of the demurrer.—The conclusion of the replication of the Statute of Limitations is correct; for there is nothing to verify, it not having been alleged that the debts did accrue within six years. (Bodenham v. Hill, 7 M. & W. 274.) But the prayer of judgment did not cover the replication of nil debet, and on that an issue must be tendered.

Peacock, contrà.—The replication is sufficient; it is one and entire. (Bristow v. Hill, 10 M. & W. 735.)

By the COURT.—Solomons v. Lyon (1 East, 369). The plaintiff had better amend; the defendant undertaking not to demur, otherwise Judgment for the defendant.

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF YELVERTOFT.

A pauper may be removed to the mother's maiden settlement without inquiring as to the father's settlement, although the father states that he believes he was born in London. The onus probandi of the father's settlement is on the appellants.

This was an appeal from an order of the Leicestershire Sessions, removing paupers to the maiden settlement of their mother. The father's examination stated that he believed he was born in London, but in what parish, he had never heard, and that he was 59 years old. By a comparison of the age of the witness with a register of baptism, it appeared that some material facts to which he had given evidence must have occurred when he was only three years and three-quarters old.

The objections were—1. That this was improper evidence. 2. That the same witnesses should have been called at the sessions as before the removing magistrates. 3. That before the paupers could be removed to their mother's maiden settlement, inquiries should have been made as to the father's. This was the point of importance in the case.

E. Macaulay and Simpson, in support of the order. —It is not necessary to make such inquiries. It would have been absurd in this case for the parish officers to have instituted inquiries in London to discover the settlement of a man born more than half a century before in some parish in London. But there was no evidence of his being born in London. It was only hearsay. If necessary at all, it was a question for the Sessions, and they have decided that sufficient inquiries were made. It lies upon the other side to prove the settlement. We shew a good birth settlement, and are not bound to exhaust all others.

Coleridge, J.—Suppose, after a birth settlement is proved, it appears there was a subsequent hiring and service, but the parish is forgotten, would the birth settlement remain?

Macaulay.—I apprehend it would, until the subsequent settlement was proved. If not known, it cannot be proved. It may or may not have existed. (Rex v. Westerham, Bott. 108; Rex v. Ryton, Cald. 89; 2 Bott. 114; Rex v. St. Mary's, Leicester, 3 A. & E. 644; Rex v. Eddisore, Cald. 371; Rex v. Woodford, Cal l. 236; see Burn's Just. 4, 457, last edit.) In Rex v. Harberton (13 E. 311) the Court said—"That the evidence of the wife's maiden settlement was primâ facie sufficient, and it lay upon the appellants to rebut it by giving evidence of the husband's settlement in a different parish."

Coleridge, J.—That is a strong case.

Macaulay.—There is no duty to negative the husband's settlement until primâ facie proof of its existence. You may remove wife and child on primâ facie proof of the wife's maiden settlement without inquiry as to the husband's settlement. (R. v. St. Mary's, Leicester, 3 A. & E. 644.) It is not a condition precedent to exhaust the settlement ex parte paternâ before you go to the settlement ex parte maternâ. The rule relied upon by the other side in R. v. St. Matthew's, Bethnal Green (Burr. S. C. 465), cannot be taken literally. It means, where the father's settlement appears. He may have been born in an extra-parochial place, and useless and expensive inquiries cannot be necessary. The Sessions are the judges of the requisite particularity. (Reg. v. Bridgewater, 10 A. & E. 693; Reg. v. Pontefract, 2 Q. B. 548.)

Hildyard, contrà.—The evidence of facts when he was three years and a half old cannot be received.

Coleridge, J.—Is that a ground of objection now?

Patteson, J.—There is no evidence of his age. He swears positively as to facts within his remembrance, and you cannot infer that his statement of belief as to the time of his birth disproves such evidence.

Hildyard.—The necessity of such reasonable search as contended for here is shewn by the old authorities, R. v. St. Matthew's, Bethnal Green (Burr. Sess. C. 465), and recognized in R. v. Leeds (2 Carr. Ham. & Al.; 1 Bitt. & Sym. 52). The "last legal settlement" is required by statute. By marriage, the birth settlement is primâ facie merged. There was no proof of due diligence.

Lord Denman, C.J.—R. v. Harberton (13 E. 311) ought to govern our decision. There have been no decisions against it. In R. v. Leeds it was taken for granted that some search had been made, but it does not appear what. In St. Mary's, Leicester (3 A. & E. 644) the maiden settlement prevailed because it displaced the birth settlement; so in St. Mary's, Beverley, the husband was proved to have a settlement. Here there was no evidence of this, and therefore nothing to compel the removing parish to inquire. It was mere hearsay. "I was born in London" is nothing at all. It may be often desirable to make such inquiries, but not in such a case as this.

Patteson, J.—The onus probandi is on the other side. If the settlement appears on cross-examination, then they must go on and prove it.

Coleridge, J.—The objections here are to the order upon an alleged defect in the examination. I do not think that this lets in the question of the propriety of the decision; but if it did, there is nothing in it. It is mere hearsay as to the father's birth.

Order of sessions confirmed.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Friday.

Adams v. Adams.—This was a special case, turning on the construction of a will.

Cur. adv. vult.

Fletcher v. Calthorp.—A demurrer to plea involving the right construction of the Night Poaching Act, and the validity of a warrant of commitment.

Cur. adv. vult.

Saturday.

Reg. v. Badcock and Others.—Moody shewed cause against a rule nisi to quash an order of Sessions confirming a rate, subject to the opinion of this Court upon a case. The question was as to the rateability of the trustees of Taunton market, in respect of a public butchery in the market. Cockburn, Q.C. contrà.

Argument adjourned.

Monday.

The Court did not sit until eleven, the judges being engaged in hearing the conclusion of an argument on a Crown case reserved.

Reg. v. The Commissioners of Excise.—This case, involving the construction of various Acts of Parliament relating to the customs and excise, occupied the whole day. It was argued by the Solicitor-General, Jervis, Q.C. and Waddington, for the Commissioners; and M. D. Hill, Q.C. and R. Gurney, in support of the application. Cur. adv. vult.

Re Carus Wilson.—At the motion of the Solicitor-General, Wednesday, the 29th, was fixed for the return of the habeas corpus in this case.

Rogers v. Brenton.—Fixed for Thursday.

Short v. Stone.—Peacock moved to set aside an award. Motion to be renewed.

Tuesday.

Van Sandau v. Turner.—Kelly, Q.C. (with whom was Cleasby) in support of the demurrer.—The Solicitor-General (Simonds with him), contrà.

Cur. adv. vult.

Planché v. Hooper.—Platt, Q.C. moved for judgment in this case; and no one appearing for the defendant, Judgment for the plaintiff.

Hill v. Kendall.—Watson, Q.C. moved for a new trial. Cur. adv. vult.

Wood v. Eliots.—Crowder, Q.C. moved for leave to add certain pleas. Rule nisi.

Lane v. Hooper.—Bramwell, in support of the demurrer.—Dawson, contrà. (To be reported next week.) Judgment for plaintiff.

Reg. v. Badcock.—Moody replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

Reg. v. Wilcock.—Struck out, because the paper books were not to be delivered. Subsequently it appeared that the paper books had been delivered, and the case was to be entered in the paper for Saturday.

Reg. v. Hull Dock Company.—This was a case on the rateability of the Hull Dock Company. It was argued in favour of the rate by M. D. Hill, Q.C. Raines, and Archbold. Kelly, Q.C. and Wortley, Q. C. contrà. To be heard on Saturday.

Argument adjourned.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Wednesday, Jan. 15.

Pontifex v. Wilkinson.

New trial—Verdict against evidence.

The rule in this case was argued at some length in Easter Term last by Sir T. Wilde, for the plaintiff, and Byles, Serjt. (with whom was Peacock) for the defendant.

As the Court in their judgment have not expressed any opinion on the several points of law raised in the argument, but have made the rule absolute for a new trial solely on account of the verdict being against evidence, all notice of the arguments is omitted. The written judgment of the Court, which was this day delivered, is however given.

JUDGMENT.

Tindal, C. J.—The question in this case has been raised before us upon a rule obtained by the defendant either to reduce the damages by the amount of those found on the special count—that is, in substance, to enter a verdict for the defendant on that count, according to leave given at the trial, or for a new trial generally upon the whole cause of action. The declaration contained a special count upon a contract that the plaintiff should manufacture, make, fix, and complete, except bricklayer's work, &c. for the defendant certain coppers and other utensils necessary for the fitting up of a brewhouse, according to a specification, for the price of 535*l.* 10s. and that the defendant should permit the plaintiff to put up the work and pay for the same upon the delivery and fixing of the work. The breach assigned was that the defendant would not permit the plaintiff further to proceed with it, and complete it, but absolutely discharged him from the proceeding therewith and completing thereof. There are counts for goods sold and delivered, and for work, labour, and materials. There are also two further counts which apply to other and different demands, but as the jury found the verdict for the plaintiff as to the whole of the demand, though with divided damages, as the defendant contends, on the first ground, the rule granted will not apply to this state of the case. The real question is, whether there should be a new trial. The case was argued on the part of the defendant upon the ground of misdirection at the trial. The questions, as to the special count, were in point of fact two; first, whether the plaintiff was ready and willing to manufacture all the goods and chattels, and fix them, according to the terms of the contract; and secondly whether the defendant discharged the plaintiff from proceeding with and completing the manufacture of the said goods and chattels; which two questions amounted to no more than one, namely, whether the non-completion of the contract proceeded from the wrongful act of the plaintiff in refusing to finish, or the defendant in not permitting the plaintiff to finish the goods according to the contract. The mode in which these questions were left by the judge was this; which party was in fault in occasioning the contract not to be carried into effect. We see no objection in point of law to this mode of leaving the question to the jury, the more especially as the defendant's counsel in his reply to the jury had himself stated this to be the proper question for their consideration. And if in commenting upon the evidence given at the trial, with a view to the explanation of the meaning of these questions, and of the grounds of the decision proper for the jury, the judge made some observations which, my brother Byles contended, appeared to give a different sense from what he himself intended, we think he should have suggested that fact at the time for the consideration of the judge, and not brought this objection now for the first time before us. Even supposing the observations to have been made in the unqualified manner now stated, we think the making of such observations cannot support a rule for a new trial upon the ground of misdirection, when the substantial question was in fact left for the consideration of the jury. The question, however, whether the plaintiff wrongfully withdrew from the completion of the work on his part, or whether he was discharged therefrom by the conduct of the defendant, is a question of facts, and depends upon the construction the jury put, as well upon the acts of the parties as upon the correspondence. Upon these questions of fact, we are not satisfied they have come to a proper conclusion, or that justice can be done between the parties without submitting the case to another trial. We therefore give the defendant an opportunity of having the question reconsidered by granting a new trial, on the usual terms. It becomes unnecessary, at present, to give any opinion upon the other points which have been argued with respect to the other counts of the declaration.

Rule absolute for a new trial, upon payment of the costs.

Grant and Others v. Hunt, Public Officer.

A promise to accept a foreign bill made to a person by whose direction and on whose account the drawers drew the bill, is a valid acceptance, and cannot be cancelled by such person after he has communicated such promise to the drawers.

This case was argued last Easter Term by Manning, Serjt. for the plaintiffs, and Channell, Serjt. (with him M. Smith) for the defendant. The facts of the case sufficiently appear from the judgment of the Court, which was now delivered by

Tindal, C. J.—This case was argued last Easter Term before my brothers Coltman, Erskine, and myself. It was an action by the plaintiffs, the drawers, against Hunt, as acceptor of two bills of exchange drawn at Genoa; the defendants pleaded that they did not accept. At the trial before me a verdict was taken for the plaintiffs, subject to the opinion of the Court, upon a case which stated that the plaintiffs having made a purchase at Genoa for one Baker, a corn-merchant in London, drew the bills in question upon the defendants for the purchase money, that being the mode in which Baker had directed them to obtain payment for the goods bought for him on other occasions. And the plaintiffs sent to the defendants a letter bearing date in Genoa the 3rd of August, 1842, in which they stated that they had drawn upon them for account of Henry Baker 579*l.* 16s. 5d. as per note at foot, which they doubted not would meet their kind protection. On the 10th of August, 1842, Baker, who had become acquainted with the defendants, wrote to them as follows:—"Messrs. Grant, Balfour, and Co. unexpectedly to me, have drawn upon you for 579*l.* 16s. 5d.; this please accept to the debit of my account. Please return me also the bill of lading of the Flora. Enclosed is the bill on King, Melville, and Co. for 2,560*l.* to the credit of my account." Upon the following day Drew, the manager of the bank, wrote him an answer, "We beg to acknowledge the receipt of your favour of yesterday, enclosing a bill on King, Melville, and Co. at four months, for 2,560*l.* for the credit of No. 3 account. Against these receipts we send you, as requested, the bill of lading of the Flora, upon which there is an advance of 2,000*l.* and will accept Messrs. Grant, Balfour, and Co.'s bill for 579*l.* 16s. 5d. leaving 19*l.* 6s. 5d. due upon this transaction." This letter was received by Baker on the 12th of August, and shewn by him to Balfour, one of the plaintiffs, on the 13th. On the 12th of August, about one o'clock in the afternoon, after the receipt of the letter written the day before, Drew, the manager of the bank, saw Baker upon the part of the defendants, and informed him that the bill would not be accepted; that they countermanded the consent given in their letter of the 11th, to which Baker assented; but, notwithstanding, he afterwards communicated the letter of the 11th, but not the countermand to Balfour. Upon the argument before us, it was not disputed by counsel for the defendant, that a foreign bill might be accepted verbally or by writing, not upon the face of the bill, and that such a promise to accept or pay has the effect of an acceptance. Nor was it disputed that such acceptance might be given to the drawer, or any [illegible] other party to the bill, after it had been endorsed over, or even after it had become due, [illegible] v. Mountier (1 Atkins, 611), [illegible] v. [illegible] (2 East, 554), being distinct authorities to that effect. But it was contended that such promise to accept or pay not being upon the face of the bill must, in order to bind the party making it, be communicated to some party to the bill, as the holder, or some agent for such party or holder; and that in this case no such communication was made to Balfour at all after the manager had withdrawn the promise to accept, with the assent of the party to whom that promise had been given. On the other hand it is contended, that Baker was not a stranger to the bill, and that, having admitted the act of the drawers, he was in the same position as if he had drawn the bill himself. It having been suggested that the bill was drawn in pursuance of authority previously given, the case stood over in order that such fact might be stated. Accordingly, since the end of the last term, the cause has been amended, and it appears that Messrs. Grant, Balfour, and Co. acted under the given authority from Baker, to make purchases of corn, for the purpose of which bills were to be drawn, and that they were drawn by the direction of King, Melville, and Co. acting as agents for Baker, and a promise, therefore, to accept was given to the party by whose direction and on whose account the bill was drawn. In Fairlee v. Herring (3 Bing. 625), it was held that such promise given by the drawee to the party by whose direction the bill was drawn, operated as an acceptance, and enured to the benefit of the endorsee, to whom the bill had been previously endorsed. In the present case it appears that when Baker, by whose direction and on whose account the bill was drawn, obtained from the defendant a written promise of acceptance, it amounted to an acceptance, and enured to the benefit of the drawers, and that Baker could not afterwards cancel the acceptance and release the defendants from their engagements by consenting to a countermand, as it is called, by Drew upon the 12th of Aug. We are, therefore, of opinion that the issue upon the acceptance was properly found by the jury for the plaintiffs, and the postea must be delivered to them.

Judgment for the plaintiffs.

THE FISHMONGERS' COMPANY v. ROBERTSON.

New trial—Terms on which granted.

TINDAL, C. J. delivering judgment, said,—This case went down to trial upon the several questions of fact raised by the pleadings on the part of the respective defendants, amongst which one issue was upon the plea of non-assumpsit, and another on the plea denying that the promise was made upon the consideration alleged in the special count. That consideration was stated to be the making of the articles of agreement of the 17th of March, 1838, and the memorandum endorsed thereon of the same date, and the undertaking by plaintiffs that they would perform every thing in the articles of agreement and memorandum contained on their part and behalf to be performed. And as the whole question before us turns upon the evidence offered as to these issues and the finding of the jury thereon, it will be unnecessary to advert to any other questions raised upon the record. The plaintiffs, in order to prove the affirmative of the two issues above referred to, first tendered in evidence the part of the agreement of the 17th of March, 1838, which was in their own possession, and was signed by the seven defendants, and wh' h had also a memorandum on the back, signed by Towse, clerl of the Fishmongers' Company, by Kensit, the agent of Ogilvie, and by Pierce (as solicitor of the within-named parties of the third part); both the agreement and memorandum so tendered in evidence were stamped, but as it appeared that the signature of the agreements by the several defendants was attested by different witnesses, and as the witness who attested the signature of the defendants Booth, Steadman, and Edge, wa. not produced, nor his absence accounted for, an objection was taken that that part of the agreement could not be received in evidence. The plaintiffs had called for the part of the same agreement and memorandum which was in the possession of the defendants, as well for the purpose of proving the consideration stated in the declaration, as also of meeting the objection raised against the admissibility of the former part of the agreement. The defendants accordingly produced the part in their possession, such part of the agreement being signed by Towse, on behalf of the Fishmongers' Company, and by Kensit, on behalf of Mr. Ogilvie, the parties to the agreement of the first and second part; and the memorandum being signed by the same parties, Towse and Kensit. But with respect to this part of the agreement and memorandum, it appeared that although the agreement was stamped, the memorandum was not; the objection, therefore, made against the admissibility of this document was, that the memorandum had no stamp. After the argument at the trial, the Chief Justice held the objection to be valid, and the verdict on these two issues was thereupon found for the defendant, with liberty to the plaintiffs to move to enter the verdict for themselves, if the Court should think the rejection of this evidence was wrong; and at the same time the Chief Justice requested the jury (with the consent of the parties) to find what damages the plaintiffs would have sustained by the breach of this agreement (supposing the plaintiffs entitled to recover); and the jury found the sum of one shilling only. But as the plaintiffs contend they are entitled upon the proper construction of the agreement to the sum of 1,000*l*. damages ascertained by the agreement and memorandum, the cause must, in any point of view, go down to a new trial; for the defendants insist that there was no understanding on their part that the rule should empower the Court to enter any verdict for the plaintiffs, except for the nominal verdict of one shilling; and that they should never have assented to such a construction of the agreement as that 1,000*l*. was the stipulated amount of damages between the parties; but, on the contrary, would have tendered a bill of exceptions to such direction, if any such had been given. The only question, therefore, is upon what terms the new trial should be had. If the cause went to a new trial simply on the ground of the improper rejection of evidence, the plaintiffs would undoubtedly have been entitled to such new trial without the payment of costs. But the plaintiffs had a further object in obtaining a new trial, namely, the object of increasing the damages beyond the nominal sum at which the jury had assessed them. Even supposing the verdict to have been improperly found for the defendant, the plaintiffs would still ask for a new trial, in order that they might remove the difficulty which had occurred on the former occasion by proving the proper stamp upon the memorandum, and by accounting for the absence of the attesting witness. We do not therefore feel ourselves called upon to give any opinion upon the points that have been argued before us, which, as far as can be foreseen, will not occur upon the second occasion; or, if they should occur, may be made the ground of a bill of exceptions; and on looking at the case as one in which the new trial is granted substantially for the benefit of the plaintiffs, to enable them to increase the damages, we think the justice of the case requires there should be a new trial on payment of costs by the plaintiffs.

ROBERTS v. TAYLOR and OTHERS.

In an action of trespass for breaking and entering a dwelling-house, removing fixtures and goods, and assaulting and beating the plaintiff, a plea pleaded to the whole cause of action, alleged the dwelling-house to be the dwelling-house, soil, and freehold of one J. W. and justified the various trespasses as his servants. Held bad, for not shewing any title of J. W. to the dwelling-house which could justify the personal assault.

Trespass for breaking and entering the dwelling-house of the plaintiff, for removing therefrom the fixtures of the plaintiff, for ejecting the plaintiff from her dwelling-house, assaulting and beating the plaintiff, and for seizing and taking certain goods and chattels of the plaintiff.

The defendants pleaded, fourthly, to the whole of the declaration, that the said dwelling-house in which, &c. at the said times, when, &c. was and now is the dwelling-house, soil, and freehold of one Josiah Wilson, wherefore the defendants, as the servants of the said Josiah Wilson, and by his command in that behalf, at the said times when, &c. in the said declaration mentioned, broke and entered the said dwelling-house in which, &c. and committed therein the said several supposed trespasses in the said first count mentioned, and the said fixtures and things, in the said 2nd count mentioned, were at the said times when, &c. part and parcel of the said dwelling-house, and of the said Josiah Wilson's said freehold therein, and the plaintiff just before, and at the said times when, &c. in the said 3rd and 4th counts mentioned, to wit, on, &c. was unlawfully in possession and occupation of the said dwelling-house, and with force and arms making a great noise and disturbance therein, without the leave and licence, and against the will of the said Josiah Wilson, the defendants thereupon, as the servants of the said Josiah Wilson, and by his command in that behalf, then requested the plaintiff to cease making her said noise and disturbance, and to go and depart from and out of the said dwelling-house, which the plaintiff then wholly refused to do, whereupon the defendants, as the servants of the said Josiah Wilson, and by his command, in the defence of his possession of the said dwelling-house, gently laid their hands on the plaintiff, in order to eject, expel, put out, and amove, and did then eject, expel, put out and remove her from her possession and occupation of and from and out of the said dwelling-house; and because she the plaintiff then resisted the defendants, and used violent and menacing language and gestures towards the defendant, and would then and there have beaten, bruised, wounded, and ill-treated them, if they had not defended themselves against the plaintiff, they the defendants at the said times when, &c. did defend themselves against the plaintiff, and in so doing did necessarily and unavoidably assault the plaintiff, and then a little beat, bruise, wound, hit, and ill-treat her, doing no unnecessary damage to the plaintiff on the occasions aforesaid; and because the said goods and chattels in the said last count mentioned, before and at the said time when, &c. in that count mentioned, had been wrongfully put and placed, and then were wrongfully in and upon the said dwelling-house in which, &c. encumbering the same and doing damage there to the said Josiah Wilson, the defendants, as the servants of the said Josiah Wilson, and by his command in that behalf, at the time when, &c. in that count mentioned, seized the said goods and chattels, and took and removed them from the said dwelling-house in which, &c. to a small and convenient distance, and there left the same for the plaintiff's use, and whereof the plaintiff then had notice; which are the said several supposed trespasses in the declaration mentioned. Verification.

The plaintiff replied to so much of this 4th plea as related to the first count, that at the said times when, &c. in the said first count mentioned, the plaintiff was lawfully possessed of the said dwelling-house in which, &c. and was lawfully entitled to her possession thereof as against the defendant without this, that the plaintiff was unlawfully in possession or occupation of the said dwelling-house in which, &c. in manner and form as in the said 4th plea, so far as relates to the said first count in that behalf is alleged. Conclusion to the country.

There were separate replications to the other parts of the 4th plea as related respectively to what was called the other counts of the declaration; but it is unnecessary to set them out.

Demurrer to the replication to so much of the plea of the defendants by them fourthly pleaded as related to the first count of the declaration, alleging, amongst other grounds of demurrer, that the replication should have traversed that the said dwelling-house, in which, &c. was the dwelling-house, soil, and freehold of the said Josiah Wilson, or should have set forth and shewn what right and title the plaintiff had therein, shewing the facts under which she derived such right or title.

Channell, Serjt. in support of demurrer.—The plea is substantially a plea of liberum tenementum, and the replication is therefore bad, for not either denying the dwelling-house to be that of Wilson, or setting up a title consistent with its being the dwelling-house and soil of Wilson. [TINDAL, C. J.—Supposing this to be a plea of liberum tenementum, yet, instead of pleading it to the trespass quare clausum fregit only, you have gone on in the plea to justify every thing in the declaration.] Liberum tenementum is a good answer to the trespass to the house and fixtures and turning the plaintiff out. [MAULE, J.—Provided only there was no personal violence. TINDAL, C. J.—The plea is bad; it admits an assault. MAULE, J.—Strike out all that is in the plea, except that which relates to the assault, and then it is in effect that certain land is the soil and freehold of the defendant, and because the plaintiff was there making a disturbance the defendant justifies assaulting him; but that will not do, as the plea does not state any title of the defendant to the land. The plea may be good as to the land, but bad as to the assault. I think both the replication and plea are bad.] If the plea is bad, there is no occasion to consider the replication.

TINDAL, C. J.—If the plea is bad in part, it is bad altogether. The plea of liberum tenementum is bad as to that which relates to the assault. It is the first time I ever saw such a plea set up in an action for an assault. The ordinary plea is, for the defendant to justify in defence of his possession of the premises.

CRESSWELL, J.—I think the plea is bad. In trespass quare clausum fregit possession is the foundation of the action, and the plea of liberum tenementum has been held sufficient to deny that right, and to put the plaintiff to shew a title consistent with its being the soil of the defendant. But in an action for a personal injury the defendant has to set up a possession, which is to found an answer to the assault.

ERLE, J. concurred. Judgment for the plaintiff.

LEGGE v. BOYD.

Foreign goods were imported into this country in an unmanufactured state, duly warehoused; they were then shipped for another part of the United Kingdom, in the course of the voyage to which the vessel, whilst at anchor, was run foul of by another vessel and seriously damaged, so that the master and crew left her. The vessel drifted ashore, where she was afterwards found lying on the rocks, the sea making a complete breach over her. The [illegible], who were about fifty yards from her, could not go on board until the tide fell. The master afterwards succeeded in getting the goods out of the vessel, but the same were much damaged by the sea, and sold for less than the duty thereon.—Held, that they were not goods jetsam flotsam, or wreck, within the meaning of the statute 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 62, s. 50, and therefore not entitled to be charged with only an ad valorem duty as unenumerated goods.

Case.—The declaration in this action stated that the plaintiff was the owner of certain goods, to wit, twenty-five hogsheads, three bags, and two [illegible] of tobacco, and other goods, in certain warehouses, subject to the payment of the duties of customs, and to the control of the defendant, the collector of customs at the port of London. The declaration then alleged that the plaintiff tendered to the defendant, as such collector, a bill of entry of the goods, containing the several matters required in that behalf by the statute in that case made and provided, and then offered to pay to the defendant the sum of 25l. 1s. 6d. being the amount of duties of custom payable for such goods, and then tendered and offered to the defendant two duplicates of the said bill, and offered to deliver such number of duplicates as he and the controller of the customs required, in such form as required by the statute, and then requested the defendant to sign the said bill, so as to be a warrant for the delivery of the goods, and to enable the plaintiff to receive possession of the same. The declaration then alleged that it thereupon became the duty of the defendant to accept such bill, and to sign the same.

Breach—That the defendant did not nor would, when the duties were so tendered as aforesaid, receive the same, but wholly refused so to do, and also wholly refused to sign such bill of entry as aforesaid, or to cause the goods to be delivered to the plaintiff.

Plea—Not guilty by statute. The cause was turned into a special verdict, by which the following facts appeared. The tobacco was, in 1835, imported into this country in an unmanufactured state, and duly warehoused at the London Docks, and was not imported from any British possession. Upon application to the commissioners for that purpose the tobacco was removed from the London Docks, and shipped on board the Sarah for the port of Londonderry. The Sarah sailed with her cargo in the year 1836, and in the course of her voyage to Londonderry arrived at Torbay, in Devonshire, in the month of March of that year. Whilst she was riding at anchor there, and during a gale of wind, another vessel drove foul of her, and did her serious damage, carrying away her bowsprits and masts; upon which the master and crew believing the sea was making a breach over her, left her, and got on board the other vessel. The Sarah afterwards drifted towards the shore. The master and crew having landed, the former went in about four hours after the accident, accompanied by an agent of Lloyds, to the spot where the Sarah had gone ashore, and found her lying on her side upon the rocks, and the sea making a complete breach over her. The coast-guard and a number of other people were standing about fifty yards from the vessel, but could not get on board until the tide fell. The master, with the assistance of others, succeeded afterwards in saving a quantity of the tobacco, which they took out of the vessel, and which also it was necessary for them so to do in order to get her off. The tobacco was damaged by the sea water, and when sold by public auction, produced less than the amount of duty of 3s. a pound charged thereon.

Channell, Serjt. for the plaintiff.—The question is, whether a proper amount of duty has been tendered. It is said by the Commissioners of the Customs that the tobacco was liable to the duty of 3s. a pound under 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 56, as goods imported into this country. The plaintiff, however, contends that the tobacco was liable only to an ad valorem duty, by reason of the 50th section of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 52, which statute received the Royal assent on the same day as that of c. 56. By the 50th section, all foreign goods derelict jetsam flotsam, and wreck brought or coming to the United Kingdom, are made subject to the same duties as goods of the kind imported to the United Kingdom respectively are subject. And it is by that section provided that all such goods as cannot be sold for the amount of duty thereon are to be deemed unenumerated goods, and are to be liable and charged with duty accordingly; the effect of which would be to subject them to the payment of only an ad valorem duty. Therefore, although when the article first arrived here it might have become liable to the duty imposed on it as an enumerated article; yet as it has by subsequent matter become altered in its nature and character, and has since arrived as a wreck it has, by this 50th section, become liable only to the ad valorem duty. The question is whether, under the circumstances, the goods are not to be considered in the same situation as they would have been had they so come to this country in the first instance without having been previously warehoused. Goods bonded are not liable to duty in the first instance, and here, before possession of them has been obtained, they are not worth 3s. in the pound. As to the goods being a wreck within the meaning of the 50th section of the Customs' Act, the word "wreck" is said by Lord Hale (de jure maris, c. 37) to be of two kinds; 1st. Such as is called properly so; the goods cast upon land or shore; 2nd. Improper for goods that are a kind of sea waifs or stray, flotsam, jetsam, and lagon. It is according to this definition, although in its popular sense, that the 50th section speaks. Barry v. Arnaud (10 Ad. & Ell. 646) shews the meaning to be given to the word "wreck" with reference to this section of the Act, and that it is not necessarily limited to goods which become forfeited to the Crown. [The question is whether, upon the arrival of the goods in the warehouse, the duty attaches, or whether they are as free there as when they remain on board the vessel.—Erle, J.] [Sir T. Wilde mentioned The Attorney-General v. Ansted (12 M. & W. 520).] That case was, only whether any duty at all was to be paid which is not here denied. The word "wreck" in the Act is cumulative, it occurs after jetsam and flotsam, and must not be construed strictly, but must mean goods cast ashore, or in a vessel ashore, or so near that bystanders may take them out.

Sir Thomas Wilde, for the defendant, was not called on.

Tindal, C. J.—This is a case whether certain foreign goods coming into the United Kingdom are within the meaning of the Act 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 52, if that is decided against the plaintiff, it will be unnecessary to consider any other point. I think that this tobacco does not come within any of the descriptions given by the 50th section. There has here been no wreck of the vessel, for she never perished, nor indeed was she ever out of sight; though the vessel may have been in distress, and all the crew have deserted her, still she was not a wreck according to the cases which have been decided. I admit that there may be a wreck of the goods distinct from that of the vessel. But what is considered to have been a wreck is where the goods have been abandoned and given up by the owner. Goods jetsam and flotsam, &c. is where the goods have been cast away, or are floating on the waves; this was not the case here with these goods; then was it a wreck? I think not. The goods remain all the time in the vessel, and are not washed ashore; they are afterwards, it appears, brought out considerably damaged, but, in consequence of its being brought out, a salvage would be due, and therefore they are not wrecked; otherwise there would be no distinction between goods wrecked and damaged. The Act contemplates the goods being damaged, though not jetsam, flotsam, or wreck, and the present seems to me to be the case of goods damaged, but not wrecked, and therefore the verdict ought to be for the defendant.

Maule, J.—To entitle the plaintiff to recover, the goods must have been wrecked. The question is, whether the goods have been wrecked in consequence of the wreck of the vessel. The facts are, that the master and crew thought it expedient to leave the vessel, expecting that she would drift ashore. They accordingly did so, and having afterwards proceeded to the spot where they thought she would be, they find her lying on her side on the rocks. Certain repairs were necessary; it appears she was repaired, and became again fit for the sea, and might have continued her voyage. That seems not to be a wreck of the vessel, nor of the goods independent of the vessel; there is therefore no wreck at all.

Cresswell, J.—The question is, whether the plaintiff is entitled to this tobacco on payment of the ad valorem duty of 5l. per cent.; that depends on the 5th section of 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 52. The early part of that section makes all foreign goods jetsam, flotsam, and wreck, brought into this kingdom liable to the same duty as goods of the kind imported are; then there is a proviso that all such goods as cannot be sold for the amount of duty thereon are to be treated as unenumerated goods, but that can only apply to such goods as before mentioned, and this tobacco is not of that description—it is neither jetsam nor flotsam; then is it wreck? "Wreck" in this section may be used as embracing all these; it need not be confined to wreck proper. But here the tobacco was actually brought ashore from the vessel; it is therefore quite clear that it is not within the protection of this clause of the Act.

Erle, J.—I am of the same opinion. The vessel drifted ashore, and she does not appear to have been wrecked; afterwards her cargo is taken out, and there is no authority for saying that under such circumstances there has been any wreck, and without it there is no pretence for the action.

Verdict to be for the defendant.

Saturday, Jan. 18.

Hemsworth v. Brian.

Reference of a cause and all other matters in difference, the costs of the cause, and of the reference and award, to abide the result of the award. The arbitrator directed the issue on the first count to be found for the defendant, and on the others for the plaintiff, finding that in the action the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff in 68l. 9s. 7d.: but that on the taking of all the accounts the plaintiff was indebted to the defendant in 17l. 7s. which sum he ordered the plaintiff to pay.—Held, that the result sufficiently appeared.—Held, also, that the bankruptcy of the plaintiff before the making of the award did not operate as a revocation.

It is no objection to the jurat of an affidavit that it states the affidavit to be sworn at the judge's chambers, in the county of Middlesex, without there is an affidavit that there is no place in Middlesex called the judge's chambers.

Channell, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Talfourd, Serjt. calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why an attachment should not issue against him for contempt in non-payment of a sum of money, and the not delivering to the defendant certain wine-warrants, pursuant to an award. A preliminary objection was made that the affidavit on which the rule had been obtained was defective in the jurat. The jurat stated the affidavit to be sworn at the judge's chambers, in the county of Middlesex. Now, in fact, the judge's chambers were situate in London, and not Middlesex. [Maule, J.—You ought to produce an affidavit that there is no place in Middlesex called the judge's chambers.] Then, as to the award; there are several objections thereto. The reference was by a judge's order, in a cause in which issue had been joined, but no verdict taken, and was a reference of the cause and all other matters in difference between the parties, the costs of the cause, and of the reference and award to abide the result of the said award. The arbitrator, by his award, found that at the time of the commencement of the suit the plaintiff had no cause of action in respect of the matters alleged in first count of the declaration, and that the issue joined thereon should be for the defendant. He also found that the defendant, at the time of the commencement of the suit, was indebted to the plaintiff in 68l. 9s. 7d. and that the issues joined on the 2nd, 3rd, and 4th counts should be for the plaintiff; but he stated that on the taking of all the accounts between the parties, the plaintiff was indebted to the defendant in the sum of 17l. 7s. which sum he ordered the plaintiff to pay to the defendant. The first objection to the award was, that there had not been a disposal with reference to the matters referred. The arbitrator has not given any directions as to the costs. [Maule, J.—He was not called on by the reference to do so.] The costs are to follow the result. [Maule, J.—The result here means only one result, and that depends on which way the balance of the accounts was; that sufficiently appears by the award.] The second objection is, that it is shewn by affidavit that the award was made after a fiat in bankruptcy had issued against the plaintiff; and it is submitted that the bankruptcy operated as a revocation of the submission; at all events, it appears from the affidavits that when the defendant attended to prove the amount of the award under the bankruptcy, it was mutually agreed that the commissioner should investigate the accounts, and that the commissioner, having done so, refused to allow the defendant to prove. The defendant has, therefore, assented to abandon the award, and to the opening of the accounts between the parties. [Maule, J.—Did that which took place before the commissioner amount to more than this, that there should be an examination of the accounts to see whether the defendant should or not be allowed to prove any debt, and not for the purpose of setting aside the award?] Marsh v. Wood (9 B. & C. 659), and Taylor v. Shuttleworth (6 Bing. N. C. 277), were cited as to the bankruptcy operating as a revocation of the submission. [Maule, J.—My general impression is that the bankruptcy does not operate as a revocation of the arbitrator's authority. I do not see why the law should impose thereby any such revocation, when neither of the parties referring or their assignees wish it.] The last objection is, that the award orders certain wine warrants to be delivered up; a demand was properly made of several of them; but as to one the demand was as follows:—"One hogshead of port wine, No. 2260, now or late lying at the East India Docks, mark B No. 2." Here the demand was for the wine, instead of the warrant.

Talfourd, Serjt. on behalf of defendant, consenting to give up this portion of the wine,

The Court said the attachment should go for non-performance of the award as to all except such one hogshead. Rule absolute accordingly.

Stocker v. Warner.

A plea to an infringement of a patent which justifies on the ground of a license under a patent taken out for the same invention during the interval which ensues between the original grant of the patent and the disclaimer on the part of the plaintiff which it is alleged renders the patent void, must distinctly allege that the plaintiff's patent is void.

Action brought for infringement of patent.

Declaration—after setting out the formal matter of the patent, went on to state that a disclaimer had been entered under the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 83, s. 1, and that afterwards the defendant had sold articles to which the patent applied. The defendant pleaded that, before the making of the letters patent and enrolling the same, letters patent were granted to one William Beatson for an improvement in fixed and lift pumps, and that the said Beatson had granted to the defendant a license to make and sell pumps under the patent.

Special demurrer—showing for cause that it was no answer to an infringement of the plaintiff's patent; that the defendant worked under another patent; that the plea amounted, in fact, to an argumentative plea of not guilty.

Sir T. Wilde, Serjt.—In this case the plea is bad. There was no averment that the second patent was the same as the first except as to title. The question will arise whether the disclaimer is retrospective, except as to actions then pending, or whether the patent is brought down to the date of the disclaimer, and only good from that time; and then the question will arise as to the effect of the intermediate patent. The infringement in this case is after entry of disclaimer. In this case, if the plaintiff's patent was void, it should have been averred; the plaintiff's patent should have been traversed with Beatson's patent as special inducement; instead of which it was only averred that Beatsom's patent was good, without averring it was the same thing as the plaintiff's. The license is not material, except for the purpose of confession and avoidance. The plea is also bad for uncertainty; and although there may be a good confession, the plea does not shew an avoidance.

Byles, contrà.—The plea is good in substance (Perry v. Skinner, 2 M. & W. 471), and falls within the reason and the terms of that decision. Here the declaration does not state the plaintiff was the true and original inventor, which ought to have been done. The onus probandi is on the plaintiff to show that the patent was good. It was not for the defendant to shew the patent was bad. When, as in this case, the patent is bad originally, the disclaimer does not set it up. If there has been a public use and exercise of the invention between the taking out of Beatson's patent and the disclaimer, that would be sufficient. The plea is good in substance.

Wilde, Serjt. in reply, stopped by the Court.

Tindal, C. J.—This plea is a bad plea. In order to make it a good plea of confession and avoidance, there must be both, and admitting that there is a good confession, then there is no avoidance of the plaintiff's right of action. It ought to have shewn that the plaintiff's patent is void, and there is no allegation to shew that it is void, unless it arises from the disclaimer under the statute, or the subsequent grant of Beatson's patent. The privilege of this disclaiming appears to be given to patentees to set themselves right, as also to remove any doubts and difficulties when such may arise, and also for the sake of caution and security, the grantee of the patent is allowed to disclaim part of the specification. Then is the patent void on account of the subsequent grant to Beatson? The plaintiff's patent was granted in 1836, that of Beatson's in 1840, and the plaintiff's disclaimer in 1844; now does it necessarily appear that the grant to Beatson made the precedent grant to the plaintiff void in point of law? It appears to me, that as the latter is stated upon the whole record, no such inference arises, because the patent having been granted to the plaintiff in 1836, and the specification of the invention having been made within six months following, it is necessary to say that the registered specification of that invention having been made what Beatson has himself entered his patent for in 1840, must be of the same subject-matter; otherwise the plea is altogether bad, inasmuch as it admits the infringement in respect of the invention, which it alleges is covered by the patent of Beatson. It is not necessary to hold that Beatson's patent is void, but it cannot be held to be a good patent. And although the plea has confessed an invasion of the plaintiff's privilege, the defendant has not set up any matter of avoidance.

The rest of the Court concurred.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Rankin v. Medin.

A replication to a plea justifying a trespass under a writ of testatum fi. fa, which writ had been set aside as irregular by an order of a judge is not bad on demurrer, although it does not state the nature and cause of the irregularity.

This was an action of trespass for breaking and entering a dwelling-house, and taking goods therein. The defendant pleaded a justification under a testatum fi. fa. The plaintiff replied that the said writ of testatum fi. fa. in the said plea mentioned, and under which the defendant attempted to justify the said trespasses, was on the 5th day of Feb. A.D. 1844, irregularly sued and prosecuted out of this Court, and afterwards on the 1st d of April, A.D. 1844, by a certain order then duly made in the said cause by Erskine, J., which order was afterwards made a rule of Court; it was ordered that the writ and proceedings thereon should be set aside. Verification.

Special demurrer, shewing among other causes that the replication was bad, inasmuch as it did not set out the nature and cause of the irregularity in the writ. Joinder in demurrer.

Channell, Serjt. in support of the demurrer.

Riddell v. Pakeman (2 C. M. & R. 30), and (1 Davison and Merivale, part 1, 20), are sound law. The plaintiff does not shew whether the writ was set aside either for irregularity or being erroneous. It was the duty of the plaintiff to make the matter clear, which alone could afford an answer to the plea on the record.

Byles, Serjt. contrà.—Referring to the language of the plea, it appears primâ facie that the writ was set aside for irregularity, and unless it appears to be irregular, it must be taken to be a regular writ.

Tindal, C. J.—The case comes within the reported decisions. Here is a distinct allegation, that a writ having been irregularly sued out, an order setting it aside was made a rule of Court. We cannot assume that it was set aside for any other cause than a sufficient cause. Judgment for plaintiff.

Jacobs v. Fisher.

Special demurrer—Plea bad as amounting to the general issue—Account stated—I O U.

Channell, Serjt., for the plaintiff in demurrer.—In this case the plaintiff declares that the defendant is indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of 18*l.* on an account stated. There was a special plea upon the record, setting forth that the plaintiff, being agent to one Elizabeth English, undertook as her agent to sell to the defendant the good-will of a certain public-house; and it was agreed between them that a deposit of 20*l.*, made up of 2*l.* in money and an I O U for 18*l.*, should be made by the defendant, which was accordingly done, and the question would be whether the defendant stated an account due from the defendant to the plaintiff. On this state of facts the I O U is not a statement but merely evidence, and must be given in evidence under the plea of nunquam indebitatus. In the case of a bill of exchange, as between the first indorsee and the drawer, the bill would be evidence on an account stated. The plea is open to another objection. It is uncertain whether the defendant means to deny an account stated between him and the plaintiff at any time, or admitting an I O U to be given, that it cannot be sued on by means of subsequent circumstances.

Byles, Serjt., contrà.—The only question on this plea is, whether it gives sufficient colour, or whether the facts can be specially pleaded, and that depends upon whether this plea gives a good cause of action, and then proceeds to avoid it. (Carr v. Hinchliff, 4 B. & C. 551.) It is there laid down that such a plea gives sufficient colour, and it is submitted that the expression in this case gives colour.

Tindal, C. J.—In this case it is nothing more than evidence under the general issue.

REGISTRATION APPEALS.

Thursday, Jan. 16.

CITY OF WESTMINSTER.

Pitts, Appellant; Smedley, Respondent.

Where rooms are let to a tenant who has the keys of and exclusive control over them, but who has only a latch, and not the other key to the street door of the house, and the landlord resides on the premises, such tenant has not an occupation sufficient to confer a vote.

In this case it appeared Pitts, the appellant, rented the second and third floors of a house and shop, No. 17, Catherine-st. Strand, at a weekly rent amounting to 26*l.* a year. The appellant had the keys of and exercised exclusive control over these rooms; he also had, as well as the other lodgers, a latch key to the street door; but there was another key to such door which was not in his possession, and when the street door was locked, he was in the habit of entering the house through the shop, which, together with some other part of the house, was occupied by the landlord, Charles Marshall, who resided there with his family. The Revising Barrister had refused to allow the vote.

Cockburn, Q. C. submitted that this was such an occupation of a building within the 27th sec. of the stat. 2 Wm. 4, c. 5 as to confer the franchise. Wright v. Town-clerk of Stockport (1 Barron and Arnold, 39) the only difference between which and the present case was that here the landlord occupied the house himself. If once it is conceded that a portion of a house constitutes a "building" within the meaning of the Act, what does it matter whether the landlord resides in the house or not?

Merewether, for the respondent, was stopped by the Court.

Tindal, C. J. said that this appeared to be a case free from doubt. The question did not turn on the description of the building, but on the nature of the occupation. Here all that the landlord had done was to give a limited enjoyment of the rooms which the appellant occupied. It appeared that the tenant had not the key to the outer door, but that when it was locked, he was in the habit of going into the house through the shop door; this was not therefore such an occupation as to confer a vote.

Decision affirmed with costs.

Monday, Jan. 20.

BOROUGH OF NORTHAMPTON.

Jeffery, Appellant; Kitchener, Respondent.

Parties claiming to vote for a city or borough under the reserved rights contained in the 33rd section of the 2 Wm. 4, c. 45, by virtue of being inhabitant householders of the city or borough, lose that right by ceasing to reside in the borough for however short a period. Should they become, subsequent to such ceasing to reside, inhabitant householders of the same city or borough, they must claim as 10l. householders.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Revising Barrister for the borough of Northampton.

The respondent was an inhabitant householder of the borough of Northampton, and at the period of the passing of the Reform Act was entitled to vote for that borough. Before the 2 Wm. 4, c. 45, every person who had been an inhabitant householder within the borough of Northampton for six calendar months next before the day of election, and who had not received parochial relief or other alms for the space of twelve calendar months then last, was entitled to vote at such election. In Oct. 1832, the respondent ceased to be an inhabitant householder at Northampton, and went with his family to Bedford, in which place he resided fourteen weeks, after which he came back to Northampton, becoming a householder, and residing there from that period to the present. He had in every year since the passing of the Reform Act been duly qualified, according to the usages and customs of the borough of Northampton, on the last day of July in each year. The Revising Barrister thought that the respondent came within the saving of the 33rd sec. of the 2 Wm. 4, c. 45, and disallowed the objection to the name being retained on the register on the ground that the respondent's absence from Northampton occurred during a period which was not necessary to qualify him as an inhabitant householder, and he was therefore entitled to retain his reserved right of voting.

Humfrey, for the appellant.—The object of the Legislature was to assimilate all rights of voting to one uniform standard; but as that could not be done on account of the parties whose rights it was thought advisable to retain, those reserved rights were made the subject of restriction and gradual extinction. Now, if the Reform Act had not passed, there would in this case have been no right to vote until six months after the expiration of the fourteen weeks during which he was absent. At that time the respondent had lost the vote, and having once lost it, it was clearly the intention of the Legislature that when he returned, he should come in among the household voters under the 10*l.* clause of the Reform Act. In this case the Revising Barrister was wrong, and the voter's name should be struck out of the register.

Waddington, contra.—The rights of this class of reserved votes is not of such a transient and ephemeral character as it is attempted to be made out. The excluding words of the 33rd section of the Reform Act does not affect the voter by the mere continuity of the right being broken for a short period, but the right continues so long as he shall be qualified under the terms contained in the section. The Legislature did not mean that a temporary absence should disfranchise. The permanent disqualification would only take place where the voter's name had been off the register for two years.

Tindal, C. J. (without calling on Humfrey to reply.)—It is impossible to read the 33rd section of the Reform Act without perceiving that the intention of the Legislature was that after the passing of the 2 Wm. 4, c. 45, there should be but one right of voting in cities and boroughs, namely, in the 10*l.* householders. But as it was thought extremely hard that a large body of existing voters should be deprived of their franchise, there was an exception engrafted on the Act that every person then having a right to vote in virtue of any other qualification than as a burgess or freeman, or as a freeman or liveryman, or in the case of a city or town being a county of itself, as a freeholder or burgess tenant, should retain such right of voting so long as he should be qualified as an elector according to the usages and customs of such city or borough, or according to the law then in force. And the qualification here set up is, that the voter was qualified to vote on the 7th June, 1832, the day when the Reform Act received the royal assent, as an inhabitant householder of the borough of Northampton. Therefore the proviso must be read and interpreted as if the Act had said, "he shall retain the right of voting so long as he is an inhabitant householder of the borough of Southampton." On the part of the claimant it is contended that this is too stringent a mode of interpreting the clause, but that the construction should be either "so long as he continues to be an inhabitant householder of the borough of Southampton, or acquires afterwards, having ceased in the meanwhile to be an inhabitant householder, a new right to vote as a 10*l*. householder." It seems to me that that would be in effect giving not only the reserved right but the new qualification. Had the Reform Act never passed, and a person had ceased to reside and went and took up his residence in another place, it could not be contended that if he came back to the borough and took a new house, that would be his old qualification. In the first place, the requirement of a residence in the borough for six months shewed that it was not his old qualification; then if it was not his old, it must be a new qualification. I cannot understand what object would be gained by holding that a man once an inhabitant householder should have the privilege for his life, not having been omitted from the list of voters for two years, or acquiring a second qualification by again becoming an inhabitant householder. Why should he have a right to vote which was refused to every other subject of the kingdom? I think the party's name ought not to be on the list.

The other judges delivered similar judgments.

Decision reversed.

STANTON, Appellant: JEFFEREY, Respondent.

This case involved the same facts as the preceding; the revising barrister had, however, decided against the claim. Decision affirmed.

BOROUGH OF WESTBURY.

DYER, Appellant; GOUGH, Respondent.

Collectors of assessed taxes appointed by the Commissioners of Land Tax are within the second section of the 22 Geo. 3, c. 41, although it does not appear upon the appointment that the commissioners are Commissioners of the Land Tax.

Upon an appeal from the decision of the revising barrister of the borough of Westbury, it was proved that the appellant was a person employed in collecting the duties on windows, and that he was appointed such collector by a warrant under the hands and seals of two of the Commissioners of Assessed Taxes. It was admitted that these two commissioners were also Commissioners of the Land Tax; but this fact did not appear in any way recited or otherwise upon the said appointment. The revising barrister considered that the appellant was a person employed in collecting the duties on windows, within the meaning of the 22 Geo. 3, c. 41, s. 1, and expunged the name.

Shee, Serjt. for the appellant.—The vote ought to have been retained on the list. This case clearly falls within the exception of the 2nd sect. of the 22 Geo. 3, c. 41, which provides that the disfranchising operation of the Act shall not extend to Commissioners of the Land Tax, or those appointed by or acting under them. Here the case shews that the appointment was made by parties who were Land Tax Commissioners.

Cockburn, contrà.—The first clause of the 22 Geo. 3 is distinct and positive in disfranchising parties placed in the situation of the appellant. Supposing the 2nd section to apply, the 43 Geo. 3, c. 99, takes away the effect of the exceptions contained in that proviso. Here also the warrant of appointment was made by the Commissioners of Assessed Taxes, and not by Commissioners of the Land Tax. In Collins v. Gwyne (7 Bing. 426), it was assumed in argument that the two bodies of Land Tax Commissioners and Commissioners of Assessed Taxes are distinct, by virtue of the 43 Geo. 3, c. 99. In this case the appointment was clearly made by the Commissioners of the Assessed Taxes.

Shee, Serjt. in reply, stopped by the Court.

TINDAL, C. J.—This question arises on the 22 Geo. 3, c. 41. Had the first section been the only one in the Act, there would have been no doubt whatever that the appellant would have been disqualified, because he would have been a person appointed a collector of the window duties—that is, one of the description of persons mentioned in the section. Then comes the second section, which gave to certain parties an exemption from the disqualifying effect of the first section; and the question is, has the person now claiming a right to vote, or does he bring himself within the second section? It appears to me he does; because, after the general words in the first section comes the second section, which says—"that nothing in the Act shall extend, or be construed to extend, to any person or persons, by reason of his or their being Commissioners of the Land Tax, or acting under the appointment of the Commissioners of the Land Tax." If it had rested there, the proper construction would have been that the appellant was not exempted out of the general terms of the first section, unless employed by the Land Tax Commissioners; but the second section goes on to state, "for the purpose of assessing, levying, collecting, receiving, or managing the land-tax, or any other rates or duties already granted or imposed, or which shall hereafter be granted or imposed by authority of Parliament." Then, looking at the Acts of Parliament which have imposed other duties upon the Commissioners of Land Tax, one being raising and collecting the assessed taxes, under the 41 Geo. 3, c. 99, coupled with subsequent Acts, it appears, therefore, to me, the case having been stated, that the appointment of Dyer, the appellant, was under the hands and seals of two of the Commissioners of the Land Tax; that, although it was an appointment for raising and collecting duties different from those which the Land Tax Commissioners originally had control over, yet, as it was for the purpose of raising those duties subsequently thrown upon the Land Tax Commissioners to collect, the disqualification never existed at all. To decide otherwise would be to put a very constrained construction on the two sections, which we ought not to do.

The rest of the Court concurred.

Decision reversed.

CITY OF BRISTOL.

DANIEL, Appellant; CAMPLIN, Respondent.—Partly heard.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Friday, Jan. 17.

—— r. ——

Flood moved for a rule absolute, to rescind an order of Mr. Baron Gurney, for the discharge of the defendant under the stat. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 58. This was an action on a bill of exchange against the acceptor, wherein judgment had been signed for 60*l*. (amount of bill and costs) in pursuance of a judge's order on a day therein named. The Court has no authority when the judgment recovered is above 20*l*.; here, as evidenced by the judgment roll, the sum recovered is 54*l*. The defendant was not in custody at the time the Act passed, and therefore the learned judge had no power. The defendant was discharged on the 2d Sept. and as the discharge was ex parte, there could be no harm in taking him again upon this application ex parte also. Moneys had been paid since judgment, reducing the amount due to less than 20*l*

The COURT.—We might have agreed to the rule absolute had you come directly; but as you have left it so long, it must be a rule nisi, with liberty to serve it at the defendant's last residence, and on his attorney.

Rule nisi, why the order should not be rescinded, and why the plaintiff should not be at liberty to retake the defendant.

Saturday, Jan. 18.

WHITE v. SEPTTIGUE.

Trover lies against the purchaser of stolen property, even though the owner has taken no steps against the thief.

Mereweather moved for a new trial in this case, on the ground of misdirection; verdict for the plaintiff. The case was tried at the present sittings by Rolfe, B. It was an action of trover for certain books; plea, not possessed.

The evidence was that the defendant had bought certain books, which were identified as books belonging to the plaintiff, which he had from time to time lost. There was no evidence at the trial that these books had been stolen, but this was taken for granted.

Mereweather at the trial contended that the plaintiff could not recover without shewing that he had prosecuted the thief. Rolfe, B. directed the jury to the contrary. Mereweather said it was laid down in Gibson v. Woodfall that till the loser has prosecuted he cannot recover. (Grimson v. Woodfall, 2 C. & P. 41; Peere v. Humfrey, 2 N. & E. 495.)

PARKE, B.—How does this defence arise on the plea of not possessed? You should have pleaded specially.

ROLFE, B.—This evidence, under plea of not possessed, would have taken the plaintiff by surprise. It might be there was no evidence against the thief.

POLLOCK, C.B.—He might be dead, or out of the country. In Stone v. Marsh (6 B. & C. 561) I argued with you, and the Court, after time taken to consider, decided against me.

ROLFE, B.—The civil remedy against the felon is suspended till prosecution, not against other parties. (Marsh v. Kealing in the House of Lords.)

PARKE, B.—The pleadings and the law are against you; there is no foundation for the motion.

ALDERSON, B.—The question cannot be raised on the pleadings, nor if raised would you succeed.

Rule refused.

HARRISON v. BILLING.

New trial—Pleading.

Hill, Q. C. moved for a new trial in this case on the ground of misdirection and verdict against evidence.

The case was tried before Rolfe, B. on Tuesday, Jan. 14.

It was an action on a promissory note made by the defendant in favour of one Potts, and indorsed to the plaintiff. The plea was, that the note was made for the joint accommodation of the defendant and Potts, and that Potts had indorsed it to the plaintiff in consideration of a promise that he would discount it for them, that he never did discount it, and that there was no consideration for the indorsement save as above. Replication de injuria.

Potts gave full evidence in support of the plea. A clerk of the plaintiff Harrison was called, who contradicted him.

PARKE, B.—What is the misdirection?

Hill, Q.C.—Potts admitted a debt due to Harrison at the time the note was given him.

PARKE, B.—But for which it was not given him. He might have had 100,000*l*. owing to him, but if the note was not given on account of that debt it would constitute no consideration.

Hill, Q. C.—Was your lordship satisfied with the verdict?

ROLFE, B.—I was neither satisfied nor dissatisfied. Rule refused.

PARKINSON, Executor of Limbird, v. WESTBROOK, Executor of Limbird.

Covenant—Matter proper to be pleaded need not be negatived in the declaration.

Bramwell moved in arrest of judgment.

This was an action of covenant to pay money.

Breach—That neither the testator nor the defendant had paid, and that the money still remained unpaid.

Bramwell objected that no cause of action appeared on the declaration, for non constat but the debt might have been released.

By the COURT.—That is matter to be pleaded; there is a good primâ facie cause of action set out.

Rule refused.

BAMBUCK v. XYMENES.

Evidence—Representations which do not operate by estoppel are not exclusively binding.

Petersdorf moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, and of the improper admission of evidence.

This was an action for use and occupation of apartments. They had been let to the defendant by the plaintiff. Subsequently the plaintiff gave notice to the defendant that he had assigned his interest, and that defendant should pay all future rent to the assignee.

The assignee distrained for a quarter's rent, and plaintiff now sued for a subsequent quarter's rent.

The plaintiff met this evidence by further evidence, which shewed that the assignment was merely one for better enforcing the rent from the defendant, and that the plaintiff was now the party entitled to have it.

PARKE, B.—The representations were only evidence against the defendant. These were not conclusive, unless he is estopped. The action is now by the right party. Rule refused.

LEVI v. HAMER.

Outlawry—Proceedings to set aside outlawry of indorsee of bill of exchange.

Lush moved to set aside proceedings to outlawry in this case.

The defendant was indorsee of a bill of exchange. The plaintiff had taken the drawer and acceptor in execution, and had let them out. (English v. Darley, 2 B. & P. 62). Rule nisi.

CROWN CASE.

REG. v. WM. HOWELL, WALTER HOWELL, and ISRAEL SHIPLEY.

Admissibility of dying declarations.

Circumstances in which the statements of deceased are receivable as dying declarations.

It is not necessary that the deceased should have thought himself in articulo mortis. It is enough if he thinks he shall die of the sickness under which he labours.

This case was tried at Ipswich by Williams, J. at the last winter assizes, and the prisoners were convicted of murdering McFadden, a police constable of that district.

The question for the consideration of the judges was, whether certain declarations of the deceased had been properly received in the evidence. The deceased was shot in the thigh on the morning of Monday the 29th July, between twelve or one o'clock. He had lingered till Tuesday evening, when he died. His wound was dressed by Mr. Prentice, a surgeon, between four and five o'clock on the Monday morning. Before dressing the wound the surgeon said, "Mac. I hope we shall see you about again." The deceased shook his head, and said, "I shall never get over this." Mr. Prentice collected from his demeanour that the impression was that he should never recover.

The deceased continued in this state till Tuesday evening. He was several times seen by the surgeon, but evinced no change of mind.

The conversation, on which the question arises, took place on the Tuesday evening. He was a Catholic; he was asked if he would see a priest; he said, no. He was asked whether he would make a deposition, and was told that a magistrate was in the next room. He said, not yet.

Prendergast (Dasent with him) appeared for the prisoners.

Gurdon (O'Malley with him) appeared for the Crown.

The case submitted by the learned judge having been read,

Prendergast addressed their lordships in an able speech, when every tittle of evidence and every circumstance that could reduce the evidence of the condition of the deceased's mind to one of mere despondency, and not settled conviction of death, was caught hold of. He said, ordinary rules are broken in upon by the reception of dying declarations. It is a relic of the looseness with which evidence used to be admitted. Dying declarations are now received rather for the sake of enforcing the law, than from any well-grounded opinion of their value as evidence. The evidence of one habitually in collision with a prisoner should especially be distrusted when not exposed to the test of cross-examination. The oath is dispensed with on account of the solemnity of the position of the dying man (2 Russ on Crimes, last ed., 1 Phillips on Evid 275 4th ed.) not the mere apprehension of death or the near approach of death suffices, many die apprehending death yet not in a condition to make dying declarations which shall be receivable in evidence. All hope of recovery must have been given up: no hope of recovery must remain. And this is not to be inferred from declarations alone, but from circumstances, for example, from the nature of the wound. In this case it was in the fleshy part of the thigh, a place not regarded a mortal even by medical men. They attribute the death to the shock on the nervous system. It is to be gathered that they thought that from the nature of the wound, the deceased would have hope. No medical man told him that recovery was hopeless. In R. v. Christie (2 Russ, 7[illegible]) the medical man told his patient his recovery was just possible. This shews the importance of a surgeon's declaration. A man is inclined to cling to hope. In R. v. Fairbutchel (3 C. & P. (2), 2 Russ 7[illegible]5) the patient said "I have such an injury I shall never recover; the surgeon cheered him. He was notwithstanding satisfied he should never recover, yet the declaration here were rejected. No acts shew he had belief in his approaching death, but his acts, on the contrary, negative this. He refused to send for a priest—he would not see the magistrate "yet." He made no disposition of his property—he bade no one farewell. The Catholic Christian Instructed is a book of authority among Catholics. There it is said extreme unction remits venial sins—it removes the debt of punishment due to past sins. In the evidence at the trial it was said by the Catholic priest that no Catholic would avoid availing himself of its uses in his last moments. A dying declaration should not be received, unless given by one as the last account that he shall give.

The COURT thought the case clear, and that the evidence had been properly received.

ALDERSON, B. said it was not necessary that the deceased should be in articulo mortis, or even that he should think so. It is enough if he thinks he shall die of the sickness under which he labours.

The JUDGES held the conviction to be right.

GREAT NORTH OF ENGLAND RAILWAY COMPANY v. CLARENCE AND HARTLEPOOL RAILWAY COMPANY.

The Court was occupied during the greater part of the day with this case, which was sent by the Vice Chancellor Knight Bruce for the opinion of the Court. It turned entirely upon the construction of several clauses in the above Railway Acts.

M. Hill, for the plaintiffs.

Tomlinson and Wood, for the defendants.

The COURT certified in favour of defendants.

ROBERTSON v. SHOWLER.

Special demurrer to plea.

Gray, for plaintiff.

Peacock, for defendant. Judgment for plaintiff.

The judges were occupied during the greater part of the morning in hearing a Crown case reserved for the opinion of all the judges, which had been left unfinished on Saturday.

DOE dem. GILBERT AND OTHERS v. ROSS AND OTHERS.

Changing attorney—Application by the attorney to rescind the order for taxing his costs.

Hill, Q.C., on behalf of Mr. Baxter, the attorney for the defendants in this cause, applied for a rule calling on [illegible] to shew cause why so much of an order of Rolfe, B. made in this cause as decided [illegible] Mr. Baxter's costs in that action should not be discharged. Mr. Baxter had acted as attorney in the action, and, in another action which had been brought against the defendant to recover possession of certain property that had been devised to him by Mrs. Scoly, deceased. The title was very confused, and it had been agreed between the parties to compromise the action, and divide the property between them in certain proportions. All the costs were to be secured on the property, and the whole matter to carry their arrangements into effect was to be submitted to Mr. Humfrey on the application of the defendants. Mr. Baron Rolfe had made an order that Messrs. Power and Miller should be appointed attorneys in the place of Mr. Baxter on payment of his costs. Messrs. Power and Miller had then appeared before Mr. Humfrey, and had acted as attorneys de facto for the defendants in spite of the process of Mr. Baxter; for Mr. Humfrey refused to go into the question of who was the attorney de jure for the defendants. Thus the order of Mr. Baron Rolfe was deprived of its sting. Further Mr. Baxter had other costs besides those included in Mr. Baron Rolfe's order, and it would be desirable there should be one taxation of all.

Rule nisi.

JACOBS v. BRIDGES.

Judgment by default in the Palace Court—Application to remove the cause must be supported by affidavit that there is good defence on the merits.

Knowles, Q.C. shewed cause.

This action was brought in the Palace Court and the defendant suffered judgment by default. Upon being served with the notice of the writ of inquiry, defendant had applied for a habeas corpus cum causa. Upon this the plaintiff had obtained an order to set aside the writ and for a procedendo. Defendant then obtained a rule nisi to set aside this order.

And Knowles, Q.C. for the plaintiff now shewed cause.—Though the affidavit of the attorney for the defendant goes no further than that he had received instructions to plead to the action, in case it should be removed. The practice is universally to require an affidavit that he has a good defence on the merits.

Best.—The affidavit goes far enough, it promises a plea.

ALDERSON, B.—You must pledge your oath to the merits.

Best.—Will your lordship grant me time?

ALDERSON, B.—No. We must not solicit affidavits, it would induce you to make one.

Rule discharged with costs.

EADON v. BLAKE.

Evidence may be given of declaration by an auctioneer at the time of the sale in correction of the printed particulars, if it was made in the hearing of the defendant, and there was no written contract.

Martin, Q.C. shewed cause.

This was an action on the common counts for goods sold and delivered. It was tried before the assessor for the Sheriff of Yorkshire.

Chambers obtained a rule to set aside the verdict on the ground of the improper admission of evidence.

The action was brought for a dressing-case, sold at an auction. In the printed catalogue the dressing case was described as having silver fittings; at the auction the auctioneer had verbally corrected this, in the hearing of the defendant saying that the fittings were silver plated. The amount sought to be recovered was less than 10*l*. At the trial the assessor admitted evidence of this parol declaration, and the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff. There was no written contract between the parties.

Martin, Q.C. contended that the evidence was properly received. It was proper evidence of a verbal contract.

Chambers, in support of the rule. What this contract was must be gathered from the printed particulars. The sale took place of the things contained in the particulars and upon the terms therein mentioned. The parties contract on those terms. If we admit evidence to vary terms thus ostensibly held out, we shall contradict several cases; especially the case of Shelton v. Linus (2 Cr. & J. 411), where it is laid down that the printed particulars cannot be varied by parol evidence of what took place at the time of the sale.

ALDERSON, B.—In that case the catalogue was signed by the auctioneer, and constituted a written contract between the parties.

Chambers.—I submit it makes no difference whether the catalogue be signed or not.

ALDERSON, B.—The cases are collected in Phillips on Evidence. There you will find the whole turns on whether there was a written agreement or not. The difficulty you have is that here no such contract existed. The printed particulars are evidence, but not the only evidence. It is a first principle that when parties have contracted in writing, that is what they must be bound by, but here there was none.

Chambers.—The auctioneer's clerk was produced as a witness, and he gave evidence of the contract from his book and from the particulars of sale. He was then asked if the particulars had not been altered by parol at the time of sale. This was objected to, but the objection was overruled. The particulars of the sale were the best evidence.

ALDERSON, B.—There is no rule more misunderstood. If there had been a contract in writing the writing would have been the best evidence of the contract; but you beg the question to say the particulars were the best evidence. The best evidence was the parol evidence.

By the COURT.—The question is what was the agreement. Had it been in writing the parties would have been bound by the written terms, but it was not in writing. So the parol statement, it having been made in the hearing of the defendant, was well admitted.

Rule discharged.

WILKINSON v. GRIGGS.

Writ of trial—Whether it must not be signed by the Court—Amendment of postea by sheriff.

Barstow shewed cause. This case was tried before the sheriff. Verdict for the plaintiff. Damages, 17*l*. A rule nisi had been obtained to set aside the verdict and all subsequent proceedings, with costs. The grounds were, that the writ of trial had not properly passed the Court of Exchequer, it had never been signed, the common printed form had been bought, sealed, but not signed; it had then merely been filled up. Secondly, that the postea, though several issues were to be tried, was in the singular "issue" throughout.

Horne appeared in support of the rule, but the Court granted Barstow a rule nisi to amend the writ of trial, and enlarged Horne's rule, that Barstow might apply to the sheriff, and get the postea amended.

To stand over.

JONES v. FEARNSTONE.

Quære time within which to apply to set aside proceedings in an action on the score of defendant not having been served with process or declaration?

Butt moved the Court under the following circumstances.—The defendant had been proceeded against to execution in this action. The levy was made on the 14th November. Defendant swore he had not been served with process or declaration or any subsequent matter in the course of the action, till the levy was made. He begged the opinion of the Court whether the plaintiff's proceedings were null, or only irregular? If irregular only, he feared defendant had laid by too long. (Holmes v. Russell, 9 Dow. 487.)

The COURT would give no opinion till they heard the other side, but would grant Butt a rule nisi to set the proceedings aside, if he chose to take it.

Butt did not signify whether he made the election.

ASHENHEIM v. COLEFAIR.

Affidavit to hold an officer to bail who is about to leave England with his regiment.

D. D. Keane applied to set aside an order of Rolfe, B. made in this cause to hold to bail, and to stay all proceedings on the bail-bond, on the ground of the insufficiency of the affidavit to hold to bail.

The defendant was an officer in the army. The affidavit stated that his regiment was under orders for India, and deponent believed that defendant was about to leave England for India with his regiment.

Keane contended that the affidavit was insufficient on the face of it, it should have shewn grounds for the belief expressed. It contained no matter on which an indictment for perjury could be sustained.

By the COURT.—It states positively that the regiment is under orders for India; this is a fact which, if false, may be contradicted; and for which, if false, to the knowledge of the defendant, he may be indicted.

Rule refused.

RICHARD v. POILE.

Middlesex Court of Requests Act.

Application to enter suggestion, and for plaintiff to pay defendant's costs, will not succeed, unless verdict was given for a cause of action which arose in Middlesex.

This action was tried under the Middlesex Court of Requests Act, before the assessor for the sheriff. Verdict for plaintiff, damages 1*l.* 1*s.*

Charnock had obtained a rule nisi for plaintiff to bring in the roll, that a suggestion might be entered pursuant to the Middlesex Court of Request Act; that plaintiff pay defendant double costs, the verdict being less than 2*l*.

Bayley shewed cause against the rule.—The Act does not apply, unless the whole cause of action arises in Middlesex. Here the bulk of the action was for matters arising in Surrey; and though the defendant contends that the verdict was only for an amount which arose in Middlesex, yet at the trial no evidence whatever was given of that amount having become due at all.

Charnock, in support of the rule.—The amount given by the verdict must be applied to an item in the particulars for one guinea, which, though there was not strict evidence of it, the jury must be deemed to have found for the plaintiff.

ALDERSON, B.—There is ground for you to apply to have the verdict set aside, on the score of its having been given without evidence of any debt in Middlesex, but we cannot hold that the verdict was for an amount of which no evidence was given.

Rule discharged.

WILLIAMS v. JONES.

*Debt will lie upon the judgment of a County Court or a court not of record.—A declaration upon such a judgment need not shew that the defendant resided within the jurisdiction of the Court, or that he was duly summoned. Such defence ought to come from the defendant.

Action of debt—Declaration on a judgment of an inferior court, not of record, alleging that the debt arose within the jurisdiction of the Court, but not alleging that the defendant resided within such jurisdiction, or that he was duly summoned.

Demurrer, assigning for cause that debt will not lie on the judgment of a court not of record, and that it ought to appear upon the declaration that the defendant resided within the jurisdiction of the Court, and that he had been duly summoned, and such other proceedings had, as gave the inferior court jurisdiction to pronounce the judgment it gave.

Welsby, for the plaintiff.

Pearson, for defendant.

Cases cited: Emerson v. Leshley (2 H. Bl. 248; 1 Saund. 92, note c); Reed v. Pope (1 C. M. & R. 302); Coore v. Kennedy (3 Esp. 290); Jones v. Jones (5 M. & W. 523); Briscoe v. Stephens (2 Bing. 213); Herbert v. Cook (3 Doug. 101; Willes, 37 n); Pritchard v. Macgill (5 Dowl. P. C. 731).

POLLOCK, C.B.—The questions which have been raised appear to be, first, whether an action of debt will lie on a judgment of an inferior court; and, secondly, whether there is enough stated in the declaration, assuming that debt will lie, to shew that the Court had jurisdiction. With respect to the question whether debt will lie—as assumpsit will lie, I can see no reason why debt should not lie also. There are many cases in which debt has been brought, and where this objection has not been taken, and though such cases may not give any very great authority to the view which I take, they are certainly in accordance with it. With respect to the second objection, that it does not sufficiently appear that the Court had jurisdiction, it does not appear to me that those averments were necessary. If the defendant was never summoned, that is a defence of which he may certainly avail himself, but which ought to proceed from himself.

PARKE, B.—I am of opinion, that whenever a Court of competent jurisdiction has decided that a defendant owes money to a plaintiff, debt will lie. The decision of the Court creates an obligation upon which debt may be maintained. I take that to be the principle upon which the judgment of a foreign court is sustained. Several cases have been cited in which the objection would have been probably taken if well founded. Coore v. Kennedy is one of those cases. There seems to be no reason why debt should not lie upon the judgment of a Court of competent jurisdiction, whether of record or not of record. The only other question is, whether it is necessary to state in the declaration any thing more than that the cause of action arose within the jurisdiction. It appears to me that there is sufficient stated upon this record to enable us to give judgment for the plaintiff.

ALDERSON, B. concurred.

GORE v. GIBSON.

To an action by indorsee against indorser of a bill of exchange, it is a good plea that defendant at the time of the indorsement was so drunk, &c. as to be unable to comprehend the meaning of the indorsement, of which the plaintiff at the time had notice.

Assumpsit by indorsee of a bill of exchange against prior indorser.

Plea—That before and at the time when he, the defendant, indorsed the said bill of exchange, he, the defendant, was so drunk, intoxicated, inebriated, and under the influence of liquor, and thereby so entirely deprived of sense, understanding, and the use of his reason, as to be unable to understand or comprehend the meaning, object, nature, or effect of the said indorsement, or to contract or promise thereby, or in that behalf, of all which premises in the plea mentioned the plaintiff before and at the time when he so indorsed the said bill of exchange, and always since, had full knowledge and notice. Verification.

Demurrer.

Horn, for plaintiff, contended that, according to all the cases, a man could not be allowed to stultify himself; and that, as it was not alleged that the plaintiff was guilty of fraud or took advantage of the condition of the defendant in any way to obtain the indorsement, the defendant could not set up his own crime as a defence to an action. This defence would avail nothing in a criminal proceeding, and, a fortiori, it must be bad in a civil one. The averment of the knowledge of the plaintiff does not necessarily imply fraud on his part. It is only evidence of fraud. He cited [illegible] Institute, 247; Murston v. Allen (8 M.& W. 494); Newland on Contracts, 365; Kent's Commentaries.

Pearson, contra, was stopped by the Court.

POLLOCK, C. B.—It is true that there are old authorities in favour of the plaintiff, but the modern cases are all the other way. The plaintiff may have leave to amend.

The rest of the Court concurred.

LEA v. ROBSON.

A plea setting up a petition and final order under 5 & 6 Vict. c. [illegible] ought to shew that the defendant was a person within the meaning of that statute, and had complied with all its requirements before presenting his petition.

Assumpsit by indorsee against acceptor of a bill of exchange.

Plea—That heretofore, to wit, on the 12th February, A.D. 1844, the defendant, in pursuance of an Act of Parliament made and passed in the session of Parliament holden in the 5th and 6th years of the reign of her present Majesty, entitled "An Act for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors," presented her petition to the commissioners of the Leeds District Court of Bankruptcy, in which district she, the defendant, had resided twelve calendar months, praying to be protected from all process whatever either against her person or property of any description, and that the said defendant might have such other and further relief as by the said statute is provided, and as the said Court should think fit, and such proceedings were thereupon had, that afterwards, to wit, on the 16th April, in the year last aforesaid, a certain order was made by Montague Baker Bere, esq. then being one of her Majesty's Commissioners of Bankruptcy for the Leeds district, and acting in the matter of the said petition, for the protection of the person of the said defendant from all process, and the vesting her estate and effects in Charles Fearns, official assignee named by the said Court, whereby and by reason of the premises aforesaid, and by force of the said statute, the said defendant was then discharged of and from the premises and causes of action in the declaration mentioned, and the said order and discharge still remain in full force. Verification.

Special demurrer—assigning for causes that the said plea does not set forth or allege in form the presenting of the said petition for such protection in that plea mentioned, neither is it recited or set forth that the said period of twelve months therein mentioned was twelve months next before the presenting of such petition or next before the making of the said order or otherwise; and for that the said plea should have shewn whether the defendant was a trader or not, and, if a trader, whether her debts amounted to less than 300*l.*; and that the said plea did not allege that the defendant gave such notice as in the said Act is mentioned, or caused the same to be advertised in manner therein mentioned; and for that the mode of pleading adopted in the said plea by a taliter processum est is insufficient and improper, and that the said proceedings should have been set forth.

Joinder in demurrer.

Humfrey, for plaintiff.

H. Hill, for defendant.

The COURT thought the plea did not sufficiently shew that the requirements of the statute had been complied with before presenting the petition.

The defendant had leave to amend. There was also another plea specially demurred to, upon which the defendant also had leave to amend upon the usual terms; otherwise, Judgment for plaintiff.

VESCY v. JAMES.—It may be remembered that this action had been brought by direction of the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, to try the question of whether the plaintiff was a joint trader with one Henderson on the 25th of March last. There was some difficulty in ascertaining whether a joint or a sole trading was the point to be ascertained; but the Court held that it was quite clear a joint trading was the thing intended. Jervis, Q. C. admitted then that he had no ground to stand on. Rule discharged.

ESDAILE v. LUND.—Hugh Hill and Rew shewed cause against the rule in this case. In one event this case might have determined the important question of whether the discharge of one shareholder of a joint-stock bank, who had been taken in execution on a sci. fa. would be a bar to farther proceedings against the rest; but inasmuch as the Court held it to be clear that the discharge in this case had not been made with the authority of the plaintiff, the rule to enter verdict for plaintiff on the second issue was ordered to be made absolute. Rule absolute.

TURNER v. WILLIAMS.—H. J. Williams moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict for the plaintiff should not be set aside and a new trial had on the ground of the verdict being perverse. Rule nisi.

BAIL COURT.

Friday, Jan. 17.

(Before Mr. Justice WILLIAMS.)

REG. v. GRIFFITH.

Application for an order commanding a gaoler, who has possession of a sum of money belonging to a prisoner committed for trial, to deliver same up to the defendant.

F. Edwards moved, on behalf of the defendant, for a rule calling upon the gaoler of the gaol of Haverfordwest to pay over to him the sum of 20*l.* under the following circumstances. The defendant had been tenant of two adjoining farms, and had become indebted to some bankers to a considerable amount; and to avoid having his stock taken in execution by them, he agreed with the agent of his landlady that a sham distress should be levied on his stock. This was done, and a nominal sale took place to one Harvey, the agent, who put a man into possession; subsequently this man was withdrawn, and Griffith was restored. Hearing that Harvey was about to put in a real distress, he drove off the land some of his live stock, leaving, as it was alleged, sufficient property to answer the distress. On the 9th of last September he was taken into custody on the charge of stealing this stock (the driving off being the felony charged). At the time he was taken he had 20*l.* in his possession, of which the gaoler took charge, and refuses to give up without the authority of this Court. The defendant had been admitted to bail. It was now submitted that the gaoler had no right to detain this sum of money.

WILLIAMS, J.—I do not see how I can interfere. The gaoler is not an officer of this Court.

Edwards.—The gaoler only wants the authority of this court.

WILLIAMS, J.—If you desire a speculative opinion, I should say that if the 20*l.* have nothing to do with the alleged offence, the money ought not to be withheld from the prisoner. It is every day's practice, where money is found in possession of a prisoner which has nothing to do with the case, for judges at assizes or magistrates to direct it to be given up; for he may require it for his defence; it is of course otherwise where the money is connected with the offence. I can, however, make no order upon the gaoler. No rule.

SPARDING and ANOTHER v. THE HON. ROBERT FULKE GREVILLE.

Motion to set aside the allowance of a writ of error and the assignment of errors for irregularity.

Martin, Q.C. and Bevan [illegible] cause against a rule obtained by F. V. Lee to set aside the allowance of the writ of error coram nobis, and the subsequent assignment of errors for irregularity, with costs.

The defendant had been sued by the plaintiffs for a debt, and had been proceeded against to outlawry. In the writ of summons the parties were described as Henry Sparding and Henry Mortimer Hummel, plaintiffs, against Robert Fulke Greville, esq. commonly called the Honourable Fulke Greville. The allowance of the writ of error was as follows:—

"In the Queen's Bench.—Sparding and Another v. The Honourable R. F. Greville.

"Take notice that a writ of error coram nobis has been allowed by the Court in the above cause. Dated the 12th day of Nov. 1844.

"THOS. F. WALTERS."

The heading of the assignment of errors was:—

"In the Queen's Bench.—Henry Sparding and Another v. The Honourable Robert Fulke Greville."

The præcipe for the writ was this:—

"Writ of error to reverse outlawry for the Honourable Robert Fulke Greville; ats. Henry Sparding and Henry Mortimer Hummell, Middlesex. Debt."

This rule was moved on the ground of the variances in the names in the above documents.

In support of the writ of error it was contended that the variations were immaterial, since it was clear that the same persons were meant; in support of which Hunt v. Lawson (1 Ld. Raym. 347) was cited. It was further argued that this application should have been made to the Court of Chancery, out of which the writ issued, and not to this Court, which has no discretion in allowing the writ, and that the rule in this case, which was entitled, as in the original action, "Sparding and Another v. Greville, esq." should have been entitled according to the case in error, by reversing the parties. (Gandell v. Rozier, 4 B. & C. 862; Jones v. De Lisle, 3 Bing. 125; Boreman v. Brown, 1 Dowl. N. S. 281; Holmes v. Newlands, 2 Dowl. N. S.)

F. V. Lee, contrà, contended that the variances in the manner of stating and spelling the names of the parties were fatal. That the rule was well entitled, and that although it might be proper to go to the Court of Chancery to set aside the writ of error, that as this rule was only to set aside the allowance of the writ, and the assignment of errors, it was properly drawn up in this court. Cur. adv. vult.

REG. at the instance of JOBSON v. THE MASTER AND FELLOWS OF GONVILLE AND CAIUS COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

Mandamus to lords of a manor to admit heir-at-law to a copyhold.

Worlledge and Tozer shewed cause against a rule obtained last Term by Ball for a mandamus to the above parties, commanding them to admit William Jobson to some copyhold tenements within their manor. Against the rule it was contended, that the property in question is already in the possession of two parties who were admitted by virtue of a surrender to the use of her will of the mother of Jobson (whose heir-at-law he was); that the will had been supported by an award under an arbitration, to which Jobson had been a party, and which remains in force; and that as heir-at-law it is not necessary that he should be admitted in order to bring ejectment. (Reg. v. Wilson, 10 B. & C. 87; Reg. v. The Lord of the Manor of Agardsley, 5 Dowl. 19; Doe dem. ——, 8 Ad. & Ell. 779; Doe dem. Rosser v. ——, 3 East; Williamson v. Harrison, 1 Jacob & W. 533; Doe dem. Nethercote v. Roe, 5 B. & Ald. 502; Rex v. Rennett, 2 T. R. 198.)

Ball, contrà, argued that Jobson, who was heir-at-law of the devisee, was clearly entitled to be admitted, the testator being a married woman, and therefore incapable of making a will. (Reg. v. The Brewer's Company, 3 B. & C. 172.) Cur. adv. vult.

REG. v. GEORGE BUCHANAN.

Quære, whether it is an indictable misdemeanour for an unqualified person to conduct legal proceedings in the character of an attorney.

Horn moved for a certiorari, to be directed to the Right Hon. Baron Parke and Baron Gurney, to certify into this Court an indictment found against the defendant, at the summer assizes at Maidstone, in 1844, and the recognizances entered into by the defendant, in order that the same may be quashed.

The indictment in question had been preferred against the defendant for acting as an attorney, he, in fact not being one, in contravention of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73; and it was submitted that the indictment charged no legal offence, inasmuch as it is not an indictable misdemeanour falsely to pretend and act as an attorney, the above enactment clearly pointing out the appropriate penalty for such conduct, section 35 declaring that any person so offending shall be incapable of recovering any fees, and that such offences shall be deemed a contempt of Court, &c. COLE v. RAYMOND.

Motion to compel a defendant who has wrongfully possessed himself of the writ of summons, to give it up, or that an appearance may be entered for him by the plaintiff.

F. V. Lee moved for a rule calling upon the defendant to shew cause why he should not deliver up the writ of summons, and why the time of appearing to the writ should not be computed from the time when the defendant so got possession of it, and why, if defendant should not deliver it up, the plaintiff should not be at liberty to enter an appearance without any indorsement on the writ as required by the Act; and why the defendant should not pay the costs of the application. It appeared, that, on the defendant being served with the copy of the writ of summons herein, he demanded to look at the original, which, on being shewn to him, he snatched from the party's hand, and refused to return. Judgment against the casual ejector where the declaration was wrongly entitled "In the Exchequer of Pleas," but the notice was to appear in this court.

Gray moved for judgment against the casual ejector. In this case the declaration was headed "In the Exchequer of Pleas," but the notice was to appear in the Queen's Bench. In all other respects the declaration was regular. It was now submitted, on the authority of Doe dem. Knowles v. Roe (13 L. J. Ex. 129), that this was sufficient for a rule nisi.

An illustrated plea!

Fitzherbert moved to strike out certain pictures in a plea, and certain pleas.

WILLIAMS, J.—Are the pleas illuminated?

Fitzherbert.—I don't know whether to describe the pleas as illuminated, shaded, or otherwise.

WILLIAMS, J.—The action is for the infringement of a patent? Perhaps they mean to say that they cannot make the plea intelligible without the designs.

Fitzherbert.—They must not set out evidence in their plea; they must, however great the difficulty, describe in words what they mean; as in the case of a libel, where the offence is that of representing a man with ass's ears. There are besides too many pleas, in contravention of the new rules.

DAVIS and ANOTHER v. LORD SUFFIELD.

Warrant of attorney—Motion to set aside judgment thereon.

Ogle moved, on behalf of the defendant, to set aside a judgment on a warrant of attorney, and that the warrant itself may be given up to be cancelled. The objections were, 1st, That no attorney nominated by the defendant was present at the time of the execution; 2nd, that the defendant was not informed of its purport; 3rd, that it was not executed in due form; and, 4th, that it was obtained from the defendant by fraud. The warrant of attorney was given by the defendant whilst at Brussels, to secure the sum of 2,000*l.*; and the affidavits upon which the motion was made disclosed facts of great fraud and misrepresentation.

THE QUEEN v. THE COMMISSIONERS OF EXCISE.

Re PHILIP HAWARD.

The Court will not grant a rule for a mandamus to Commissioners of Excise, commanding them to give their assent in writing to the appropriation of a portion of an excise officer's pension to the discharge of his debts under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 56.

Cooke moved for a rule calling upon the Commissioners of Excise to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue, commanding them to give their assent in writing that the sum of 40*l.* per annum should be paid out of the pension or superannuated allowance of Philip Haward to his assignee, to be divided amongst his creditors.

It appeared that Philip Hayward, who is in the receipt of a pension or superannuated allowance from the excise, became insolvent, and was brought up before a commissioner on circuit for his discharge under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110; that on that occasion the commissioner made an order that out of the insolvent's pension a sum of 40*l.* should be yearly paid over to the assignee for the benefit of the creditors. The 1 and 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 56, exempts the pensions of certain parties, amongst others, of excise officers, from the operation of the Act; but with the proviso, that the Insolvent Court may order such portion of the pension of such prisoner as, on communication from the said Court to the Commissioners of Excise, they may respectively, under their hands, consent to in writing, to be paid to the assignee, in order that the same may be applied in payment of the debts of such prisoner.

In conformity with the order of the Insolvent's Commissioner, application had been made to the Commissioners of Excise for their assent to the arrangement; but the commissioners replied, that they conceived that they had no power to consent to such an order, and refused therefore to comply with the application.

It was now contended that the commissioners had taken an erroneous view of the case, and that although they had a discretion as to the amount to be allowed out of the pension, and might, therefore, have declined assenting to the appropriation of so large a sum; that they clearly had power to assent, and ought to have assented, to some appropriation. It was further stated that the Commissioners of Customs and the authorities at the East India-house are constantly in the habit of consenting to such appropriations under the Act.

Mr. Justice WILLIAMS thought that the commissioners had a complete discretion whether or not to assent to the order of the Insolvents' Commissioner, and that, in the absence of any authority the other way, he should not grant the rule. Rule refused.

BURTON v. THE EARL OF CHESTERFIELD.

The Court will not grant a rule in the alternative to strike an attorney off the roll, and to answer the matter of affidavits.

Charnock moved for a rule calling upon an attorney to shew cause why he should not be struck off the roll, or why he should not answer the matters of the affidavits.

WILLIAMS, J.—You must not take a rule in the alternative. You may have your rule for either, but not for both.

Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts.

COURT OF REVIEW.

Wednesday, Jan. 22.

Ex parte BRUTTON, re FISHER.

Costs—Statute of Limitations.

The bill of a solicitor for fees and disbursements after the choice of assignees was, upon petition, ordered to be paid, although no item of the bill was within six years, the estate not being completely wound up and distributed.

This was the petition of Mr. Brutton, a solicitor, residing at Exeter, for the payment, by the official assignee, of a sum in his hands of 88*l.* 19s. 1d. the amount of the petitioner's bill of costs in respect of business done in this bankruptcy since the choice of assignees. The commission was dated the 4th of December, 1828, and on the 23rd of December, 1828, Robert Taylor was chosen assignee. The petitioner acted as solicitor up to the choice of assignees, and his bill of costs up to that time had been paid. After the choice of assignees the petitioner continued to act as solicitor. Some part of the bankrupt's estate was sold by the assignee to John Risdon, who had been the petitioning creditor, for 210*l.* 10s. for the payment of which sum the assignee took four bills of exchange at six, eight, ten, and twelve months respectively. The first of these bills was dishonoured, the second was paid, and the other two were dishonoured; and on the 16th of April, 1831, John Risdon became bankrupt. Mr. Serjt. Goulburn having held that the assignee was responsible for the debt due from Risdon, on the 27th of May, 1844, an order was made for the payment of the sum to the official assignee. The petitioner then presented his bill of costs, which was taxed at 88*l.* 19s. 1d. To the payment of this bill an objection was raised, as there was no item of the bill within six years, and that it was therefore barred by the Statute of Limitations. This objection Mr. Commissioner Bere held to be valid, and consequently this petition was presented.

Swanston and Bacon, for the petitioner, cited Ex parte Bryant (1 Mad. 49); and Higgins v. Scott (2 Barn. & Adol. 413).

Russell and Shapter, for the respondents, cited Hodgens v. Kelly (1 Hogan's Reports, 388), and Irving v. —— (2 Y. & Jerv. 70).

The CHIEF JUDGE.—The 14th section of the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, provides that all bills of costs of an attorney employed under any commission, for business done after the choice of assignees, shall be settled by the commissioners; and the same, so settled, shall be paid by the assignees to such attorney. This is a direction by an Act of Parliament as to the duty of the assignees; and if this is not performed, the solicitor has a right to come here and enforce the performance of that duty. Supposing that I am at liberty to act on my own opinion, what are the merits of this case? It is impossible I can infer that a single shilling has been lost to this estate. The assignee has paid that which the commissioner has charged. What would have been the case if this state of things had not existed it is not necessary for me to say. The only sufferer by the delay in payment has been the solicitor, who, to use a colloquial expression, has been kept out of his money for so many years. A case may exist of such delay as that the Court might refuse to assist the solicitor. The delay, however, in this case has been explained to my satisfaction, and I do not think there is any imputation upon the solicitor. If any thing, it is, under the particular circumstances of the case, rather creditable to his views and feelings than otherwise. I consider that the Statute of Limitations does apply to a case of this description, whatever might have been the case if an action had been brought against the assignee. Unless, therefore, it is desired that this bill shall be further taxed, I shall order payment of it.

Declare that the estate is liable to pay the amount of the bill. Order payment of costs, without prejudice to any question of further taxation, out of the estate. Costs of the petitioner and respondents to be paid out of the estate.

Ex parte ROWE, re ROWE.

Choice of assignees—Trustees.

Where the bankrupt was one of five trustees, and had received and misapplied a portion of the trust money, and an order of the Court of Review was obtained by the other four trustees for liberty to go in under the fiat and tender a proof for the amount, this was held not to be such a debt as to entitle them to vote in the choice of assignees.

This was the petition of the bankrupt to set aside the choice of assignees, under the following circumstances. The fiat was dated the 7th of Oct. 1844, and the first meeting for the choice of assignees was appointed for the 23rd Oct. 1844. At that meeting a proof of a debt was tendered by the treasurer of a charity; this proof was refused by the commissioner, and the meeting was adjourned to the 22nd of the following month. It appeared that the bankrupt was one of five trustees, in whose names the sum of 2,000*l.* Consols was standing, and that he had received the dividends of that sum, but had neglected to invest or account for them. On the 20th of November, 1844, the other four trustees obtained an order of this Court for liberty to go in under the fiat, and tender and make such an amount of proof or proofs as they could establish, &c. Proof was accordingly tendered by these trustees for the two sums of 188*l.* 18s. 2d. and 120*l.* 7s. 8d. and the proof for the first sum was admitted. One of these trustees was then proposed as assignee, and as there was only one other debt of a smaller amount proved, he was chosen.

Anderdon, for the petitioner, argued that this was not a debt which would entitle these trustees to vote in the choice of assignees under the 61st section of 6 Geo. 4, c. 16. He cited Ex parte Shaw (1 Glyn. & Jam. 149).

Rolt, for the respondents, contended that this was a clear equitable debt, and that the order was only necessary to remove a technical difficulty. The debt did not originate in the order of the Court.

The CHIEF JUDGE.—Mr. Anderdon, my opinion is that this choice cannot stand. Quoad ultra I will hear you.

Anderdon, in reply.

The CHIEF JUDGE.—Upon the question whether the order of the 20th of Nov. 1844, is formally or informally expressed, I give no opinion. I am silent upon that subject. As I understand the law, the appointment of the creditors' assignees still rests on the 61st section of 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, which describes the persons entitled to vote as "creditors who have proved debts under the commission to the amount of 10*l.* and upwards." This might have led to a state of things in which no person could be assignee, as a bankrupt might have had only creditors who could prove by order of this Court. I apprehend, then, that the persons entitled to vote must be creditors. A mortgagee who comes here for an order to prove is always a creditor for the difference between the value of his security and his debt. Mr. Rolt argues that these are creditors. The bankrupt does not, however, cease to be a trustee by his bankruptcy, but until he is discharged he remains a trustee. I cannot, then, say that within the meaning of this section these persons are creditors of the bankrupt; and as no persons have voted but these, I must set aside this choice.

Declare, that these persons being the only persons who have voted in the choice, and they being, in the judgment of the Court, not entitled to vote, the choice cannot stand, and refer it to the Commissioner to make a new choice; these parties to be at liberty to attend the Commissioner upon the occasion of that choice, and to lay before him the affidavits now used. The petition in all other respects to stand over, with liberty to apply.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

ALTHOUGH the meeting of Parliament is so near there is not a rumour of legislation contemplated. It is positively asserted, in quarters likely to be well informed, that Sir JAMES GRAHAM abandons his Settlement Bill, and that the Medical Reform Bill will be materially modified to meet a sort of compromise to which the College of Surgeons has consented.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

THE Game Laws continue to attract attention among the two classes most affected by them. Many landlords have announced their intention of giving to their tenants the property in the game they feed. Poachers appear to be on the increase, and in divers parts of the country the gaols are crowded with them. We have already indicated the principles that should guide legislation upon this subject, which is expected to occupy the attention of Parliament during the coming session.

It will be seen by the advertisement that seven of the most important of the Forms in Bastardy, which have been prepared by Mr. SYMONS to meet the recent decisions, are now ready. We trust they will be found useful; every pains has been taken to avoid objections; but we shall be obliged by our readers informing us of any alterations that might make them more convenient for use, as the publisher will keep no more printed than are required to meet the current demands, so that amendment may be made without difficulty.

We have another request to prefer. It is that our readers will inform us what other of the forms it would be useful to print, for in these matters the experience of practical men is the best guide.

And will they do the same with Magistrates' Forms generally.

CHARGEABILITY.

THE following note has been sent to the Editor of the LAW TIMES on the subject of a letter from Mr. MARRIOTT, inserted last week.

SIR,—I have read Mr. Marriott's letter in your paper of the 18th inst. His plan of proving chargeability is incomplete, because the relieving officer can prove only the fact of relief, and cannot trace such relief to the particular parish complaining. I am at a loss to understand how the certificate, provided for by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 69, can "mislead" in any case, and should be glad to be enlightened.

Mr. Marriott's form of Bastardy Order is incorrect in alleging the application of the woman, after the birth of the child, to have been accompanied by a deposition on oath, which course would be illegal.

Your obedient servant,

Jan. 22, 1845. W. P. P.

We agree with W. P. P. The certificate is plain enough; but we are confident that it is erroneous to state a past and not a present chargeability. If other evidence be relied on, the facts of relief, with time and place, should be very distinctly stated. We have noticed the other very important point of W. P. P.'s communication elsewhere.

THE BASTARDY CLAUSES of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101.

ONE of the great defects of this new enactment is that which relates to the application before birth. The 3rd section, which provides for the hearing of the case at petty sessions, begins with these words: "And be it enacted, That AFTER the birth of such bastard child," &c. This overrides the whole of the subsequent provisions for obtaining and making the order. So that no hearing can take place before birth; but the application may be made either before or after birth; and the proceedings after application are all framed without reference to applications before birth. The woman may apply during any period of her pregnancy; but the petty sessions at which the case is to be heard, according to sec. 4, must take place "within the space of forty days of the service of the summons after the birth." Now, by the second clause of sec. 2, the justice, upon the application of the mother, is ordered "thereupon" to issue the summons.

Therefore, it seems to have been the intention of the legislature that no time should elapse between application and summons, and only forty days before the order is made. Now let us see how this affects pregnant women. If they apply more than forty days before their confinement, and the summons be thereupon served, the case cannot be heard at all, for the child will not have been born according to the requirements of section 4. If she applies less than forty days before her confinement, there must be a somewhat nice calculation, in order that the mother may be able to apply before birth, be delivered, and sufficiently recovered to attend the petty sessions afterwards.

It almost comes, therefore, to this; that notwithstanding the latitude apparently given to pregnant women at all times to "apply," they can do so only for a few days prior to their confinement. This very case arose, we are informed, at Hereford. Mr. Pritchard and Mr. Gwillim, the attorneys concerned for the parties, agreed to write, for the information of the magistrates, to the Secretary of State, for information how far they were precluded by section 3 from having the appeal heard before the birth. Here is the reply :—

SIR,—I am directed by Secretary Sir James Graham to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th inst. requesting advice with reference to the construction of the 2nd and 3rd sections of the Act 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, in a case of bastardy; and I am to acquaint you, for the information of the magistrates, it appears to Sir James Graham that, before the birth of the child, as well as after, the magistrates are authorized to summon the man charged as the father.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
S. M. PHILLIPS.

This, of course, leaves the magistrates precisely as wise as they were before. No one doubts that the summons may be issued before the birth; but is the birth a condition precedent to the hearing of the case at petty sessions? It appears to be so; and we confess we see some advantage in rendering it so. The case could not be heard as satisfactorily before as after birth, for the exact period of the birth, which would not be ascertainable in the former case, might be a very material point in the inquiry.

We do not exactly see the object of applications before birth; but where they exist, and matters cannot be so arranged as to fall in with all the requirements of the Act, it may, perhaps, be the safest way to obtain the summons at any moderate time before the birth, and not to serve it till afterwards. The word "thereupon" in section 2, though its inference as to the intent is clear, can scarcely be so very rigidly applied as to be held to require immediate service, and it is from the service of the summons that the forty days run.

A correspondent calls attention to the fact that the mother is required only to make oath, on application, of the paternity of her child when pregnant, not when delivered. It is so; but why it is so we confess ourselves quite unable to fathom.

Another and a much more perplexing solecism is that of the omission of any mention in the whole of the first sections of what the man is to be summoned for. There is power enough given to summon him "to appear at a petty session," but none whatever to summon him for any stated purpose. It would be absurd to issue a summons without some mention of the matter he was summoned to answer; but, though absurd, it would be perfectly legal.

We could name other flaws in the Act. We hear already of an amendment of this "further amendment." It is certainly required. The puzzle will be in a title: "Further further Amendment," &c. will not read nicely. We suggest the adoption of the style of the reigns: —"Poor Law Amendment the Sixth," or as the case may be. This removes all difficulty in entitling future experiments.

J. C. S.

EVIDENCE ON APPEALS AGAINST ORDERS IN BASTARDY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I observe in your last publication an article under the initials "J. C. S." with reference to the admissibility of the evidence of the mother on the trial of appeals against orders in bastardy, in which the writer regards the report, that Mr. Archbold entertains an opinion against the admissibility of the evidence, as a mistake.

Such is not the fact; as that gentleman expressed his opinion in the court where the point arose, and in addition stated that the very point was noticed in a work of his then in the press.

I have thought it right to trouble you with this communication, in order that there may be no mistake as to the correctness of the remarks contained in my letter in the LAW TIMES of the 11th inst.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
WM. F. CLARK.

Bewdley, Jan. 21, 1845.

[Independently of the grounds we gave last week why the mother's evidence is receivable, it is so ex necessitate rei, and so Mr. Archbold will find.]

We readily insert the following letter. We certainly understood the Report to object to the provision limiting the appointment to attorneys, and not merely to the adjunct of "the five years' standing," and the arguments seemed to apply more to the former than the latter. We are very glad, however, that no such objection is entertained by the Society, and we hasten to apprise our readers of the mistake :—

JUSTICES' CLERKS' SOCIETY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Admiring as I do the ability, zeal, and independence with which your paper is conducted, I regret being obliged, as a member of the managing committee of this society, and as chairman of the special general meeting of the members, held on the 15th inst. to call to your notice an extraordinary error into which you have inadvertently fallen with reference to the report lately presented by the committee to the general body, and contained in the leading article on this subject in your paper of the 18th inst. under the head "Magistrates' Clerks Bill."

After speaking in favourable terms of the Report, you say, "We have noted but one portion of the commentary as exceptionable; it is the objection taken to the provision of the Bill that confines the choice of future magistrates' clerks to attorneys."

This inaccuracy I, as one of the committee, should not have noticed (because the report on a perusal of it will speak for itself), had it not been followed by some rather severe (and I may add, most unmerited) strictures, imputing unworthy motives to the committee.

You will find, on a re-perusal of the Report, that the only objection offered by the committee to the 5th section of the Bill, was to that portion of it limiting the appointment to attornies of five years' standing: this the committee considered "too stringent," for the reasons fully set forth in the Report; thereby evincing their desire to open the door and extend the provisions of the Bill to the junior branches of the Profession. But upon looking to the language of the Report, as to the security afforded by the examination of professional men, previously to admission, it will be seen at once that the committee never thought for a moment of recommending the introduction of non-professional gentlemen to so important and responsible an office as that contemplated by the Bill.

From the readiness with which you have on former occasions made the amende honorable, I trust to your doing the committee (and through them the society at large, who have unanimously adopted their report) that justice which I feel they are entitled to, after so severe a reproof in so influential an organ of the Profession as the LAW TIMES.—I am, Sir, your very obedient servant,
J. G. SHEPHERD.

FOREIGN-OFFICE, JAN. 15.—The Queen has been pleased to approve of Mr. James Thomson, as Consul at Gibraltar for the Free Hanseatic cities of Hamburgh and Lubeck.

The Queen has also been pleased to approve of Mr. John Fergusson as Consul at Belfast for the republic of Venezuela.

PAROCHIAL SETTLEMENTS.—The Government measure to consolidate and amend the laws relating to parochial settlement, and to the removal of the poor, which has been printed for consideration during the present recess, contains 38 sections and one schedule. The object of the bill is to repeal so much of former acts as relates to settlements in parishes, and to the removal of the poor, whether English, Scotch, or Irish, or of the Isles of Man, Scilly, Jersey, or Guernsey. It is proposed by the bill that settlements which before the act had been ascertained by warrants of removal or by admissions in writing are to be retained, but warrants of removal made before the passing of the present bill may be appealed against, as if the act had not been passed. There are other settlements declared, namely, birth settlement, or father's settlement, or mother's settlement. Children born in union workhouses to be settled where their mothers are chargeable; children born in hospitals, prisons, or while their mothers are under orders of removal, are not to have a birth settlement, but to take their parents' settlement. With respect to persons chargeable on parishes, it is declared that unsettled persons are to be relieved at the charge of the parish where they are destitute, as if they were settled there, until they are lawfully removed, or their destitution there is lawfully at an end. Under the head of removal, it is declared that persons chargeable to a parish in which they are not settled, are liable to be removed to the parishes of their settlements, with a salvo for married women and others. Married women are not to be removed from their husbands. Legitimate children are not to be removed from their father's parish, nor legitimate and bastard children from their mother's. Widows and their families are not to be removed for a year after the husband's death. Widows are not to be removed from the place of their husband's settlement and death. Persons chargeable through sickness are not to be removed until recovered 40 days, and labourers and others, who have maintained themselves by their labour in the place for five years are not to be removeable. There are other provisions with respect to appeals, the maintenance of paupers under warrants of removal, the removal of poor persons born in Ireland and other places. Guardians are to be invested with powers for removal, and the act, which is to be limited to England and Wales, is to be construed as one with the Poor Law Amendment Acts.

THE INEFFICACY OF THE GALLOWS.—Mary Gallop has been hanged, and Mary Sheming, for aught that appears to the contrary, will be hanged; and two men have been hanged at Liverpool; and two men are to be hanged at Ipswich. Human beings have died for crime, and are about to die for crime: the dead speak with certainty the consequences of crime, the living with still more oppressive uncertainty the risks which criminals incur. And yet crime is not abated.

Look at the week's annals of crime under the head of murder alone—that offence which so many averse to death-punishment in all other cases would still visit by the infliction of death.

The poisoning of a woman at Salt-hill, for which an ex-member of the Society of Friends has been committed on suspicion, occupies a large space in the papers of the week. In addition to this case, the papers of Monday contained an "attempted murder of a wife by her husband;" those of Tuesday, "the Yarmouth murder," and "the suspected murder at Twig Folly;" those of Wednesday, a "murderous assault and highway robbery" near Liverpool, and "revelations concerning a murder committed eight years ago, near Ruislip in Middlesex;" those of Thursday, "an alleged attempt to poison a wife and family," and "the Croom poaching and murder." The newspapers of the week read like a reprint of "God's revenge against murder."

Faster than the condemned criminals can be turned off, candidates for the vacant halter press forward. Irregular volunteer deeds of death multiply faster than those of the hangman: murder by Act of Parliament has no chance against the active rivalry of the illicit dealer. Every class of society contributes its recruits to the trade of murder: it is carried on briskly everywhere. The grave starched sectarian, with a scientific education, and the poaching clown rude and untaught as the savage of the backwoods, are equally adepts in it: the highway and the domestic hearth afford equally fitting fields for its exercise. In vain the gibbet rears its black form to deter the murderers: its presence appears only to awaken in them a spirit of defiance and emulation.

"Experience teaches fools," says the proverb; then legislators must be more unteachable than fools, for the experience of this week differs in no respect from the experience of all other weeks. Surely it is time that they should desist from the miserable rivalry of saying to the murderer "we too can extinguish life," and try to devise some really effective means of deterring him from crime, or of alluring him.—Spectator.

CORONERSHIP FOR THE COUNTY OF BERKS.—In consequence of the death of James May, esq., who expired at his residence, at Reading, on Tuesday last, a vacancy has been occasioned in the coronership for that division of the county. Although the emoluments of the office have not exceeded 150*l.* per annum during the last 10 years, there are no less than seven candidates for the vacant appointment in the field, independently of several others who are expected to announce themselves early in the week. Considerable interest, as to the result of the election, has been created in consequence of Mr. A. G. Field, surgeon, of Reading, having addressed the freeholders, and solicited their votes at the election, which will take place in a few days at Abingdon. The other candidates who have announced their intention of coming forward to fill the ancient office of coroner are the following gentlemen, the whole of whom are highly respectable solicitors, of extensive practice and connections:—Mr. R. Clarke, Mr. J. Richards, jun. Mr. J. Whatley, and Mr. T. Lovegrove, Reading; Mr. C. Cave, Bracknell; and Mr. C. Cooper, Maidenhead. At the last contested election for the coronership of Berks, now about 20 years since, upwards of 4000*l.* were expended by the two candidates, Messrs. Nash and Deadman. From the situation of Abingdon many freeholders will have to travel a distance of upwards of 30 miles to record their votes.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

The legal event of the week is the resignation of Mr. Baron GURNEY, and the elevation to the Bench of Mr. PLATT. It is rumoured in Westminster Hall, that there is to be some shifting of seats among the judicial corps. It is said that Mr. Justice ERLE will be transferred to the Queen's Bench, Mr. Justice PATTESON to the Exchequer, and that the new Judge will take the Common Pleas. The objects of this movement are not very intelligible.

As yet the Term has been singularly unproductive of cases interesting to the Lawyer; but there are many judgments suspended of great importance, the reports of which will doubtless claim a large portion of our columns after the Term has ended.

COURT PAPERS.

TRANSFER OF CHANCERY CAUSES.

The Lord Chancellor has directed that the following causes, which have been transferred from the Master of the Rolls' book to that of the Lord Chancellor, should be placed in the paper of his Honour the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce:—

Wynn v. Haveningham	Barton v. Chambers
Fernyhough v. Grinders	Gosling v. Carter
Rogers v. Vasey	Johnson v. North
Hammet v. Ledsam	Agers v. Nicholson
Collins v. Reece	Weakley v. Bunn
Montresor v. Montresor	Lloyd v. Jenkins
Watson v. Parker	Harrison v. Ruston
Johnson v. Rowland	Sabine v. Williams.
Lewis v. Lewis

Notice.—His Honour the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce will proceed on the above causes on Saturday, the 25th inst.

Exchequer Chamber, Tuesday.

WRITS OF ERROR.

The judges assembled this morning in the Exchequer Chamber, in pursuance with the custom of the Court, for the purpose of fixing the days upon which the Court would sit "in error" after the present term.

The Court intimated that they would take the "errors" from the Court of Queen's Bench on Feb. 1st and 2nd; those from the Court of Common Pleas on the 4th and 5th; and those from the Court of Exchequer on the 6th and 7th.

There are from the Court of Queen's Bench four cases "in error," for judgment and argument; from the Court of Common Pleas one case for judgment (but a second day is appointed lest any other cases should arise); and from the Court of Exchequer six cases for judgment.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Hilary Term.—Eighth Victoria.

January 23, 1845.

This Court will, on Saturday, the 1st, and on Monday, the 3rd, Tuesday, the 4th, Wednesday, the 5th, and Saturday, the 8th days of February next, and also on Monday, the 10th day of February next, and the two next following days, hold sittings, and will proceed in disposing of the business in the Crown, Special, and New Trial Papers, and giving judgment in cases then pending; a selection will be made from the special paper, and notice given.

BY THE COURT.

ADMISSION OF SOLICITORS.

NOTICE.

The Master of the Rolls has appointed Tuesday the 28th of January instant, at half after three in the afternoon, at the Rolls Court, Cancery Lane, for swearing in solicitors.

Every person desirous of being sworn, on the above day, must leave his Common Law Admission at the Secretary's Office, Rolls Yard Chancery Lane, on or before Monday the 27th January instant, at three o'clock.

Secretary's Office, Rolls,

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE POOR KNIGHTS OF WINDSOR.

A very important document connected with the endowment of this ancient order has recently been discovered among the archives of the Court of Wards and Liveries, which promises to become the subject of legal controversy, involving, as it does, the right of the Poor Knights of Windsor to the distribution among them of a large and hitherto unappropriated income. The document in question is a verified copy (signed by Cecil, Lord Burleigh) of the charter, under the sign manual of Queen Elizabeth, instituting the above order, and bears date the 20th of August, 1559. The following is extracted from the indenture prefixed thereto:—"And whereas divers manors, lands, tenements, and hereditaments mentioned and contained in the schedule hereunto annexed, of the clear yearly value of 600*l*. and above, are given and assigned unto the dean and canons of Windsor, and their successors, to and for the intent and purpose that all and singular the premises, the revenue, and profits of the same shall for ever be employed and bestowed in the maintenance and support of thirteen poor knights within our Castle of Windsor, in such manner and form as in a book hereunto annexed, and signed with our sign manual, is set forth and declared." Following this is a covenant, on the part of the dean and canons, "to employ the rents, revenues, and profits of the same, in such manner and form as is therein set forth and appointed." The charter then goes on to state that the annual sum of 231*l*. 6s. 8d. shall be applied out of the same towards paying the vicar's and serving priest's wages, officers' fees, and in the repairing of the lands. The book annexed to the indenture contains a description of the services to be performed, a schedule of the lands, and an account of the privileges to be enjoyed by the knights.

The present value of the endowment is upwards of 11,000*l*. per annum, although the stipend hitherto paid to the knights has never exceeded 40*l*. a year. Until the discovery of this interesting and valuable relic, which appears to confirm the right of the knights to the full appropriation of the endowment of their order, it was concluded that the charter of Elizabeth, and all copies thereof, were in the possession of the dean and canons of Windsor, and no access thereto has ever been permitted to the knights.

The opinion of counsel has been taken upon the subject, which is stated to be favourable to the knights, and proceedings will be immediately instituted to recover their rights.

The schedule of the lands is interesting, as shewing their value in the time of Elizabeth. The following are some of the principal extracts from the charter, with the annual rentals annexed:—

"Cornwall—St. German's Parsonage, 48*l*.; Plympton St. Mary's, 46*l*.; Plumstock Chapel, 41*l*.; Bradwynck Rectory, 36*l*.; Wimbum Chapel, 30*l*.

"Devonshire—Iple Penn Rectory, 30*l*.; Southmoulton Rectory, 45*l*.; Ottery St. Mary's, 37*l*.; Islington, 16*l*.

"Wiltshire—Ambroseshire Parsonage, 23*l*. 13s. 4d.; Prebend Tithes of Bedwynde, 56*l*.; Stapelford Parsonage, 18*l*.

"Carmarthen—Abbergwille Rectory, 20*l*.

"Brecknock—Talgarthen and Mawe, 35*l*.

"Middlesex — Isleworth and Twickenham, 26*l*. 13s. 4d.

"London—Blossoms Inn, 16*l*.

&c. &c. forming a total of 661*l*. 6s. 8d.

The copy of the charter is deposited in the Record-office, and remains in an excellent state of preservation. It is engrossed on vellum, and amongst other attractions, not forgetting the autograph of the celebrated Cecil, is a likeness of the royal founder of the order of the Poor Knights, which is ascribed to Holbein.

WHITEHALL, Jan. 17.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed Samuel Richard Parr Shilton, of Nottingham, Gent., and Edmund Thomas, of the city of Worcester, Gent., to be Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

WHITEHALL, JAN. 23.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed William Smith, jun. of Sheffield, in the county of York, Gent. to be a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

WHITEHALL, JAN. 7.—The Right Honourable Sir Nicholas Conyngham Tindal, Knt., has appointed Lawrence Smith, of Hurstperpoint, in the county of Sussex, Gent., to be one of the perpetual commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women, in and for the county of Sussex.

The Right Honourable Sir Nicholas Conyngham Tindal, Knt., has appointed James Whitham, of Wakefield, in the county of York, Gent., to be one of the perpetual commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women, in and for the West Riding of the county of York.

The Right Honourable Sir Nicholas Conyngham Tindal, Knt., has appointed Henry Powell, of Pocklington, attorney-at-law, one of the perpetual commissioners for taking the acknowledgment of deeds by married women, in and for the East Riding of the county of York.

The Right Honourable Sir Nicholas Conyngham Tindal, Knt., has appointed W. C. Turner, of Otley, in the county of York, Gent., to be one of the perpetual commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women.

The Right Honourable Sir Nicholas Conyngham Tindal, Knt., has appointed Mr. Jacob Phillips, of Chippenham, in the county of Wilts, solicitor, to be one of the perpetual commissioners for taking the acknowledgment of deeds to be executed by married women, in and for the county of Wilts.

MR. BARON GURNEY.—We are enabled to state, upon authority, that this learned Judge, who has been labouring under severe indisposition at Brighton, is rapidly recovering from the severity of the attack. He will not, however, resume his seat on the bench during the present Term, but it is fully expected that he will be enabled to proceed upon the Midland Circuit at the ensuing spring assizes, which commence at the latter end of February.

MR. BARON GURNEY.—The following appeared yesterday in the evening organ of the Treasury:—"Mr. Baron Gurney, in consequence of continued ill-health and increasing weakness, has sent to the Lord Chancellor his resignation of the high office of one of the Barons of the Exchequer, which the learned Baron had filled for some years with great ability and satisfaction to the bar and the public. The general opinion in Westminster-hall is, that Mr. Platt, Queen's counsel, will succeed to the vacant seat on the Exchequer Bench, but, of course, no arrangement has at present been made."

INDISPOSITION OF MR. COMMISSIONER BULLOCK.—Yesterday information was received at the Sheriffs' Court office of the severe indisposition of Mr. Commissioner Bullock, the judge of the Sheriffs' Court. In consequence, the trials appointed to have taken place this day (Thursday) are postponed until the next court day, in February.

THE VACANT COMMISSIONERSHIP IN BANKRUPTCY.—Rumour gives the appointment to Mr. Serjeant Atcherley, who has several times gone the circuit for Judges, or to Mr. Whateley, the Queen's Counsel; but report adds, that some of the country commissioners have promises of being advanced to London as vacancies might occur.

CALLS TO THE BAR, MIDDLE TEMPLE.—On Friday, the 17th inst. the undermentioned gentlemen were called to the degree of barrister-at-law by the benchers of this honourable society; and on Saturday last the customary oaths were administered to them in the dining-hall:—Mr. John Pulman, the eldest son of Thomas Pulman, late of Sainford Brett, in the county of Somerset, esq.; Mr. William Crofts, the eldest son of the late Rev. William Crofts, D.D. vicar of North Grimston, in the county of York; Mr. Richard Paternoster, the youngest son of John Paternoster, of Norfolk-street, Strand, London, esq.; Mr. Sidney Milnes Hawkes, B.L. the second son of Robert Hawkes, of Bishop's Stortford, in the county of Hertford, esq.

ADMISSION OF SOLICITORS.—The appointment of examiners of persons applying to be admitted solicitors of the High Court of Chancery has been made by an order of the Right Hon. the Master of the Rolls, which order is preceded by the recital of that of the 13th of January, 1844, whereby it was (amongst other things) ordered—"That every person who had not previously been admitted an attorney of the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, or one of them, should, before he be admitted to take the oath required by the statute 6 and 7 Victoria, cap. 73, to be taken by persons applying to act as solicitors of the High Court of Chancery, undergo an examination touching his fitness to act as a solicitor of the said Court of Chancery. And that twelve solicitors of the same court, to be appointed by the Master of the Rolls in each year, be examiners, for the purpose of examining and inquiring touching the fitness and capacity of every such applicant for admission as a solicitor, and that any five of the said examiners should be competent to conduct the examination of such application." In furtherance of the above, the Right Hon the Master of the Rolls has ordered and appointed "that Samuel Amory, Benjamin Austin, Michael Clayton, W. L. Farrer, Richard Harrison, Bryan Holmes, Robert Wheatley Lumley, Edward Rowland Pickering, Charles Ranken, Charles Shadwell, William Tooke and Edward Archer Wilde, solicitors, be examiners, until the 31st of December, 1845, to examine every person (not having been previously admitted an attorney of the Courts of Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, or one of them) who shall apply to be admitted a solicitor of the said Court of Chancery, touching his fitness and capacity to act as a solicitor of the said Court: and the Master of the Rolls doth direct that the said examiners shall conduct the examination of every such applicant as aforesaid, and to the extent pointed out by the said order of the 13th day of January, 1844, and the regulations approved by his Lordship in reference thereto, and to no other manner, and to no further extent."—Signed, Langdale, M.R.

ABOLITION OF IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.—The ninth report of the Inspectors of Prisons, comprising the northern and eastern district of England, has been issued, from which it appears that the total number of prisoners discharged under the act abolishing imprisonment for debts not exceeding 20*l*. (7 & 8 Victoria, c. 96) was in the district mentioned 386, and that the number of debtors in custody on the 1st of November last, in the various prisons in the same district, was only 190. The inspector (Mr. Williams) in his report states, "that a very considerable portion of the plaints in the small debt courts are for public-house scores, transactions with tally-men, some few for rent and for small articles for domestic consumption. In the two first items, any abridgement of credit must be a positive benefit, and enable the parties better to meet the demands of the two last. Although the observations here offered have reference chiefly to the condition of debtors when in prison, yet, from its intimate connexion with the subject, I thought it might not be improper to extend my inquiries to the working of the new act while on my recent tour of inspection in the provinces, and from the information thus procured, I am satisfied that no further restriction in the granting of credit to the humbler classes may be apprehended beyond the withdrawal of temptations to incur debts which honest prudence would never have held out to them, and that independent of its rescuing a number of the people from the pollution of a debtors' gaol, it will make the small master more scrupulously exact in the payment of weekly wages; will tend by money payments to lessen the prices of the necessaries of life to those most in want of them; and that although it may abridge the profits of the publican and tally-man, it will afford protection to the honest tradesman by its increasing lien upon all accruing property in satisfaction of debt, and will deter the fraudulent by the wholesome severity of its penal clauses."

We understand Sir Robert Peel has recommended for the appointment of Queen's Proctor, Francis Hart Dyke, Esq. a son of Sir Percival Hart Dyke, Bart. a gentleman of twenty years experience, and extensive practice in the profession.

Ancient Document.—The extraordinary talent displayed in the caligraphy, as well as the emblazonment of ancient deeds, far exceeded any productions of the kind of the present day. A document of this description, which was laid on the table of the Society of Antiquaries, on Thursday, the 19th ult. (accompanying the reading of a paper from Thomas Lott, esq. F.S.A. upon the subject of some hitherto unnoticed architectural remains, of a monastic character, beneath the houses in Bees Church-yard), excited much interest. It was a grant by letters patent from King Henry the Eighth, with impressions of the great seal attached, of lands formerly belonging to one of the suppressed monasteries. This document was interesting, as being a grant by virtue of the royal commission to Queen Catherine (Parr) as Regent during Henry's last absence from the realm during the wars in France, and bearing date between the surrender of Boulogne to Henry (who had besieged it in person) and his return to England. In the illuminated margin of this deed is a beautifully executed painting in colours, being a portrait of the King, and from its resemblance to the heads on the coinage of the period, may probably be a good likeness of the absolute monarch. It certainly appears more like a human face than some of the portraits extant by Holbein and others. The engrossed portion of this deed was also beautifully executed; probably equal talent may exist in the present day, if called into requisition; but all modern deeds fall far short of this ancient specimen.

Railway Statistics.—Some statistical information respecting railways, equally curious and important, has been published by Mr. Hall, an eminent sharebroker, at Liverpool. It appears from Mr. Hall's statement, that the total amount expended in the construction of thirty of the oldest and most important railways in the kingdom, as shewn by their last reports, is 56,858,602*l.* Their market value on the 31st December 1844, was 67,639,106*l.* The excess of value over the cost of construction has been added to the national capital—property to that amount has been created; and that property is the means of diminishing the expenses and increasing the comfort of the whole community. It is an unexceptionable warrant of the substantial character of railway property, that only two railways have fallen in value in the course of last year, while six have risen more than fifty per cent. One of these (the Newcastle and Darlington) has risen 490,000*l.*; the cost of construction being under 450,000*l.* The Great Western shews the enormous rise in value of 2,145,000*l.* within the year.

Will of Her late Royal Highness the Princess Sophia Matilda, dated 29th July, 1843, was proved on Wednesday last by the executors, the Honourable and Rev. Henry Legge, vicar of Lewisham, Kent, George Bankes, of East Sheen, Surrey, esq. the Right Honourable Lady Alicia Gordon, the Lady of the Bedchamber to her late Royal Highness, and Miss Charlotte Cotes, the Woman of the Bedchamber. To the two former she leaves 100 guineas, and to the two latter, 1,000 guineas. By various codicils (fourteen in number) she disposes of numerous pictures and paintings (being presents to her Royal Highness's family) to several distinguished branches of the family of her Royal Highness and her friends. She bequeaths to her Majesty the portrait of her father the late Duke of Gloucester; to the Queen Dowager and Prince Albert, portraits of other members of the Royal Family; to the National Gallery and Trinity College, Cambridge, valuable pictures; and appoints the Honourable Captain William Waldegrave, R.N, (uncle of the Earl of Waldegrave, see 'Historical Register,' No. 1), residuary legatee. The will and codicils are of some length, and contain many bequests. Leaves annuities and legacies to all her servants. Effects sworn under 25,000*l.*—Historical Register.

Will of the late Lady Mary Hill.—Special letters of administration with the will, and two codicils thereto annexed, of Lady Hill (wife of Sir Dudley St. Leger Hill) of Turnwood in the county of Dorset, have just been granted by the Perogative Court of Canterbury, to John Walker and Percival North Bastard, esqrs. the executors, with the consent of Sir Dudley. The will is dated 28th September, 1844, and is of some length, reciting marriage settlements, and describing her separate property. She leaves to Sir Dudley 1000*l.* a year for his life. The freehold estates she devises as follows:—Her estate at Turnwood, to Edward Protheroe, esq. who in future is to use her late husband's name of Davis, before or after his own, and to quarter the arms of Davis with those of his family, and to obtain a licence for that purpose, to be duly registered in the College of Heralds; Mr. Protheroe to allow out of the estate 400*l.* a year to Sir Dudley. Her estate at Shorehampton, she devises to Laura Protheroe. Her estate at Bristol to John Walker, esq. one of her executors.] Several legacies of large amounts, varying from 1,000*l.* to 2,000*l.* she leaves to her relations and acquaintance, and legacies of smaller amount to others of 100*l.* 200*l.* and 300*l.* She particularly desires her executors to continue to pay the annuities to such of the old servants named in the will and codicils of her late husband, Mark Davis, Esq. as shall be living, during their lives. The residue of her real and personal estate (not disposed of by her will and codicils), including money, rents, carriages, horses, cattle, furniture, and every other description of property, she gives to her executors for their own use. By a codicil, executed the same day as her will, she has remembered those charitable institutions in her own and adjoining counties, to which she had so liberally subscribed in her life-time by leaving to the treasurers the following legacies: — To the Dorset County Hospital, 800*l.* To the Bristol Infirmary, 500*l.* To the Bristol Blind Asylum, 200*l.* To the Salisbury Infirmary, 200*l.* Her ladyship has very handsomely provided for her old and faithful servants by bequeathing to them the following annuities for their lives:—To her butler, 100*l.* a year; to her gardener, 40*l.* a year; to her housemaid, 30*l.* a year; to her cook, 20*l.* a year; to another servant she gives a legacy of 100*l.* and to a labourer on her estate, 30*l.* By the other codicil, made a few days after her will, she disposes of some jewellery and trinkets, and gives pecuniary legacies of various amounts to personal friends. Her ladyship's personal estate is sworn under 90,000*l.*—Ibid.

Munificent Bequests.—Mr. James Waterhouse Smith, who died at his house in the Regent's-park on the 5th inst. has by his will bequeathed the following sums in the Three per Cent. Consols to the undermentioned charities:—To the British and Foreign Bible Society, 2,000*l.*; to the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, 2,000*l.*; to the Metropolis Church Building Fund, 2,000*l.*; to the Middlesex Hospital, 2,000*l.*; to the National Society for Promoting the Education of the Poor in the Principles of the Established Church, 1,000*l.*; to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, 2,000*l.*; and has directed the whole to be paid, free of duty, within three months after his decease.

Dr. Cotgrave, who recently died at his residence, Greg's-green, near Henley-on-Thames, has left 2,000*l.* to the Chester Infirmary, 1,000*l.* to the Westminster Hospital, and 500*l.* to the Berkshire Hospital. The deceased was surgeon to her Majesty's forces, and served thirty years in the 35th regiment, and accompanied that fine corps to Holland, Malta, Calabria, and Egypt.—Historical Register.

Iltid Nicholl, Esq. her Majesty's Procurator-General.—The executors under the will of this gentleman have just obtained probate in Doctors' Commons. The amount of effects have been sworn under 160,000*l.* He had held the office of Proctor to the Crown for a period of thirty years. (The appointment is still vacant.)

IRISH LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

Dublin, Wednesday evening, Jan. 23.

JUDGES' COUNCIL CHAMBER.

IMPORTANT MEETING.

A meeting of the Benchers of the Hon. Society of King's Inns was held yesterday at one o'clock, in the Judges' Council Chamber, Four Courts, for the purpose of investigating, at his own request, certain charges made against James Josiah Hardy, barrister-at-law, relating to the fabrication of various documents in the cause of Foster v. Gould, at present pending in the Court of Chancery. The attendance of benchers was very large, and included the Right Hon. the Lord Chancellor, the Right Hon. the Master of the Rolls, the Right Hon. the Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench, the Right Hon. the Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, the Right Hon. the Lord Chief Baron, the Hon. Mr. Justice Burton, the Hon. Baron Pennefather, the Right Hon. Baron Richards, the Hon. Baron Lefroy, the Hon. Mr. Justice Ball, the Hon. Mr. Justice Jackson, the Right Hon. Judge Keatinge, Mr. Commissioner Macan, Mr. Commissioner Farrell, Mr. Commissioner Plunkett, the Right Hon. D. R. Pigot, Q.C.; Master Henn, Master Townsend, Master Goold, Sir T. Staples, bart. Q.C.; the Solicitor-General; Dr. Stock, Q.C.; A. Lyle, Chief Remembrancer; Mr. Brooke, Q.C.; Serjeant Warren, Mr. Richard Moore, Q. C.; Mr. Henn, Q.C.; Mr. Bennett, Q.C.; Mr. Holmes, and Mr. Gilmore, Q.C. They were, in fact, all present, with the exception of the Right. Hon. Mr. Justice Perrin, and the Hon. Mr. Justice Crampton, who were engaged hearing law arguments in the Court of Queen's Bench; the Right Hon. the Recorder, who was presiding in his own court; Hon. Mr. Justice Torrens, Sir Henry Meredyth, bart.; Master Litton, and the Attorney-General.

Mr. Hardy was sent for as soon as their lordships met, and entered the chamber, accompanied by his counsel, Mr. Whiteside, Q. C. and Mr. L. Smith, from which the public were excluded. There was also an order made against the admission of the press, which prevents the possibility of laying the particulars of the charges, or the defence made to them, before your readers.

We understand that the several charges having been read in the usual manner upon such occasions, Mr. Whiteside was heard upon behalf of Mr. Hardy, for upwards of four hours, until past five o'clock, when their lordships adjourned until Tuesday next, at one o'clock.

The Magistracy.—The Lord Lieutenant has appointed Thomas Bailey, esq. J.P. of Mulladuff, county Fermanagh, a stipendiary magistrate, to fill the vacancy created by the promotion of Major Priestley, who has been appointed Deputy Inspector general of Constabulary, in room of Major Galway, deceased.

Joseph Tabiteau, esq. R.M. has been appointed superintending magistrate in Tipperary, in the room of E. J. Priestley, Esq.

John Smyth, esq. White Park, Ballyclare, has been appointed magistrate for the county Antrim.

Dawson French, esq. of Tullamore, has been appointed a magistrate of the King's County.

Spring Assizes, 1845.—The following are the circuits which the judges have selected to go at the next assizes:—

Leinster Circuit—The Right Hon. the Lord Chief Justice, the Right Hon. Baron Lefroy.

North-East—The Hon. Judge Torrens, the Hon. Judge Crampton.

Home—The Right Hon. the Lord Chief Baron, the Hon. Judge Burton.

Connaught—The Right Hon. Judge Perrin, the Right Hon. Baron Richards.

Munster—The Right Hon. Judge Ball, the Hon. Judge Jackson.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

METROPOLITAN AND PROVINCIAL LEGAL ASSOCIATION.

PETITION AGAINST THE CERTIFICATE DUTY.

To the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled:

The humble Petition of the undersigned Attorneys and Solicitors practising in England and Wales,

Sheweth,

That, by an Act of Parliament passed in the 55th year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Third, c. 184, the following Annual Duties were imposed upon every Attorney, Solicitor, and Proctor:—

On those practising within the limits of the two-penny post, who have been admitted for three years or upwards	£12
On those not admitted so long	6
On those residing elsewhere who have been admitted three years	8
On those not admitted so long	4

That by the same Act a Stamp Duty of 120*l.* is also charged upon all Articles of Clerkship to an Attorney, Solicitor, or Proctor, and a further duty of 25*l.* upon his admission, and which, with the fees paid the officers of the different courts thereon, amounts in the whole to the sum of 150*l.*

That the duty on Articles of Clerkship and Admissions affords of itself a large revenue, which, with the Certificate duty, is exclusively levied on your petitioners, no other profession, nor even the higher branch of your petitioners' profession, being burthened with a similar tax.

That the duties on Articles of Clerkship, on [illegible] rage of the ten years ending July 1835, since which time no return has been made, amounted annually to £60,950 and on Admissions to 8,330

That your petitioners do not complain of the duty on Articles of Clerkship, because it tends in their judgment to maintain the respectability of the profession, but the Certificate Duty was imposed by the Parliament of 1785, as a War Tax, objectionable in principle, but rendered necessary by the exigencies of the times; that it was not even proposed by the minister of the day, but was a suggestion of an individual member of Parliament, to relieve the Government from the unpopularity of imposing a tax upon shopkeepers and servants.

That its amount, then fixed at 5*l.* has been more than doubled by the first-mentioned Act of Parliament.

That your petitioners' profession is the only profession or trade in which an individual is restrained by law from estimating the value of his own time and services.

That the Certificate duty was originally imposed, and subsequently increased, on the assumption that the profits of a professional man were sufficiently ample to justify the imposition of a personal and extraordinary tax; such principle of taxation is manifestly unsound, but if the fact were so, the alterations made in the practice of the law by successive Governments have now reduced the emoluments of an Attorney even below the limits of a fair remuneration for his services and responsibilities.

That your petitioners pay their equal share of all the taxes imposed on the community at large, and feel particularly that the Certificate duty peculiarly levied on their branch of the profession is not founded on any just principle, but is a personal and partial tax.

Your petitioners, therefore, most humbly pray your Honourable House that the annual Duty on Certificates of Attorneys, Solicitors, and Proctors, may be wholly repealed.

And your petitioners shall ever pray, &c.

METROPOLITAN AND PROVINCIAL LEGAL ASSOCIATION.

SIR,—I am directed by the Council of Inquiry and Direction of the Metropolitan and Provincial Legal Association to forward you the annexed Petition, and to beg that you will have the kindness to obtain as many signatures of Attorneys in your town, on the lined leaf, as you possibly can, their names being written on the left side of the line, and their addresses on the right, and return the same to me in the course of next week. The signatures will be joined to the foot of a copy of the Petition now sent, which is lying for signature in London.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
GEO. FITCH, Secretary.
15, New Bridge-street, Blackfriars, London,
16th Jan. 1845.

The objects of the Metropolitan and Provincial Legal Association are—

1. To promote and support the general interests of the profession.
2. To prosecute all unqualified persons who may usurp either the duties or privileges of the profession.
3. To originate and assist in obtaining all useful and practical reforms and amendments of the law.
4. To expose and punish all persons guilty of any acts of malpractice, whether they be Members of the Bar, Attorneys, or Solicitors.
5. To maintain the respectability of the profession by an honourable and liberal mode of practice.
6. To adopt measures for obtaining a co-operation with all Law Societies (Provincial or Local) having similar objects in view.

Every Attorney and Solicitor is admissible as a Member on payment of the Annual Subscription of One Guinea, subject to the approbation of the Council.

CORRESPONDENCE.

LEASE FOR A YEAR STAMP.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—It is universally admitted that the stamp-duty imposed on the old lease for a year, operates very cruelly upon small conveyancing transactions; but now that that instrument, both in form and effect, is totally abolished, the cruelty, absurdity, and injustice of continuing the stamp, are equally manifest; and if the subject were taken up by the different Law Societies, aided by your powerful influence, surely we may hope to have that trifling portion of the revenue made the subject of "repeal" in the ensuing session, particularly as there is good ground for believing that the Government will be able to effect a very considerable reduction in the general taxation of the country.

While on this subject I will take the liberty of adding a few words respecting the attorneys, "certificate" duty. In my humble judgment the Profession has not sufficient strength and influence in the House of Commons to procure a total repeal of that duty, and I think an endeavour to get it reduced one half, would be much more likely to be successful. As a body I fear we are quite unable to enlist public sympathy in our favour, and a cry of "class-legislation" will be powerfully raised against us. Moreover, if, as is pretty generally thought (though perhaps without any good reason), the tax upon incomes derived from trades and professions should happen to be discontinued, it is pretty certain that an application for a repeal of our certificate duty in the same session will not be listened to for one moment. At least such is the humble opinion of, yours obediently,

EDWARD ARGLES.

ASSIGNMENT OF ARTICLES OF CLERKSHIP.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—I beg, in reply to the question of E. L. inserted in your paper of the 11th inst. to state that my strong impression is, the assignment by B to C was wrong, the term created by the original articles having expired, and so there being in fact nothing to assign. (See ex parte Rowle, 2 Chitty's Rep. 61.) There should, I think, have been fresh articles of clerkship entered into, whereto A and C, not B and C, without A, as E. L. suggests, should have been parties.

If my view be correct, the course for A to pursue now is, to enter into new articles with C, or some other master, for five years, with a proviso to enable him at the expiration of half-a-year to apply for his admission as an attorney, and a covenant by B to suffer him afterwards to practise on his own account.

Thus would the law requiring a five years' service under a contract for five years, be satisfied; which it could not be by a service for four years and a half under such a contract, and a subsequent service of six months under an assignment of a residue, which, in fact, was at the time an actual nonentity.

The stamp duty on the old articles can be yet allowed, if A delivers them up at the Stamp-office within six months after the new articles are executed.

I am, &c.

CORPORATION OF GLOUCESTER v. WOOD.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In your report of this judgment in the LAW TIMES of yesterday, you close the judgment in these words, "If the plaintiffs refuse to accede to the terms proposed by the Court, their application must be refused with costs." The case before the Chancellor was an appeal from the order of the Vice-Chancellor, made by the Corporation, and their appeal was dismissed with costs, and the order of the Vice-Chancellor Wigram confirmed.

Yours, &c.,

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

"J. R." (Warrington) thus comments on the proposed alterations in the form of deeds:—

At a time when the new forms under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76, are subjected to much scrutiny and criticism, I trust the following few observations will not be considered irrelevant. The new, like the old precedents, contain one very glaring error, which has more than once been the subject of sarcastic ridicule. The error I allude to is the use of a nominative case and the total omission of a verb to agree with it at the commencement of a deed when recitals are introduced before the testatum. The old precedents began—"This indenture, made, &c. between, &c. whereas, &c.;" and in the new we say —"This deed, made, &c. between, &c. whereas, &c." This indenture, or this deed, does what? The only answer that can be given is, whereas, which is sheer nonsense, and for which even a schoolboy would be soundly thrashed, were he stupid enough to write it. It is surprising that lawyers should allow themselves to be taunted with so gross a violation of one of the very simplest rules of grammar, and still more surprising that they should continue to be guilty of it after having had their attention on many occasions called to it. When recitals are used before the testatum, why cannot deeds begin thus:—"This indenture," or "This deed, is made, &c.?" The introduction of the word is seems to me far more preferable than that of the indefinite article. The is may be inserted or omitted to suit circumstances; it may be inserted (and it ought to be) when recitals come before the testatum, as above; and it may be omitted when recitals are not so used. In the latter case, witnesseth becomes the verb to the nominative. "Deed made the day of , between," &c. (as suggested by your correspondent, John Forster, last week), or, "A deed made, &c." or, "A deed is made, &c." will not answer the purpose so well as "this" before deed or indenture. The sound only of any of the last three forms is quite enough; and more than that, if we used them we should but leave off one bad habit and acquire another. To be satisfied of this, we need only ask, What deed is made? or What deed witnesseth? and the answer is, a deed, and this, to my mind, appears to be simply nothing more than a bare assertion, or at most something in the shape of a recital. We must retain the old word, and say, "This deed is made," or, "This deed, made, &c. between, &c. witnesseth."

I shall feel obliged by your inserting this in your next, or when most convenient, as I have frequently wished to direct the attention of the Profession to the subject, and the preceding remarks may be of some service now that conveyancing precedents are undergoing revision.

LORD BROUGHAM'S ACT.

THE following paragraph appears in the daily papers:—

DECLINE OF BUSINESS IN THE INFERIOR LAW COURTS.—Since the passing of Lord Brougham's Act abolishing imprisonment for debt, there has been a very material decline of business in the Sheriffs' and Secondaries' Courts, plaintiffs not feeling very desirous to enter actions, when, if they obtain a verdict, they are not very likely to recover, after the heavy expenses they have been at in taking out writs. At the Secondaries' Court there are seldom more than two or three cases; at the last sitting there was not one case for trial, and at the Sheriffs' Court most of the trials are now undefended.

The decrease of lawsuits may, at first sight, appear to be a matter rather for congratulation than regret; and unreflecting persons might be inclined to thank Lord BROUGHAM for having cleared the small-debt courts of business. But how has this result been produced? By giving the litigant parties a more simple and less costly remedy? By enabling the honest creditor to recover his due from his dishonest debtor, without resorting to a judge and a jury? Far from it. The result has been reached by the process of depriving the creditor of all remedy, by an absolute denial of redress to the wronged, and by giving an indemnity to the dishonest. The courts are clear of suitors, because it is useless to obtain a judgment which cannot be enforced; litigation has decreased, because an appeal to the law has been rendered worthless; creditors do not sue, because Lord BROUGHAM has taken away from them their remedy—and they are compelled to submit to be robbed by any rascal who owes them less than 20*l.* because for robbery in this shape the law has provided no new punishment in lieu of that which the legislature so thoughtlessly abrogated.

If any proof were wanting, beyond the painful experience of every man who has a debtor, of the mischievous operation of Lord BROUGHAM'S Act, it is provided by the paragraph quoted above. Courts of justice have been by that cruel enactment rendered altogether nugatory. What a mockery is the machinery that labours to no result! Lord BROUGHAM should have added to his statute a clause for the abolition of all courts for the recovery of debts under 20*l.* Having made their judgments worthless, it would have been but fair to the public, by whom the expenses of courts of justice are borne, to dismiss their judges, close the rusty hinges of their doors, and convert their empty benches to some useful purpose.

POOR PRISONERS.

IT is always pleasant to us to be enabled, amid the severer duties of a professional publication, to find or make an opportunity for advancing the cause of humanity, and the very novelty of such themes, scattered here and there among the sober discussions of legal topics, make them, perhaps, more effective than when they appear where they are looked for almost as a matter of course.

In this manner has the LAW TIMES enjoyed, on several occasions, the satisfaction of directing the attention of its many readers to wrongs which the administration of the law unwittingly inflicts upon the poor and friendless, and still more of finding its appeals to the reason and right feeling of its readers promptly met by exertion on their parts to remove the evils complained of. And here let us perform a simple act of justice in declaring that there is not in this land of charity a more benevolent body of men than the lawyers, nor any who more distinguish themselves, not only by direct charity, but by active support of all institutions having for their object the relief of the woes or the amelioration of the condition of the poor, and in the exercise of their profession by the mildness with which they employ the power intrusted to them, the forbearance they exercise towards those whom they believe to be treating them with good faith, and the readiness with which they support every amelioration of the law that may tend to relieve the burdens of the poor or to speed the course of justice, however apparently disadvantageous may be the change to their personal interests. And in this estimate of the character of the Profession, as a body, we believe we shall have the cordial concurrence of all who take the trouble to note who are the men everywhere foremost to advocate the cause of humanity and justice.

We know, therefore, that when it has a real grievance to complain of the LAW TIMES never appeals in vain to the Profession, and we felt assured when, some months since, shocked at a sad case we had just beheld, we seized the pen and drew up a plea for the poor prisoner, that somewhere it would be heard and answered, and that it would be the means of providing redress for some and relieving a portion at least of the woes of a class who have more advocates than friends, about whom every body declaims in generals, while nobody descends to point out the particular evils and prescribe a cure for them.

Nor was our expectation disappointed. At the Leicestershire Quarter Sessions the subject has been mooted and discussed, and excited warm sympathy, and will no doubt lead to the devising of some practical measure by the magistracy. In the town of Leicester some benevolent persons have taken up the subject in another form, and founded a society to provide a refuge for poor prisoners acquitted. But the report of the proceedings in the county newspaper, and a letter of one of its correspondents, exhibit what has been done or is doing in that locality, and in hope that the examples there set may be followed in other parts of the country, and that the subject might attract the notice of some benevolent member of Parliament, who might provide a legislative remedy for a palpable mischief, we cite a portion of the report and letter, including the article that instigated both.

The Report of the Visiting Magistrates of the gaol having been produced, Mr. HODGSON, one of the Visiting Magistrates, read the following article from the LAW TIMES:—

"There is an evil that cries aloud for remedy.

"A prisoner is acquitted and discharged. If he have a home to return to, and friends to help him on the way, he suffers no other mischief than the anxiety of a trial, the imprisonment that precedes it, and the cost of his defence, and his family the loss of their little furniture, and their dinners for a few weeks.

"But if the prisoner, who has been prosecuted by the Crown, and pronounced "Not guilty" of the crime with which he has been charged, be unfortunate enough to have no home, no friends, he is, by our beneficent law, turned loose upon the world without a penny in his pocket, and no means of earning one, to starve or become in reality the criminal he was before only suspected to be.

"A striking illustration of this defect in the administration of criminal law has just occurred, and which suggested this commentary.

"A little boy, twelve years old, was tried at the Exeter Assizes on a charge of arson, and acquitted. The child was much agonized during the trial, and excited the interest of many of the spectators. Some of them addressed the gaoler, and hoped that the little fellow would be delivered to the care of his friends. It then appeared that he had no friends. He was an orphan, and had wandered from London in company with his fellow prisoner, who had been convicted of the crime with which they were jointly charged. He was obviously too young to earn a livelihood. How, then, was he, turned out penniless into the streets of Exeter, to find food even for the day? Still it was nobody's duty to see to this, there was no fund wherewith to help poor prisoners to the procuring of an honest livelihood. Another case was called on, that of the child was forgotten.

"Where he is now, God knows. The probability is, that to save himself from starving he has violated the law from whose grasp he has been so recently delivered. Who can wonder if the next assize sees him again at the bar—a criminal? The wonder will be, if he escape from his terrible temptation unstained and honest.

"What is this but manufacturing criminals! How melancholy this process of first making thieves, and then punishing them. What a mockery to command people to be honest, and then to throw them into situations in which honesty is almost impossible.

"Nor is the case we have narrated a singular one. At every assize and sessions it happens that prisoners are brought to the assize town from distant parts of the county, acquitted, discharged, and left to find their way back again as best they may. The consequences of this may be anticipated.

"Is it expedient that such a state of things should continue? But we go further, and ask if it be just? Should a man who has been wrongly accused, and upon that charge dragged to a distant part to take his trial, be thus treated? Has he not a fair claim upon his accuser, the public represented by the Crown, at least to return him to the place from whence it wrongly took him?

"It is worthy of note, that there is a fund from which the convicted criminal receives relief on his quitting the gaol, after the expiration of his sentence. It is only the innocent, or the man pronounced innocent, to whom aid is refused."

Mr. Hodgson then said, the subject thus introduced was an important one as related to those persons who had left the gaol. Formerly passes were issued, but they were never properly returned, and there was no encouragement felt for continuing that practice. It had also been spoken of by certain parties, and Mr. Bracebridge had brought before the Court the subject of establishing a refuge for prisoners.

The Chairman said, the refuge in Warwickshire was only intended for convicted juvenile offenders.

Mr. Hodgson said he mentioned the subject in order that the magistrates might give their best consideration to it.

A lengthened discussion ensued, evidencing the strong interest taken in the subject by the magistrates.

A correspondent of the Leicester Journal enters into some further particulars of the movement which the LAW TIMES had thus suggested. He says:—

In the autumn of 1843, two men were indicted at Leicester for stealing a piece of bacon from their companions, while carousing in a public-house. The defence was that it was taken in a joke, and had the theft been of a silk umbrella, a snuff-box, a walking-stick, a pen-knife, or the like, and the prisoners been gentlemen, it is certain that the jury would have taken that view of the case. As, however, the practical jokes of labouring men are not so well understood, the person who actually took the bacon was convicted; his companion, whose innocence was in truth proved, by the very witnesses for the prosecution, was acquitted. A gentleman present at the trial was passing through the hall at the time when the convicted prisoner was being removed to the cells beneath the Castle, and was attracted by the sympathy which the man who was acquitted manifested towards his less fortunate companion, and the grief which he felt at seeing him led away to punishment. Some inquiries were made of the lucky one as to his home and the state of his pocket; the first was 18 miles distant, and the last was empty! Think of this,—a labouring man confined all day in those dreadful cells, brought to trial, and discharged late in an October evening, 18 miles away from home, without a penny and without a friend!

The injustice and cruelty to the individual, the mischief which society itself was likely to sustain by this, its culpable neglect of one of its members, made a deep impression on the minds of those who had seen or heard of the case; and when the same subject was taken up by the LAW TIMES, and commented upon in the article read by Mr. Hodgson, it was determined that that article should be reprinted, and circulated amongst those who, acquiescing in the existence of the evil, might attempt to afford some remedy. In October, last year, a few gentlemen in this town having accidentally met together (and amongst them the Rev. Vicar of St. Mary's)—a St. Vincent, a John Howard, a Jonas Hanway—the circular in question was read, and a society instituted then and there, having for its object the relief of such cases as I have mentioned, and it was from this society that the circular was sent to Mr. Hodgson.

Now, then, Mr. Editor, if the evil be such as calls aloud for a remedy, here is an attempt to supply one; and if the society be but supported (and it needs but little support) that remedy will be effectual. It needs but little support, because the cases to which it applies are few in number, and the relief needed (though it may snatch a man from destruction, though it may save him from despair) can be afforded at a little cost. For this reason the society makes no fuss, it will print neither report nor subscription list; it has apprized the governor of the gaol of its existence, and requested that he will intimate to the destitute who pass from his custody where they may find aid and sympathy; and while the finances of the society permit it, that aid and sympathy will be supplied. All that is required to keep the supply from failing, is an occasional donation; and this, I trust, some of your readers may be disposed to offer on behalf of the society, for the relief of acquitted and destitute prisoners.

ADVERTISING ATTORNEYS.

THE following Advertisement appeared in the Salisbury Journal of the 18th inst. We have seldom recorded a more disgraceful one. Can any reader help us to discover the author, that he may be exposed to the reprobation he deserves? The LAW TIMES has, it seems, deterred from open advertisement, and now resort is had to the system of anonymous advertising, of which, in another article, we have published another shameless specimen; but their masks shall not shield the perpetrators, if we can find any clue to their persons.

MR. FARREN'S CASE.

We give a prominent place to the following Letter, addressed to us by Mr. Farren.

20th January, 1845.

Mr. Editor,—As you profess that your columns are at present open to me, this letter is sent to you for insertion in preference to any other newspaper, because it is your due, and it must be inserted somewhere.

Your article concerning myself in the Law Times of last week is considered, I am told, an extremely clever and yet sufficiently ample apology: the question naturally arises now, what do I intend to do? My answer is, to do nothing more than this, namely, to leave you and your readers to enjoy that confidence in each other which you have hitherto been pleased to flatter each other with; and to request, in the politest manner, both you and them to take fewer liberties with my name for the future.

Your obedient servant,
George Farren,
Chancery Barrister.

1, Symonds Inn, Chancery-lane.

Let not Mr. Farren mistake our meaning. We retract the animadversions we passed upon him in the belief that he was the author of the letter and advertisement that bore his name; but we make no apology for having employed them, because the evidence, as it stood, justified the belief, and because, so believing, the severity did not exceed the desert. Were the same circumstances again to occur, we should act in precisely the same manner.

It remains now but to state that the correspondent from whom we received the memorable documents instantly responded to the call made upon him in the article of last week, and by the next post forwarded to one of the Benchers of Lincoln's Inn his name and address, and all particulars of the manner in which the documents came into his possession, thereby kindly relieving us from the only difficulty of the case, our inability to produce the hand that received and transmitted the advertisement.

PROFESSIONAL MALPRACTICES.

It was to be hoped that the recent efforts so promptly made by the Benchers of some of the Inns of Court to vindicate the honour of the Bar, and to purge it from those who by malpractices have been bringing upon the Profession a disrepute calculated materially to lower its influence in public estimation, and thereby to inflict a serious mischief upon society, to whom the existence of a dignified and independent bar is of vital importance;—we say, that hopes might have been entertained that the searching investigations and summary punishment where the proof was brought home to the party accused, which have been proceeding for some months past,—would have served at least to deter others from plunging into similar malpractices.

Greatly are we grieved to see, by some papers now before us, that the warning has, in one instance at least, failed of effect. As the offending party is, we believe, yet young, we withhold his name; but we publish the facts, to apprize him that his proceedings are known, to warn him at once to pause before he is further committed, and as an example to such as might be tempted to do the like, that they cannot hope to escape discovery, for there are eyes upon them which will pierce even the anonymous.

The documents were transmitted to us with the following letter, which will appropriately introduce them:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—The inclosed letters have been sent to a gentleman who has entered his name for examination at the next Easter Term, and I understand similar communications are addressed to all gentlemen as soon as they give notice of their intention to apply for examination.

Do you consider such conduct to be in accordance with professional and honourable practice? Is there any difference between applications for pupils, and applications for practice? and if "Alpha" may render his fee for teaching contingent on success, why should he not equally render his fee for conducting a cause contingent on success? Does Mr. —— offer to transact legal business for a moderate remuneration from attorneys? If not, why does he offer to cram, for a moderate remuneration from articled clerks?

I trust that your powerful aid will be lent to destroy this system, which tends to degrade not only those who are the chief promoters of it, but the whole body of our Profession.

I am, &c.
A Member of Lincoln's Inn.

The first of these documents is a circular, which appears to be addressed to the Articled Clerks who give notice of application for admission. It runs thus:—

London, 15th Jan. 1845.

A gentleman at the Bar of some years' standing, who has read with and prepared upwards of two hundred and sixty gentlemen for their examination, prior to their admission as attorneys and solicitors, none of whom have been rejected, continues to receive pupils on moderate terms.

For particulars, or an interview, apply by letter (pre-paid), addressed to "Mr. J. care of Messrs. Benning and Co. Law Booksellers, 43, Fleet-street."

And to bait with two hooks, the following, which is lithographed, is also sent:—

London, 1st Jan. 1845.

Having devoted a considerable portion of my time to the studies requisite for passing the usual examination at the hall of the Law Institution, and having directed my attention more particularly to the Principles and Practice of the Courts of Common Law and Equity, and having guided the studies of a great number of gentlemen with unfailing success, I am induced to offer assistance to such candidates as may be desirous of availing themselves of the services of a tutor in preparing for the examination of the ensuing Easter Term.

The course of study I pursue is such as cannot fail, with proper attention on the part of the student, to ensure his admission into the Profession of the Law, as well as a due qualification for the performance of its various duties.

My terms are such as will meet the views of all to whom economy may be a consideration, and should a personal interview be desirable, I shall be happy to make an appointment, on receiving a line addressed to C. D. care of Mr. Duke, Law Stationer, No. 99, Chancery-lane.

I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,
Alpha.

P. S. Most satisfactory references can be given, and the fee for preparing students for examination is very moderate, and can be made contingent on the student's success.

Upon application being made to Mr. J. at Benning and Co.'s, or to C. D. care of Mr. Duke, law stationer, the following letter, with the advertiser's name and address, which in mercy to him we withhold, was received by the articled clerk:—

Sir,—Permit me to inform you that I systematically read (both privately and in class) with gentlemen before their examination and after, so as to prepare them for actual practice.

My method of study (developed in my public lectures, and approved of by the Profession) having in no instance failed, justifies me in offering my assistance to you for a moderate remuneration.

Yours very obediently,

Jan. 6, 1845.

We understand that the gentleman who thus "does good by stealth" is not yet called to the Bar, but that he has been proposed. If so, he is not yet amenable to the laws of Professional etiquette, and we hope he will take this friendly warning in good part, and seeing that he is known to others as well as to ourselves, that he will resolve, from the moment he takes the honourable degree he is about to assume, to eschew such practices as we have recorded, and employ his abilities in the advancement, instead of for the degradation of, the noble Profession he is about to join.

Should he offend in like manner after this warning, he must not hope again to have his name withheld from his letters.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

The second number of Practice Cases is ready for delivery, but it is not transmitted to country members, waiting for the sixth number of Magistrates' Cases to be inclosed with it.

The seventh and eighth numbers of Real Property and Conveyancing Cases, and the third number of Practice Cases, are in the press.

The returns from the circular sent to the members last week, containing a new list of books proposed for publication, are not yet completed, so it cannot be stated which of them are adopted. May we ask those who have not yet returned the circular to do so forthwith, even if they order none of the works proposed for. Until all are received the estimate cannot be made.

It appears, from the remarks appended to many of the orders, that there is a general desire that the first volume of the Year-Book should carry on the Digest of the Reports and Statutes from the point where the last edition of Harrison closes, and that afterwards it be continued yearly, with a quinquennial index. We are quite of this opinion, and most probably the suggestion will be adopted.

Many inquire if they will be compelled to continue the serial publications, whether liked or not. We answer, certainly not. If not approved, they will not be proceeded with.

The following members have been enrolled since our last report:—

Brown, Fred. L. Llanelly.
James, E. W. Greenwich.
Chambers, W. Llanelly.
Burrup, J. Gloucester.
Haywood, Bramley, and Gainsford, Sheffield.
Tennant, John, Kirkby Lonsdale.
Hanslip and Palmer, 20, Thavies'-Inn.
Knight, Fred. A. Special Pleader, 1, Mitre-court-buildings.

NECROLOGY.

SIR C. F. WILLIAMS.

On Saturday morning, at 2 o'clock, Sir C. F. Williams expired at his residence in Hyde Park-square of an affection of the heart. The deceased knight was a commissioner of bankrupts and a bencher of Lincoln's-inn.—Observer.

THE EARL OF ST. GERMAINS.

We have to record the death of the Earl of St. Germains, intelligence of whose demise reached town on Monday morning from Port Eliot, St. Germains, Cornwall. We are informed, on the authority of a letter bearing the melancholy news to a near relative, that the noble Earl was seized with a spasmodic attack in the early part of the week, a complaint his lordship was subject to, but at first no positive alarm was created. However, at half-past 12 A.M. on Sunday morning, the noble earl expired. The deceased William Eliot, Earl of St. Germains, and Baron Eliot of St. Germains, county of Cornwall, in the peerage of the united kingdom, was third son of Edward, first Lord Eliot, by Catherine, only daughter and heiress of Mr. Edward Elliston. He was born on the 1st of April, 1767; so he was at his death within a few months of attaining his 78th year. The deceased earl was married no less than four times; namely, first, to Lady Georgiana Augusta Leveson Gower, fourth daughter of Granville, first Marquis of Stafford, and sister of the late Duke of Sutherland, on the 1st of November, 1797, who died on the 24th March, 1806; secondly, on the 13th of February 1809, Letitia, eldest daughter of the late Sir William Pierce Ashe A'Court, Bart., and sister of Lord Heytesbury, the present Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, who died the 20th of January, 1810; thirdly, on the 7th of March, 1812, Charlotte, eldest daughter of the late Lieutenant-General John Robinson, and granddaughter of the late Earl of Powys, and she dying the 3d of July, 1813, the earl married fourthly, on the 30th of August, 1814, Susan, sixth daughter of the late Sir John Mordaunt, Bart., and aunt of the present baronet, who died on the 5th of February, 1830. The noble deceased had only issue by his first marriage, namely, Edward Granville, Lord Eliot, M.P., Chief Secretary for Ireland; Lady Caroline Georgiana Eliot, born July 27, 1799, unmarried; Lady Susan Caroline, born April 12, 1801, and married in July 1824 to the Hon. Lieutenant-General H. Lygon, but who died in January 1835; and Lady Charlotte Sophia, married to the Rev. G. Martin, Chancellor of the diocese of Exeter, who was born 28th of May, 1802, and died in July, 1839. The late Earl succeeded to the family honours and estates on the death of his brother John, first Earl of St. Germains, the 17th November, 1823. The Earl was as a politician a Conservative, and possessed considerable election interest in the county, having, previous to the Reform Bill, returned four members to the House of Commons, but of late years his lordship had not interfered in the opinions of his tenantry, nor indeed at any time did he exercise his political sentiments in a way oppressive to his dependants. He is succeeded by his only son, Lord Eliot. He was born 29th August, 1798, and married September 2, 1824, Lady Jemima Cornwallis, third daughter of Charles, second Marquis Cornwallis, by whom he has a family of seven children, his eldest son, Edward, now Lord Eliot, having been born the 2nd of April, 1827. The present Earl will, of course, relinquish his office as Chief Secretary for Ireland, an appointment he has held since Sir Robert Peel was summoned to direct the affairs of the Government. His lordship, then member for Liskeard, from 1827 to 1830 was a junior Lord of the Treasury. In 1835 he was selected by Sir Robert Peel to proceed to Spain as a mediator between the armies of the reigning Queen of Spain and Don Carlos, when his lordship concluded that well known convention which bore his name. He was elected to represent Liskeard in 1824, and sat in the House of Commons for that borough eight years. In 1837, at the general election, he was returned for the eastern division of the county of Cornwall by a considerable majority, and has since had the honour to sit for that county. The families of the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland, Earl and Countess Granville, the Earl of Harrowby, Dowager Duchess of Beaufort, Lord and Lady Blantyre, the Marquis and Marchioness of Lorne, Lord and Lady Francis Egerton, Archbishop of York, Viscount and Lady Frances Sandon, the Hon. Lieutenant-General H. Lygon, the Duke and Duchess of Norfolk, and many other families of the highest rank, are placed in mourning by the noble Earl's demise.

THE REPORTS.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

January 17, 20, 21.

FULTON v. GILMOUR.

Supplemental answer—Mistake—Correction of answer—Replication—Practice—Costs.

Where a defendant, speaking in his answer to the best of his belief, has made a mistake in the date of an important document, he will be allowed to correct that mistake by a supplemental answer, even after replication, and when the cause has for some time stood in the paper for hearing; and that notwithstanding the effect of the alteration of date may be entirely to displace the plaintiff's claim.

And if the defence made by the answer is one according to strict law, the Court will not entertain any consideration, any question, with regard to the unrighteousness of the defence.

Whatever inconvenience may be occasioned by the late discovery of the mistake, as for instance, after replication, must be provided for at the expense of the defendant seeking the indulgence.

This was a motion to discharge an order made by the Master of the Rolls in this cause, by which he allowed the defendant to file a supplemental answer

The plaintiff was one of the reputed daughters of Mr. Fulton, who died in the East Indies, having by his will devised and bequeathed all his property to the defendant and another person named Smith, upon trusts to convert the whole into money and divide it amongst his legatees. The trustees were also appointed executors. At the time of the testator's death the plaintiff was only seven years old. Gilmour alone proved the will, possessed the testator's assets, and settled with the other persons entitled The defendant was a partner in the Calcutta agency house of Fergusson and Company, and the testator's funds remaining in his hands were invested in the mercantile speculations of that house. In Nov. 1833, that house failed; no payment having been made to the plaintiff, who was at that time still an infant.

By the 9th of Geo. 3, c. 73, an insolvent debtor in India was enabled, by a petition to the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors in Calcutta, to obtain a discharge from his debts due to persons resident in India; but such a discharge did not bar debts due to persons living out of the jurisdiction of the East-India Company. The insolvency of Fergusson and Co. happened on the 26th of Nov. 1833; the defendant filed his schedule in the Insolvent Court at Calcutta in April 1834, and obtained a discharge from his debts. On the 17th of January, 1835, all the creditors who had not come in were, by the provisions of the above Act, excluded from a dividend. The plaintiff was, at the time of the insolvency, resident in Scotland, and, consequently, the discharge of the insolvent in India would not under that Act bar her claim against the defendant. But in August 1834, a new Indian Insolvent Debtors Act (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 79) received the royal assent, and by that Act it was provided that an insolvent in India might bar his debts due to persons out of the jurisdiction of the East India Company, by presenting a petition to the Calcutta Insolvent Court, not less than three months after his insolvency, praying such a general discharge; notice of that petition was then to be transmitted to the directors of the East-India Company in England, who were to cause it to be advertised in the London Gazette: and all the insolvent's debtors, who should not, within fourteen months from the date of the petition, be able successfully to resist such discharge, were absolutely barred. The defendant, being then in India, presented his petition in September, 1835, which was duly published in the London Gazette, and no opposition having been offered by the plaintiff, the defendant obtained his final discharge in the year 1830.

The bill was filed in 1843 against Gilmour, who had then returned to England, to make him liable for the amount of the testator's assets in his hands at the time of the failure of the house of Fergusson and Co. The first answer of the defendant was evasive; he refused to admit the plaintiff's identity or that she was the reputed daughter and one of the legatees named in his will; and thirty-three exceptions to his answer for insufficiency were allowed. By his first answer the defendant stated that he became insolvent in Nov. 1833, and that he was duly discharged under the Acts for the relief of insolvent debtors then in force in India; and by his second answer he states that he was duly discharged under the beforementioned Acts, according to the best of his belief, in April 1835. The answer stated also that he had no documents to which he could refer. On this the plaintiff filed a replication, and the cause was set down for hearing before the Master of the Rolls; but a few days before it would have been heard, defendant obtained leave to file a supplemental answer, to correct the date of his discharge, by altering it from April 1835 to April 1836, upon an affidavit stating that he had accidentally discovered, from a conversation with the solicitor of one of his late partners, that his discharge was in fact in 1836, and not in 1835, as stated in his answer. The Master of the Rolls allowed the supplemental answer to be filed. From that decision the plaintiff appealed.

Wakefield and Toller, for the plaintiff, contended that by the supplemental answer an entirely new case would be made, which was never allowed; and that this was such an unrighteous defence that the Court would not assist the defendant to correct his mistake.

They cited Wells v. Wood (10 Vesey, 401); Carling v. Marquis of Townsend (19 Vesey, 627); Edwards v. M'Leay (2 Vesey & Beames, 256); MacDougal v. Spencer (4 Russell, 486); Greenwood v. Atkinson (4 Simons, 54); Livesey v. Wilson (1 Vesey & Beames, 149).

The result of the cases is, that the Court has great difficulty in admitting a supplemental answer at all, and in such a case as this would grant no indulgence to the defendant.

Roupell and Tennant, for the defendant, contended that the supplemental answer merely corrected an erroneous date.

They cited Patterson v. Slaughter (1 Ambler, 292); Wharton v. Wharton (2 Atkyns, 295); Jackson v. Parish (1 Simons, 505); Nail v. Punter (4 Simons, 474); White v. Sayer (5 Simons, 567). French v. Myles (4 Maddock, 404).

Wakefield in reply.

At the conclusion of the reply, the LORD CHANCELLOR said that in Patterson v. Slaughter, Lord Hardwicke would not allow a defendant to do more than state more accurately a pedigree which he had discovered since his previous answer; but would not allow him to set up an additional title as mortgagee The defendant here says, in his answer, he was discharged, as he believes, in 1835; but he was, in fact, and he now swears, that he was discharged in 1836. His intention, his object, was to set up that discharge, and he means to insist upon it as a bar to the plaintiff's claim But he made a mistake as to the date, as to which he spoke from belief, and on better information he finds he has stated a wrong date, and wishes to correct it. He intended to insist on this particular discharge

Wakefield. The replication is filed to the two first answers only, and the order should have extended to give leave to apply it to the supplemental answer.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—There must be either a replication to the last answer, or the replication must be made to apply to that answer The defendant must pay all the costs arising out of his own error

JUDGMENT

Jan. 21. The LORD CHANCELLOR I have read the bill and answers, and the case made by the plaintiff upon the appeal is stated in two ways. First, it is said, that if this were an ordinary case the defendant ought not to be allowed to file a supplemental answer. In the second place, that, even if it would be allowed in ordinary cases, this being an unrighteous defence, the Court ought not to aid the defendant in placing it upon the record. As to the first point, the defendant states, in his first answer, that he was duly declared an insolvent by the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors in Calcutta, in November, 1833, under the Acts for the relief of insolvent debtors in India then in force, and that he was subsequently discharged by an order of the said Insolvent Court in pursuance of aforesaid Acts. In his further answer he states that in November, 1833, he was adjudged an insolvent by the Insolvent Debtors Court in Calcutta, and afterwards, namely, as he believes, in April 1835, he was duly discharged under the provisions of the said Acts. That he had no documents from which he could state the date more precisely. The defendant afterwards accidentally discovered that he had made a mistake in the time at which his discharge by the Insolvent Debtors Court at Calcutta took place; that it was not in April 1835, as he had stated in his answer, but in 1836. He states by his affidavit that it was a mistake; that he had no documents at the time of putting in his answer, and that he then believed his discharge had taken place in 1835 But the discharge on which he insists is that which occurred in 1836. He is not in a different discharge, and all he seeks to do by a supplemental answer is to correct an error in a date. The question is, whether in such a case the correction will be refused. It certainly is rather staggering to be told that a court of justice has not the power to correct such a mistake as that. He says he had documents, and that is confirmed by the answer itself, in which he says that he was duly discharged by the Insolvent Debtors Court in India, as he believes in April 1835. He says now, that he learned accidentally in a conversation with the solicitor of Mr. Clarke, one of his late partners in the house of Fergusson and Company, that his, Mr. Clarke's, discharge took place in 1836, and that the defendant knew that his own discharge was given at the same time; that he did not know that his petition had been advertised in the London Gazette, or that it was necessary to do so; but having referred to the Gazette, he found that his application to the Court in Calcutta was made in 1835, and he says, from these circumstances he is satisfied that his discharge was in 1836, and not in 1835. He was in error when he stated his discharge to have been in 1835; he was not in possession of his discharge or any document from which he could precisely ascertain its date, and he stated the date in the answer according to the best of his belief. It is extremely difficult to say that, under such circumstances, a slip of this sort should not be corrected. Various authorities were mentioned, and many cases referred to, in some of which leave to amend the answer had been granted, in others refused. In Patterson v. Slaughter, before Lord Hardwicke, the defendant was allowed to correct his mistake. I was requested not to rely on the report in the other case cited, and I therefore directed a copy of the order made in that case to be laid before me. I have looked into that order, and the case is of this description: The defendant claimed certain estates of Sir Geo. Warburton, and in making out his title stated the pedigree of a Mr. Ralph Egerton; he subsequently discovered that he had also some title as a mortgagee, and he likewise discovered that he had in some respects stated the pedigree incorrectly. He applied for leave to amend his answer, by stating his title as mortgagee, and, on further information to correct mistakes he had made in the statement of the pedigree. Lord Hardwicke gave him leave to correct his answer, so far as it went to state the pedigree accurately, confining the amendment to that point and that point alone. That case is a strong authority for the amendment of the answer asked for in this case. The defendant stated in his answer that he was not certain as to the date of his discharge, but spoke only to the best of his belief. If this, then, be an ordinary case, the defendant is entitled to leave to file a supplemental answer to correct the error in date. Then it is said that the defence set up by the defendant is an unrighteous one, and that it is so unjust that the Court ought not to afford any indulgence for correcting the error contained in his answer. It appears that Mr. Fulton, the testator, devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to trustees, to be sold and divided between his four children and his sister. The property, therefore, was divisible into five parts. The defendant Gilmour was appointed a trustee and executor of the will, and he was then a partner in the house of Fergusson and Company. The testator's assets having been converted into money, part of the property remained in Gilmour's hands, and in 1826 a part of it remained invested in the house of Fergusson and Company That was, undoubtedly, a breach of trust. The share payable to the testator's sister was paid immediately, and the shares of two of the children were paid to them when they became of age. But before the two younger children attained twenty-one, the house of Fergusson and Company failed. The plaintiff is one of such children. It is said that the defendant Gilmour is now rich, well able to pay the sum due to the plaintiff, and that he ought not to receive the indulgence of the Court to enable him to set up his discharge by the Insolvent Court in India as a defence against the plaintiff's claim But the law allows such a defence to be made, and there is nothing before me to lead me to any conclusion that this is an improper defence. And if I should attempt to decide on any such grounds, I should probably fail to do justice between the parties. I think, therefore, the defendant should be allowed to file a supplemental answer. The application is late, having been made after replication, and any inconvenience which may happen from that cause must be removed at the defendant's expense. The decision of the Master of the Rolls must be affirmed with costs.

ROLLS COURT.

BARTON v. MILLS.

Practice—Habeas corpus to take a bill pro confesso—Order.

John Loftus, a defendant in the cause, had been committed for contempt of Court for want of an answer, and having been brought up on the 6th November last to have the bill taken pro confesso against him, he then swore he was unable from poverty to put in his answer He was sent back, and an order made that the Master should see him, to ascertain that his statement was true; which, it was alleged, the Master accordingly did, but the defendant did not shew any reason. On the 7th December he was again brought up, and after addressing the Court in a very rambling and excited manner, he stated that the Master had not visited him, which, on examination, was found by some mistake to be so. He was again sent back to prison, and being now brought up a third time, his answer not being put in,

Lloyd, for the plaintiff, said that the Master had seen the defendant now, and found that he had no means of putting in an answer, and that he was, in fact, living upon the prison allowance. He was now, however, quite willing to put in his answer, but had not the means of even paying the costs of being brought up to have counsel and solicitor assigned to him. The plaintiff, therefore, who was desirous of acting with every possible leniency, now asked for a habeas corpus, returnable on the 29th, to bring him up to take the bill pro confesso against him, and then a solicitor and counsel might be assigned to him on his own application to the Court, not on the plaintiff's, according to the rule laid down by Lord Cottenham. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—He is in the condition of an ordinary pauper.] - Yes; but he has not the means of coming here to apply for a solicitor and counsel, and we thought this the best course we could take.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I am very much obliged to you, Mr. Lloyd, for the care you have taken in this matter. The defendant was clearly not in a fit state of mind to attend to his duty; but as you state that his feelings are now in a right state, and that he is willing, I think it better to say to him you will get him a solicitor and counsel. All the roundabout and expensive process of a habeas corpus may be prevented by his simple application for professional assistance. Let him present his petition, and it will be granted. Take the order now, in case the other course may not succeed; but, of course, you will not use it if unnecessary.

PEMBERTON v. NUNN.

Practice – 23rd and 24th Orders of 26th August, 1841, do not apply to the case of a bill of revivor and supplement to be served on a person of unsound mind and his guardian, such being within the same reason as excepts an infant from their operation.

Rogers applied, under the 23rd and 24th of the Orders of August, 1841, for leave to substitute service of a bill of revivor and supplement on a person of unsound mind and his guardian, and referred to Gibson v. Lane (Rolls, 20th Dec. 1841), in which service of entry of appearance had been ordered to be made on the solicitor of a sick woman, instead of herself.

The MASTER of the ROLLS refused the application, saying that the only exception in the Orders was that of an infant, and a person of unsound mind was clearly within the reason of the exception, and he could not distinguish the two cases; and, on its being more distinctly pointed out to him that the bill was a bill of revivor, he seemed to think that such bills did not come within the operation of the Orders, and refused the motion, saying, "You must revive and amend in the ordinary way."

RE THOMPSON.

Taxation under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73.

The particular items of a bill of costs are not the only subject-matter of consideration when taxation is asked for (after payment of the bill within the year) on special circumstances, but there must be one or more objectionable items stated, either alone or along with other special circumstances, to render the bill taxable under the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 38.

The true construction of sect. 38 of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, is, that a third party, liable to pay costs originally payable by a client to his solicitor, stands, on a reference to tax, in the same situation as the client himself, and the costs must be taxed as between solicitor and client.

If there be no conflict between the parties as to the terms of an agreement to tax in a particular way, an order on petition may be made for taxation, notwithstanding the agreement.

This was a petition for taxation of a bill of costs for 45*l.* 3*s.* 2*d.*, which had been delivered on the 26th Oct. 1843, and paid under protest on the 13th Nov. following. The petition was presented on the 12th Nov. 1844, just in time, and came on to be heard on the 19th of the same month, when it stood over for the purpose of affidavits being filed. It then stood over again for the like purpose to the 21st Dec., and was again postponed in order to put in affidavits. It now came on again.

The suit was instituted by Elizabeth Harris, the widow of Henry Harris, the son, for the administration of the estate of Henry Harris, the father. Henry Harris, the son, and his two sisters, the petitioners, were the legal personal representatives and residuary legatees under the will of their father. After the death of her husband, Mrs. Harris repeatedly applied to the surviving representatives of the testator for an account, which was refused, on the ground that all the property went to the survivor. She then took out administration to her husband, and filed her bill for an account, and an appearance was entered on behalf of the petitioners. Applying to Mr. Allsop, their solicitor, he advised them to take steps to stay the proceedings and settle that suit, which accordingly they did, and agreed with the plaintiff on the amount to be paid her. While the communications were going on, the time for answering had expired; and there being on the part of Mr. Beavan, solicitor of the plaintiff, great delay in coming to an arrangement, Messrs. Thompson and Co., the agents of Mr. Allsop, took out an attachment for want of answer, and put it in the hands of the officer, with directions not to execute it, but to give the petitioners notice thereof. At last, on the 18th July, terms were arranged between the solicitors on both sides that the sum agreed upon should be paid, and that the costs of the petitioners, the defendants in the suit, should be also paid, and that the plaintiff should remove the distringas placed upon the stock. In pursuance of this arrangement, a bill of costs was delivered by Messrs. Thompson and Co., amounting to 45*l.* 3*s.* 2*d.*, some charges in which the solicitors of petitioners thought improper, and to which they were not liable, as they were only to pay costs as between party and party. Much correspondence ensued, and Messrs. Thompson proposed to refer the matter to any solicitor, and, on the other side refusing, threatened to put the attachment in force; and, under the pressure of this threat, the petitioners paid 207*l.* 3*s.* 10*d.*, the amount of claim agreed upon, and the costs, but under protest. They now applied for taxation.

Lloyd, for petitioners, stated the facts at great length, and contended that the pressure alone was a sufficient ground to obtain taxation. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—What are the items complained of?] They are not set out. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—You have to get over that difficulty first.] In Ex parte Andrews (13 Law J., N.S. 222) it is decided by the Lord Chancellor, that the special circumstances to be shewn need not be in the bill itself. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Did the Lord Chancellor say that, after payment, you can come to a Court of Equity for taxation without stating objectionable items?] Yes; the Act gave the parties a new right, and pressure is a very special circumstance. Various items would be taxed off, for the other side require to be paid all the costs they were put to by reason of the suit, and that is more than the costs of the suit. The question, it appears from the affidavits of Mr. Beavan and his clerk, was, whether the defendants in the cause were to pay any costs of suit to the plaintiff, as the bill had been filed the day after administration was taken out by her, without any application to the defendants.

Kindersley, contrà, was not heard.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I cannot make the order asked. If the Lord Chancellor had made any such decision as is alleged, I would with great satisfaction have made the order; but I think he has not. The Act (sec. 38) says, where a third party is liable to pay the costs to the party originally chargeable, or his executor, &c., "it shall be lawful for such person, his executor, &c. to make such application for a reference for the taxation of such bill as the party might himself make, and the same reference shall be made," &c. Now I do not think one or more specific items objected to are the only special circumstances to be taken into consideration, but a specified item must form part of the circumstances; and although pressure is a strong circumstance, I cannot make the order on that alone. The Act makes no difference in this respect in the old rule. But even if that objection were out of the way, the circumstances of this case involve the construction of the contract, which, over and over again, I have decided the Act does not empower me to make. There is a conflict as to the arrangement, and therefore my jurisdiction is at an end. As to the costs, Mr. Kindersley is at liberty to address me, as at present I incline to dismiss without costs.

Kindersley.—So far from pressure, my client has used great forbearance, and used the attachment merely as a last resource. Administration was taken out by Mrs. Harris merely with a view to filing the bill, and during all the previous applications to the petitioners, they never alluded to the administration, or intimated their willingness to pay after it had been taken out. It was delayed to the last, because Mrs. Harris could only guess at the amount of the property. Besides, the agreement here is not between solicitor and client, but between the parties themselves or their solicitors for them. But, moreover, they have quite misconstrued the Act. The 38th section is that which applies here. Suppose a bill delivered and paid, how (by sect. 38) is it to be taxed? Just as if Mrs. Harris herself had applied to tax it. What is this petition for? To let third parties have the bill taxed a different way from that in which it would if the immediate client herself had petitioned for taxation. The case of Re Carew (4 Law T. 310) is in point. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The person chargeable, that is, the person out of whose fund the costs are ultimately to come, is to stand in the place of the client of the solicitor—that is the construction.] Then as to items, there are none objected to. The agreement precludes them from asking taxation also. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—If there is an agreement, the terms of which are not disputed, I may order taxation; it is only where there is a conflict as to the terms that I am not empowered.]

Lloyd, in reply.—The argument was first not in reference to an agreement, and now it is the reason for dismissal. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—It is one objection—not the only.] The agreement makes the costs of a given amount only payable.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The rule, it appears to me, is primâ facie to give costs on dismissal; but in some situations, and under peculiar circumstances, the case is different. On the opening of the petition, there appeared such marks of pressure as to induce me to dismiss without costs, and therefore I wished the discussion to be prolonged. I am not altogether satisfied with the language or the pressure used by the respondent; but I must consider not only that, but the relations occasioned by the transactions then going. The Messrs. Thompson were placed in a difficulty, and were therefore obliged to act in a peremptory manner, in opposition to the contrivances and shifts of the other side. Though I do not approve of the pressure, yet it is not sufficient to take the case out of the general rule. I dismiss the petition with costs.

Common Law Courts.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Friday, Jan. 24.

WILLOUGHBY v. WILLOUGHBY.

(Argued Jan. 15.)

A repleader will not be granted on an immaterial issue where other material issues going to the whole cause of action have been disposed of.

Judgment non obstante veredicto will not be given merely for costs.

Cowling (with whom was Montagu Smith) shewed cause against a rule obtained by Watson, Q. C. to enter judgment for the plaintiff, non obstante veredicto, or for a repleader. The declaration was in debt for a rent-charge in lieu of tithes.

It appeared that a Mr. Atherley had been appointed commissioner under a local Act to apportion the tithes, and on his alleged neglect to make an award, Mr. Herbert had been appointed by the Bishop of Oxford, and upon his award the action was brought. There were five pleas; the first set out the Act of Parliament and that Mr. Atherley had made his award. On this issue there was a verdict for the plaintiff, but a motion had been made for a new trial on the ground that it was against evidence. The 2nd and 3rd pleas were immaterial to the present question. The 4th denied that Willoughby, the defendant, ever possessed lands in respect of which the rent-charge was claimed. On demurrer to this plea the Court had given judgment for defendant, and held also the declaration bad, as the remedy was by distress, and not by action. The 5th plea set out the award of Herbert verbatim, that the Act recited that Sir H. Willoughby was a lay impropriator of the lands mentioned in the statute, and that the tithes to which the defendant was entitled were different from those in the statute, and which were tithe free, and different from those belonging to Queen's College. The verdict on this plea was for the defendant, and against it the present rule had been obtained. The plea was, for the purposes of the present argument, admitted to be immaterial, but the rule was opposed as to the judgment non obstante, because the Court having held the declaration bad, it would be absurd to say that the plaintiff should have judgment. As to the motion for a repleader, it was argued—1. That a repleader was never granted where the Court can see by the record that final judgment ought to be given for one party.

In support of this were cited—Parnham v. Pusey (Willes, 532), and Sargent v. Fairfax (1 Lev. 32); Goodburner v. Bowman (9 Bing. 532); Negeien v. Mitchell (7 M. & W. 612), in which Plummer v. Lee (2 M. & W. 495) was said to be overruled.

2. That a repleader is not granted in favour of the party who has made the first fault, and that here the declaration was bad. In a repleader no error prior to the pleading, on account of which the repleader is sought, ought to be left on the record. (1 Lord Raym. 167.)

Watson, Q. C. (with whom was Hugh Hill) supported the rule as to the judgment non obstante. The declaration and the pleas, except this one, are material, and all the issues, in fact, on these material pleas, are found for the plaintiff. The judgment upon the demurrer is in form that the plea is a good bar. If the declaration had been good, plaintiff would have been entitled to judgment non obstante. By statute 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, ss. 4 & 5, and the new rules, costs follow each issue, but if the issue be immaterial, the defendant is not entitled to costs. As it stands, the defendant will be entitled to the general costs, which is clearly unjust.

PATTESON, J.—How can we give a judgment merely for costs? If the issue be immaterial, it ought to have been demurred to.

Watson.—The judgment on demurrer will give the defendant costs therein; as to the material issues, judgment for the plaintiff and costs therein; then, as to the immaterial issue, no costs on either side, "that, notwithstanding the verdict, the plaintiff do recover."

PATTESON, J.—What?

Watson.—There is certainly a difficulty. There ought to be no costs. But the Court will prevent, if possible, the injustice caused by the present finding. 2nd. As to repleader. The rule as to the first fault means the first fault which occasioned the repleader. Here the plea is the first fault. The case from Willes is inapplicable. There has not been sufficient attention to the distinction between cases before and since the statute. The rule which formerly applied to the single plea ought now to be applied to each set of pleadings, regarding them almost as distinct actions.

A writ of error cannot award a judgment non obstante, and if the declaration be subsequently held good, and plea bad, yet the defendant will have gained his costs by the immaterial issue.

PATTESON, J.—The difficulty is, to make our own record consistent. Why order a repleader, when the declaration is bad? Rule discharged.

GRAHAM v. JACKSON.

A married woman cannot, either by herself or with her husband, appoint an attorney to execute a surrender of land held by tenant right. Where by the custom land thus held is aliened by bargain and sale, and subsequent surrender and admittance, the surrender and admittance are essential to pass the estate, and consequently a power of attorney contained in such deed cannot be acted upon after the death of the bargainor. Semble, in such case only one stamp is necessary.

This was a special case. An action for rent had been brought by the heir of a Mrs. Moses, upon a lease of land in Cheshire, of the nature of tenant right, against the lessee. It appeared that Mrs. Moses had, prior to her coverture, been customary tenant of the land, and had leased the same to the defendant. She then married Mr. Moses. In 1841, the day before her death, she had been separately examined by the steward of the manor, prior to a surrender to a Mr. Moses. After the examination a deed of bargain and sale had been duly executed and attested by herself and her husband. It contained a power of attorney to a Mr. James to appear at the court and surrender in due form, according to the custom of the manor. A court was held the next day, and the power was acted upon, but during the previous night Mrs. Moses had died. The case found that surrenders were made by attorney, but no instance was to be found of a married woman having done so. If the bargainee took the land, judgment to be given for the defendant; if not, for the plaintiff.

Addison, for the heir, said that there were three objections to the claim of the bargainee. 1st. The power of attorney to surrender was void in its inception, because made by a married woman. 2nd. If good, it became useless on the death of Mrs. Moses. 3rd. If good at all, it was not so, because against the custom, and nothing passed by the bargain and sale. 1st. A married woman cannot appoint an attorney. In civil actions, e. g. to plead her coverture; she must appear in person (Oulds v. Sansom, 3 Taunt. 261; 2 Williams' Saund. 209); although in personal actions she can do so with her husband, she cannot to alienate property. In personal actions there is a joint act done; here the surrender is in point of fact by the wife alone. The husband had no interest. (Crompton v. Collinson, 1 H. Bl. 334, 2nd. But if the warrant was valid in its inception, it ceased at her death. So it is in warrants of attorney even if they contain a clause that death shall not be a revocation of the power. (Short v. Coglin, 1 Anst. 225; Heath v. Brindley, 2 A. & E. 365; Watson v. King (4 Campb. 272.) 3rd. There is no instance of a married woman surrendering by attorney. Custom is the life and soul of copyhold. These estates by tenant right are a species of copyhold. The freehold is in the lord. (Blackst. Law Tracts, I. 105, 144; Co. Litt. by Hargr. 59 b.; Doe v. Danvers, 7 E. 298.) The estate could not pass by the bargain and sale. There was no freehold conveyed, because it was in the lord; there was no release, for there was no prior interest. It was a mere declaration of trusts of an intended surrender. It contains a power for the purpose. Surrender and admittance are necessary. (Pain v. Baker, O. Bridg. 23; Doe v. Tofield, 11 E. 246; Watkins on Copyholds, 67; Doe v. Hall, 16 E. 208.) Then, at her death, the estate vested in the heir, and judgment must be given for the plaintiff. No subsequent surrender by the attorney could operate.

Cowling, contrà.—Every thing was done that was necessary. The power of attorney was not a nullity. It is found that generally surrender may be by attorney. The custom is not against a married woman appointing an attorney.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—Do not you require a custom in favour of it?

Cowling then endeavoured to shew that in fact the appointment of the attorney was by the husband in this case, and that if it was acted upon during his life, the appointment would be good, and tried to liken this case to a personal action.

He then cited Doe v. Towns (2 B. & Ad. 585), to shew that the bargain and sale was sufficient. The surrender was only to notify to the lord, and then the tenant was enrolled. The surrender and admittance are mere form.

PATTESON, J.—There is some inconsistency in the bargain of sale. "Surrender" appears among the operative words, and then there is a power of attorney to surrender. I see, also, that the argument as to the attorney being appointed by the husband is contrary to the deed. The power is by the husband and wife "severally and respectively" to a Mr. James, "as their and each of their several and respective attorney."

Cowling.—The word surrender is in Doe v. Towns. (See also Scriven on Copyholds.) There is no regrant. The jury in this manor present "C D, tenant by alienation of A B," and he is then enrolled.

PATTESON, J.—By the old deeds set out in the case, it appears that the surrender was made in court.

Cowling.—The enrolment is mere matter of form. So under the Statute of Enrolments, 27 Hen. 3, c. 16, the enrolment may be made after the death. (Dymok's case, Hob. 136; Bac. Abr. Bargain and Sale.) If any surrender is necessary, it is made by the deed.

PATTESON, J.—How can a surrender be made to a mere stranger?

Cowling.—The Court will look at what is the essence of the tenure. (Burrell v. Dodd, 3 B. & P. 378.)

PATTESON, J. cited Bingham v. Woodgate (1 Russ. & Mylne), shewing that a surrender was necessary.

Cowling.—The case states that the surrender may be by or to the parties themselves.

Addison, in reply.—Doe v. Towns is distinguishable, because there the case found that there was, in fact, no surrender necessary, and that the land passed by bargain and sale. Each tenant right tenure is different. The words "by or to the parties themselves," must be qualified by the latter part of the case, and the question which shews that a surrender is necessary. The question really is, whether the surrender here is good.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—At last it is more a question of fact than of law. There is some uncertainty in the case stated, but it is on the whole clear that a surrender and admittance are necessary. Then I have no doubt whatever that the warrant of attorney is insufficient. A married woman cannot appoint an attorney. Even if she could, the warrant would have been revoked by her death.

PATTESON, J.—I am of the same opinion. The question is simply, whether by execution of the bargain and sale the estate passed? It is not found in terms that surrender was necessary, but it is so in substance; the old entries from 1692 shew it. Bingham v. Woodgate (1 Russ. & Mylne, 33) proves that there may be custom requiring both bargain and sale and surrender. Doe v. Towns (2 B. & Ad. 585) is different. The mode of conveyance was there expressly found. There some doubt arose as to the necessity of two stamps. There is no occasion to decide it, but I apprehend that one would suffice. The power of attorney is void. A husband cannot, except where he acts for both, appoint an attorney for his wife. But he has not done it, or professed so to do. No custom supports the appointment; even if good, it was revoked by death. Her interest is gone, and her husband never had any.

COLERIDGE, J. and WIGHTMAN, J. concurred.
Judgment for plaintiff.

Saturday, Jan. 25.

REG. v. ST. LAWRENCE APPLEBY.

The occupation of land need not be distinct and separate, like that of houses, to give a tenement settlement under 6 Geo. 4, c. 57.

On appeal against an order for the removal of George Liddell and wife, which the Sessions had confirmed, subject to a case on the sufficiency of a tenement settlement set up by the respondents, it appeared that the pauper had joint occupancy of a farm, with land, which, apart from the dwelling-house, was rented at 60*l.* per annum.

Watson, Q. C. for the respondents.—This case turns on the construction of 59 Geo. 3, c. 50, and 6 Geo. 4, c. 57, which provide that no person shall gain a tenement settlement "unless such tenement shall consist of a separate and distinct dwelling-house or building, or of land, or of both." There need not be a distinct occupancy of land.

The COURT called on the other side.

Archbold.—The Court will not put a strict construction on these words. There must not be joint occupation of land or of house; the words, "or of both, rented bonâ fide," refer to the manner of holding before mentioned, and the words may mean that both must be distinct and separate. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—Mr. Archbold, is there really any doubt in your favour on the point?] To give the Act this construction would be to advance the remedy intended by 59 Geo. 4, c. 50, to prevent joint occupancies, that being the mischief. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—The mischief is that doubts had been entertained.] But the Court will extend the meaning of a remedial Act, so as to advance the remedy. (Rex v. Threlkeld, 4 B. & A. 229.) Here, if the words "or of" were struck out, the meaning would be quite plain. There is no case of joint occupation of land in the books.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—Mr. Archbold had better have given this case up handsomely at first. The Act has studiously avoided doing the very thing we are asked to imply in construing it.

COLERIDGE, J.—Nothing can be clearer than that the occupation of land need not, according to the statute, be either distinct or separate.

Order confirmed.

PITCHER v. VICKERS.

New trial—Post-nuptial settlement—Bankruptcy.

Crowder, Q. C. moved for a new trial to set aside the verdict for the defendant in this action, for misdirection, and as against evidence. Pitcher was trustee of Mrs. Bramwell, a widow, under an assignment of furniture, &c. to her after her marriage in 1827; the purchase-money having been previously hers. Her husband, Mr. Bramwell, became bankrupt in 1839, and the defendant was the assignee by whom these goods had been sold. It was contended that the deed was fraudulent, as against creditors; but it had not been shewn that at the time the deed was made there were any creditors at all, and if not, and if the husband was not at the time in insolvent circumstances, the deed was valid (Holcroft's case, Dyer, 294; Twine's case, 1 Smith's Leading Cases, 1; Shears v. Rogers, 3 B. & Ad. 362); therefore the goods were not in the order and disposition of the bankrupt at the bankruptcy. Rule nisi.

NEWTON v. HOLFORD.

The defendant is bound to shew the plaintiff in error the postea; and if he refuses, the plaintiff having first brought in the roll, may have a rule to compel the defendant to complete it.

Alexander, Q. C. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Newton to set aside an order made by Patteson, J. to set aside a summons with costs, to bring in the roll for assignment of error, served by Newton on the 29th November, which he had obtained a rule for on the 25th November. In the interim the defendant had obtained the rule to set aside Mr. Newton's rule with costs, of which it appeared that the service did not take place till after the taxation of the costs of the rule of the defendants, and they had been put to expense by the delay.

Newton.—Their rule was obtained on the ground that the writ of error was frivolous and unreasonable. This is no reason at all. An application was made for the postea, which they refused on that ground. [PATTESON, J.—You should then have moved to compel them to shew it; but you moved for another thing.] But why was not the last rule modified without discharging my rule with costs? had I been before Mr. Justice Patteson in chambers when he gave their rule, this would have been done. My application was proper, it arose from their vexatious refusal. If I had not obtained my rule on the last day of Term, I could not have obtained the postea during vacation, and should have been too late to have assigned error. It was designed to prevent the merits being heard. They acted on the rule so far as to bring in the roll themselves. [Lord DENMAN, C.J.—We think your application proper.]

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—This was a rule to shew cause why an order should not be rescinded which was made by my brother Patteson to dismiss with costs an order to compel the defendant to complete the roll. Mr. Newton says my brother Patteson might have modified the order, and would have done so if he (Mr. Newton) had been there, but he could not have done so without an application. He had to deal with the rule before him; the summons had not been served, and he could not volunteer to modify the rule unasked to do so.

PATTESON, J.—My order was almost a matter of course to dismiss the summons with costs. The plaintiff says that he called on the defendants to shew the postea, which they refused, because his writ of error was frivolous. I by no means think their conduct proper, but far otherwise. The plaintiff might, however, have had a rule to compel the defendant to let him have access to the postea, in order to complete the roll; or he might have brought in the roll, and had a rule to compel them to complete it; but to lay a foundation for this request, the roll must be brought in, for you cannot ask them to complete what is not in existence. If I had been asked to modify my order thus, I should have had no hesitation in doing so.

COLERIDGE, J. concurred. Rule discharged.

Ex parte BATEMAN.

A barrister who, without being disbarred, serves under articles to an attorney, cannot avail himself of such service to be afterwards admitted an attorney.

Knowles, Q. C. applied for a direction from the Court to the Examiner of Attorneys to examine and admit Mr. Bateman.

This is a case of a novel nature. Mr. Bateman was articled to Mr. Hughes, of Northampton, for five years on 2nd Sept. 1826, and served for three years. He then went to Cambridge, graduated in 1833, entered as a student-at-law at the Middle Temple in 1831, was called to the Bar in May 1836, went to an eminent conveyancer's chambers, and remained there till 1842, and practised at the Bar. Being then desirous of becoming an attorney, he, without being disbarred, articled himself to a London attorney on these terms, viz. for five years, unless it was found that his former service would count, and in that case for two years, to make up the five years. He has served regularly under these articles ever since. On the 17th of January, 1845, he caused himself to be disbarred, and sought to be examined for an attorney. Under these circumstances, the examiners declined to examine and admit without the direction of the Court. He now states, that he did not cause himself to be sooner disbarred through mere inadvertence.

The Solicitor-General (with whom was Robinson), contrà.—The examiners have no personal bias in this matter; but feeling the difficulty of the case, seek the guidance of the Court. He has not laid a proper foundation for his admission. By a rule of 1762, no person can be admitted a student at law, unless his articles have been previously cancelled. Neither can any one, having been an attorney and afterwards a barrister, be re-admitted an attorney. (Ex parte Cole, 1 Doug. 114.) I assume that Mr. Bateman's first articles were cancelled; for he was admitted and called. The articles in the alternative are not valid. The two services cannot be coupled, and it was clearly not the intent of Mr. Bateman that they should, for he pays the stamp-duty in the second instance of fresh articles, viz. 120*l*. under 55 Geo. 3. It is inconsistent with the character of both branches of the Profession, that a man should thus hold himself ready for either, as may prove most advantageous, and with this view, to be a barrister and an articled clerk at the same time. True, he did not practise as a barrister during the time he was articled, but the position he assumes is a most dangerous one to the respectability of both branches of the Profession. In the strongest manner all shadow of imputation on Mr. Bateman is disclaimed; but where is the security that such a position may not be abused hereafter? Does it not afford tempting opportunity to sign pleas, and do all the minor and chamber business of the attorney? It is clear, from the alternative in the articles, that Mr. Bateman's attention was directed to the difficulty that might arise from this two-fold character, and if so, why was he not then at once disbarred? This is wholly unexplained.

Knowles, in reply.—I trust the respectability of the Profession will not suffer: for the life of me I cannot see how the profession of an attorney can be injured by the entrance into it of a gentleman so well prepared to adorn it. The 2 Geo. 2, c. 23, requires five years' service, and objections have always gone on the ground that the time has not been wholly devoted to the service. (Chitt. Prac. Questions prior to admission.) Ex parte Carter (2 W. & Bl. 957), is referred to in Re Taylor, also in Re Fletcher it was so held. The cancelling of the former articles does not do away with the former service. Ex parte Cole merely shews that he ought to apply to be disbarred; he has done so. The case is not likely to recur, and great injury will be done to Mr. Bateman's prospects if he does not succeed.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—The examiners have done very properly in referring this to our decision; it appears to be a perfectly new case. It is no answer to the argument advanced by the Solicitor-General that the statutes require nothing beyond exclusive service. It is distinctly understood that there is no sort of imputation thrown upon the character of Mr. Bateman; but much as the Court may lament the injury which may result to this gentleman's prospects, we must act entirely upon the view we take of our duty, under the circumstances of the case itself. The only inquiry we have to make is, whether this is a course which ought to be allowed to exist. I think it ought not. I think the danger of it to the character and honour of the Profession great and manifest. We must take great care that there arise no malversation which it is in our power to prevent; and the danger of it would be extreme, if the practice were allowed of articled clerks continuing to be barristers whilst in the office and service of attorneys. It is clear that this might lead, not only to the evils pointed out by the Solicitor-General, but likewise to most unfair advantage afterwards. The authorities cited by Mr. Knowles do not apply in any degree to this case, and Ex parte Cole is against his application. It was there held, that where an attorney, struck off the roll on his own application, was afterwards called to the bar, the Court refused to give him leave to be again put upon the roll of attorneys. Is it to be said that a gentleman is to have an advantage from his former articles, which he could not have had were he previously an attorney? We think it, therefore, right to declare that no one who serves under articles to an attorney at the time he is a barrister can avail himself of such service to be admitted as an attorney. Direction refused.

REG. v. KENSINGTON and OTHERS.

Mandamus to overseers to certify for excise license.

Jervis, Q. C. shewed cause why a mandamus should not issue to compel the overseers of a metropolitan parish to give a certificate to a Mr. Hamper of his occupancy of No. 19, Eastcheap, in order to a license, under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61. That he is jointly rated with one Day they had already certified; but as Hamper's name nowhere appeared on the house, they refused to do so, not wishing to incur the penalty for falsely certifying, under s. 5.

The Solicitor-General, contrà.—The question is, whether the Act intended to make it discretional with overseers to give or withhold licenses. They did not put their refusal at the time on want of evidence, but on there being no law to compel them. No other remedy is open to the complainant.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—This is a very important question. Let there be a rule, in order to its being argued on the return being made. Rule absolute.

CLEWES v. MIDDLETON.

Award set aside for improper reception of evidence.

Pashley shewed cause why the award should not be set aside. It appeared that the arbitrators had heard the evidence, not on oath, and separately gone to examine an interested witness behind the arbitrator's back. It was contended that this was not incorrect, inasmuch as the other party had been in and out of the room while the arrangement thus to take the evidence had been made, and that there was no undue means used by the arbitrators, because there was no mala fides to bring it within the scope of 9 & 10 Wm. 3, c. 15. (Matson v. Trower, Ry. & Moo. 17; Atkinson v. Abraham, 1 Bos. & Pul. 175; Hewlett v. Laycock, 2 C. & P. 574; Bignald v. Gale, 2 M. & Gr. 364, 830; where it was held that an objection to an award, on the ground of improper conduct in an arbitrator, was held to be waived by the knowledge of this misconduct, by the party interested previously to the award being made.) [Lord DENMAN, C.J.—We find Lord Eldon laying down a very different rule,(a) and we think that case no authority.] Chace v. Westmere (13 East, 357). [Lord DENMAN, C.J.—Are you going to any other point, Mr. Pashley?] The Roman law held a similar power was vested in the arbitrators.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—It may be very inconvenient to set aside an award for so small a sum as this, but the arbitrators here have clearly used undue means by departing from the ordinary and natural course of justice for the conduct of this inquiry, and privately examining a lady who was absent, and who was interested in the suit. It is not pretended here that the other party gave assent or had any notice of the proceeding.

PATTESON, J.—If we are to countenance this, I know not to what length we are to go, or what arbitrators may not do.

COLERIDGE, J. I entirely concur with my lord that the arbitrators have departed from the natural course of justice, and that there is no ground whatever for maintaining this award. Rule absolute.

INGLISS v. MORGAN and ANOTHER.

Merivale moved for a rule nisi, calling on the defendants to shew cause why a rule made upon an order of Williams, J. allowing several pleas, should not be rescinded.

The action was in assumpsit. The pleas were—1st, non assumpsit. 2nd, payment; 3rd, that by the authority and request of the plaintiff, the defendant applied a sum of money equal to the debt, and for and on account of it, by lending and advancing the said sum to a certain person, and that the plaintiff then accepted the said loan and advance in satisfaction of the said debt; 4th, a similar plea, stating that the money was applied in purchase of Exchequer bills; 5th, to the account stated, that in the account delivered, there were mistakes. It was objected that the 3rd and 4th clearly amounted to payment, and the 5th to the general issue.(a)

Rule nisi; cause to be shewn at chambers, or the defendants to undertake not to demur specially to the replication.

REG. v. CHAPMAN.

A special application and refusal are conditions precedent to a mandamus to compel the performance of a duty. No general declaration of the party supersedes the necessity of such application.

C. Evans applied for a peremptory mandamus to compel the Rev. Mr. Chapman, vicar of Basingbourne, to bury one of his parishioners, stating that he had refused twice, on the ground that the child had been baptized by a dissenting clergyman. The Court will interfere in a case of this kind, as burial is a common law right, although there may also be a remedy in the Ecclesiastical Court. (Rex v. Coleridge, 2 B. & Al. 806; Ex parte Blackmore, 1 B. & Ad. 122.)

COLERIDGE, J.—Is the application to read the burial service?

C. Evans.—It is to "bury," and that will bring up the question whether the reading of the burial service is not included in the term "bury." The learned counsel observed that the child had lain unburied since Feb. 17, 1840, and that upon two occasions a refusal had been given. The case had not been brought into this Court before, as proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Court had been commenced, but were not proceeded with pending the decision on Mr. Escott's case, and when the Privy Council had decided in favour of baptism by a layman, the prosecution against Mr. Chapman in the Court of Arches was continued. It had there been decided that there was not sufficient evidence of a proper notice to Mr. Chapman. Any objections may be raised by Mr. Chapman on motion for attachment, as in the case of a peremptory mandamus to a gaoler to deliver up a body. (Reg. v. Fox, 2 Q. B. 246.)

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—Has there been any distinct refusal since that decision?

Evans.—No; but Mr. Chapman has repeatedly declared that he will not bury the child.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—That will not do. You must make a special demand, and, in case of refusal, then apply for a rule nisi. Rule refused.

REG. v. PAYNE.

Pashley applied to the Court to order a return to be made before the last day of Term. It had been returnable on the 16th, but had been enlarged; a long time had elapsed before it had been moved for.

Application refused.

Thursday, Jan. 30.

Re CHARLES CARUS WILSON.

Kelly, Q. C. and Peacock shewed cause against a rule obtained by the Solicitor-General for quashing a writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum to bring up the body of Charles Carus Wilson, now a prisoner in her Majesty's goal in Jersey. The writ had issued in pursuance of an order made by Mr. Baron Rolfe, and was issued under the seal of and returnable in this Court. The main question was, whether the learned judge had, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 45, authority to grant that order; but it was also objected to the issuing of the writ, that the learned judge had been kept in ignorance of the real facts, and that the affidavit upon which the order had been obtained could not be used in this Court, because it was entitled in the Exchequer.

The Solicitor-General, Wortley, Q.C. and J. W. Smith, were heard in support of the rule.

Cur. adv. vult.

Friday, Jan. 31.

Re CHARLES CARUS WILSON.

Lord DENMAN to-day delivered the judgment of the Court, which in effect was, that none of the objections taken were sufficient to justify the Court in quashing a writ which had already issued; and that, therefore, the rule must be discharged and a return made to the writ. Rule discharged.

The return is to be made on the 13th of February.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Tuesday, Jan. 21.

NEWTON v. HOLFORD and OTHERS.

Where the issue on a plea of the general issue to the whole cause of action was found for the defendant, and the issue on a special plea of justification for the plaintiff, the defendant was entitled to the general costs of the cause, though the evidence at the trial related chiefly to the issue on the special plea.

(a) Featherston v. Cooper (9 Ves. jun. 68) was probably alluded to.

(a) This point was decided in Thomas v. Hawkes (8 M. & W. 140).

The plaintiff, in person, shewed cause against a rule calling upon him to shew cause why the Master should not review his taxation of the defendant Healy's costs.

This was an action of trespass for assault and false imprisonment against the defendant Healy, who had obtained a judgment in the original action against the now plaintiff, and the sheriff and his officers, who had committed the trespass in putting in force the writ of execution on such judgment. The defendants severed in their pleas, the defendant Healy pleading not guilty, and a plea of justification, founded on his judgment debt against the plaintiff. The plaintiff replied to the special plea of justification that the outer door of his, the plaintiff's, dwelling-house was, at the time of the trespass, closed and fastened, and that the defendant had wrongfully forced open the same, and by that breaking and entry had entered the dwelling-house and arrested the plaintiff, under colour of the writ of execution. The defendant Healy, by his rejoinder, traversed the forcing open the outer door.

The jury found for the defendant Healy on the issue taken on not guilty, and for the plaintiff, on the plea of justification. The Master taxed the defendant Healy's costs at only 1*l.* on the ground that there was no evidence he had incurred any more cost exclusively applicable to the plea of not guilty.

It was now insisted on that the Master was right, as all the briefs and evidence related to the matter contained in the plea of justification.

TINDAL, C. J.—Why should the defendant's position be altered because he has injudiciously added a plea of justification? If he had pleaded only not guilty, he clearly would have been entitled to the costs of the cause. The case of Spencer v. Hamerton (4 A. & E. 413) seems very much in point.

Talfourd, Serjt. contrà, was not called on.

The COURT said that they felt no doubt but that the rule ought to be made absolute. Each plea was to be taken separately, and the plaintiff had, therefore, no right to pray in aid contradictory matter apparent on the record. What the defendant Healy admitted under the plea of justification was only for the purpose of the issue taken on that plea; having failed on that issue, he was bound to pay to the plaintiff the costs applicable thereto, but having succeeded on the issue on the plea of not guilty, which went to the entire cause of action, he was entitled to the general costs of the cause. Rule absolute.

NEWTON v. ROWE and ANOTHER.

Where in an action on the case for libel there are issues on pleas of the general issue, and also of justification, and the plaintiff obtains a verdict on all the issues, with only a farthing damages, he is, under the stat. of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, s. 2, not entitled to costs on any of the issues.

Sir Thomas Wilde applied in behalf of the plaintiff for the Master to tax the costs of the plaintiff. The action was on case for a libel; there was a plea of the general issue, and several pleas of justification. On the issues joined on these pleas a verdict had been entered for the plaintiff, damages one farthing.

It was admitted that in consequence of the stat. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 24, s. 2, the plaintiff was not entitled to the costs on the general issue, but it was sought for him to be allowed the costs on the other issues, which had been found for him. If the verdict had been for the defendant on the plea of the general issue, then the plaintiff would have been entitled to his costs on such of the issues as might be found for him, and it would be a singular thing if the plaintiff should now be in a worse situation because the verdict on the general issue, instead of being found against him, has been found for him. Taylor v. Rolfe (8 Jur. 35—Q.B.) shews how strictly this stat. of 3 & 4 Vict. is construed, and that it does not apply to costs on a writ of inquiry, after judgment for the plaintiff on demurrer.

TINDAL, C. J.—The question must depend entirely on the words of the statute. The words of the statute are, that if the plaintiff in any action of trespass on the case shall recover by the verdict of a jury less damages than 40s. such plaintiff shall not be entitled to recover or obtain from the defendant in respect of such verdict any costs whatever. Stopping here, the words are general that in any action on the case, the present action is within the description given by the Legislature, and the plaintiff having recovered therein less than 40s. damages, he is by the Act not to be entitled to obtain from the defendant any costs whatever. By this statute the same result is to follow, "whether the verdict shall be given upon any issue or issues tried," which shews that the statute contemplates several issues being joined, but that no difference is to be made on that account, if the plaintiff recover a verdict for less than 40s.

The other judges concurred. Rule refused.

Friday, Jan. 24.

BOYD v. LETT.

In a declaration on a breach of contract to purchase certain goods of the plaintiff, it is sufficient to allege that the plaintiff was ready and willing to deliver the goods to the defendant according to the contract, without averring a tender and offer to deliver.

Assumpsit on a contract by which the plaintiff agreed to sell to the defendant, and the defendant to purchase of the plaintiff, certain goods, the price for which was to be paid at the expiration of fourteen days therefrom, at which time the goods were to be delivered, but the defendant was to be entitled to receive the goods before that time upon his paying the purchase-money. The declaration contained an averment that the plaintiff was ready and willing to deliver the goods to the defendant according to the terms of the contract, and assigned as a breach, that the defendant would not accept the goods or pay the price of the same.

There was a demurrer to the declaration, on the ground that the plaintiff had not averred a tender of the goods, and that the allegation of ready and willing to deliver was not sufficient.

Channell, in support of the demurrer, stated that the defendant was not bound to accept the goods without an opportunity of seeing that the goods were such as contracted for, both as regarded quantity and quality, and that there ought therefore to be such an allegation in the declaration as would enable him to put the same in issue. (Isherwood v. Whitmore, 10 M. & W. 757, and 11 M. & W. 347.) It was doubted whether, under a traverse of ready and willing, the defendant would in this respect have the same advantage as under a traverse of a tender and offer to deliver.

Byles, Serjt. contrà, cited Rawson v. Johnson (1 East, 203, Jackson v. Allaway (8 Jur. 63, and 13 Law J. C. P. 84), and Pickford v. Grand Junction Railway Company (8 M. & W. 372), and contended that "ready and willing" imported an ability to deliver the goods contracted for, and that therefore an averment of tender was superfluous, and

The COURT being also of that opinion,

Channell, Serjt. applied for and obtained leave to amend, on payment of costs, by pleading non assumpsit and a traverse of ready and willing, otherwise

Judgment for the plaintiff.

THOMAS v. STANDISH.

Practice—Setting aside rule to plead several matters—Issuable pleas.

Dowling, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the rule of court and judge's order to plead several matters should not be discharged. The defendant, who was under terms to plead issuably, had obtained a judge's order to plead several pleas, some of which, it was now said, were not issuable pleas, and the question was, whether the plaintiff must sign judgment, in order to take advantage of this, or might apply to have the order to plead, and rule of court which had been made thereon, set aside.

Rule nisi.

BONZI v. STEWART.—Shee, Serjt. for the defendant, in support of the demurrer to the plaintiff's replication. James, contrà, was not called on. Leave to amend, otherwise Judgment for plaintiff.

BARNES v. WHITE and ANOTHER.

A local Act (53 Geo. 3, c. 92) for amending the roads and highways in the Isle of Wight, empowered certain commissioners to take certain tolls at the several turnpikes or toll gates which might be erected on the roads by virtue of the Act. The Act authorized the commissioners to borrow money for the purposes of the Act, and to mortgage the tolls for any term during the continuance of the Act, as a security for the repayment of such money. The time limited by the Act for its continuance had expired, unless it was continued by the statute 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 10, for continuing the Acts for making turnpike-roads in Great Britain.

Held, that the local Act, though not exclusively a turnpike-road Act, was within the spirit of, and continued by, the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 10.

The plaintiff was convicted under the general turnpike statute, 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, for forcibly passing through a toll-gate situate on a turnpike-road made under the authority of the local Act, 53 Geo. 3, c. 92, and thereby avoiding the toll due. The plaintiff refused to pay the sum in which he was convicted, and a warrant of distress against his goods was issued. The conviction contained no adjudication of the payment of the penalty.

Held, that it was not therefore bad, since it followed the form given in the schedule to 3 Geo. 4, c. 126.

The conviction stated the toll-gate to be situate on a turnpike-road; the warrant stated only the toll-gate to be situate in the particular parish and county, omitting the turnpike-road.—Held, no variance.

Held also, that the warrant was not void for not stating that the toll-gate was situate on a turnpike-road.

The warrant ordered a moiety of the penalty to be paid to the treasurer of the commissioners for amending the roads and highways in the Isle of Wight.—Held, not to be a misappropriation of the penalty.

Held also, that no demand of the penalty was requisite previously to issuing the warrant of distress under the 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 141.

This was an action of trespass for breaking and entering the plaintiff's close, in the parish of Carisbrooke, in the Isle of Wight, called "the timber-yard," and seizing and taking certain of his goods and chattels. The defendants pleaded not guilty by statute, upon which plea issue was joined. The cause came on for trial at the last Summer Assizes for the county of Southampton, on the 15th day of July, before Patteson, J. and a special jury, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff with 2*l.* 9*s.* 6*d.* damages, subject to the opinion of this Hon. Court upon the following CASE.

The defendants are, and at the respective times of the making by them of the conviction and of the signing by them of the warrant of distress and of the committing of the trespass hereinafter mentioned were, two of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the county of Southampton, acting in and for the division of the Isle of Wight, in the said county.

On the 3rd of June, A.D. 1843, the plaintiff having been duly summoned to answer an information in respect of the subject-matter of his conviction hereinafter mentioned, appeared before the defendants with his attorney and objected that the local Act hereinafter mentioned had expired, and therefore that the defendants had no jurisdiction to hear the complaint. The defendants overruled the objection, and proceeded to hear the cause as set out in the conviction hereinafter mentioned, and thereupon the plaintiff was convicted before the defendants, acting as such justices; and of such conviction, under the hands and seals of the defendants, the following is a copy:—

Isle of Wight, in the County of Southampton. } Be it remembered that on the 3rd day of June, in the sixth year of the reign of her Majesty Queen Victoria, and the year of our Lord 1843, James Barnes, of the parish of Carisbrooke, in the Isle of Wight, in the county of Southampton, builder, is convicted on the oath of Charles Newnham, a credible witness, before us, two of her Majesty's justices of the peace acting in and for the said county of Southampton, and for the division of the Isle of Wight, in the said county, for that he, the said James Barnes, on the 30th day of May last, in the parish of Carisbrooke aforesaid, in the isle and county aforesaid, on the turnpike-road before then made and then being under the authority of an Act of Parliament, made and passed in the 53rd year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Third, for amending the roads and highways in the Isle of Wight, with a certain carriage, to wit, a cart drawn by one horse, did unlawfully, fraudulently, and forcibly pass through a certain toll-gate, then and there legally situate and being under the authority of the said Act, by reason whereof the payment of a certain toll, to wit, the sum of threepence, then and there legally due, demanded, and payable under the authority of the said Act, by and from the said James Barnes, for and in respect of the said carriage so drawn as aforesaid, was avoided, contrary to the form of a statute made in the third year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Fourth, intituled "An Act to amend the general Laws now in being for regulating Turnpike-roads in that part of Great Britain called England." And we do hereby declare and adjudge that the said James Barnes hath forfeited for the said offence the sum of two pounds and two shillings.

Given under our hands and seals the day and year first above written.

R. WALTON WHITE. (L. S.)
THOMAS COOKE. (L. S.)

The plaintiff refused to pay the said sum of 2*l.* 2*s.* which, by the conviction, he was adjudged to have forfeited, and accordingly, on the 5th day of June, 1843, caused the defendants to be served with a notice of such refusal (of which a copy was set out in the case, but the same is here omitted, as nothing turned on it).

Notwithstanding this notice, the defendants afterwards, on the 10th day of the same month of June, issued a distress warrant under their hands and seals, of which warrant the following is a copy:—

Isle of Wight, in the county of Southampton. } To the constables of the hundred of the West Medene, in the Isle of Wight, in the county of Southampton, and all other constables whom it doth or may concern, and especially to Thomas Hayter Chase.

Whereas James Barnes, of the parish of Carisbrooke, in the Isle of Wight, in the county of Southampton, builder, was on the third day of June, now instant, convicted before and by us, the undersigned, two of the justices of our Lady the Queen, assigned to keep the peace of our said Lady the Queen within the same county, and also to hear and determine divers felonies, trespasses, and other misdeeds within the same county done and committed, on the oath of Charles Newnham, a credible witness, for that he, the said James Barnes, on the 30th day of May now last past, at the parish of Carisbrooke aforesaid, in the isle and county aforesaid, with a certain carriage, to wit, a cart drawn by one horse, the said cart then and there having two wheels, and the fellies of such wheels being then and there of less breadth than three inches, to wit, of the width of two inches, did unlawfully, fraudulently, and forcibly pass through a certain toll-gate, then and there situate and being, by means whereof the payment of a certain toll, to wit, the sum of threepence, then and there legally due and payable by and from the said James Barnes, for and in respect of the said carriage so drawn as aforesaid, was avoided, contrary to the statutes in such case made and provided, by reason whereof the said James Barnes hath forfeited and become liable to pay, and we adjudge that he, the said James Barnes, shall forfeit and pay, the sum of two pounds and two shillings, to be distributed as hereinafter mentioned, which said sum he, the said James Barnes, hath refused to pay; these are, therefore, in her Majesty's name, to charge and command you to levy the said sum of two pounds and two shillings by distress of the goods and chattels of the said James Barnes; and if within four days after such distress by you taken, the said sum, together with the reasonable costs and charges of taking and keeping the same, shall not be paid, that then you do sell the goods and chattels so by you distrained, and out of the money arising by and from such sale you do pay one moiety of the said sum of two pounds and two shillings to Marle Morgan, of Newport, in the said isle, who informed us of the said offence, and the other moiety thereof to the treasurer of the commissioners for amending the roads and highways in the Isle of Wight, being the place where the said offence was committed, returning the overplus, on demand, to him the, said James Barnes (the reasonable charges of taking, keeping, and selling the said distress being deducted); and if sufficient distress cannot be found of the goods and chattels of the said James Barnes whereon to levy the said sum of two pounds and two shillings, that then you certify the same to us, together with this our warrant. Given under our hands and seals at the Guildhall in Newport, in the Isle of Wight, this 10th day of June, 1843.

In pursuance and under the authority of this warrant, the trespasses complained of in the declaration were committed by the defendants. The plaintiff, disputing the jurisdiction of the defendants to make such conviction, or to issue such warrant, and objecting also to the form both of the said conviction and warrant on the 30th day of the same month of June, caused same to be served with a notice of action (a copy of such notice was given in the case, but the same being in the usual form is here omitted).

This action was commenced on the 4th day of August, 1843.

The pleadings in this action, and also an Act passed in the 53rd year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Third, intituled "An Act for Amending the Roads and Highways in the Isle of Wight," copies of which accompany this case, are to be deemed and taken as part thereof, and may be referred to if necessary.

If the Court shall be of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to recover in this action, then the verdict found for him is to stand; but if the Court shall be of a contrary opinion, then judgment of nonsuit is to be entered.

Channell, Serjt. for plaintiff (Bull with him).—The conviction was under the General Turnpike Act, 3 Geo. 4. c. 126, but the question whether any toll was due or not will depend on the Local Act 53 Geo. 3 c. 92, having or not been continued and kept alive by the statute 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 10. It is submitted that the Local Act has not been so kept alive. Its title is "An Act for Amending the Roads and Highways in the Isle of Wight," but highways are not necessarily turnpike roads, and the statute 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 10, is only for the continuing of Acts for making and amending and repairing turnpike roads. This local Act is not for making as well as amending roads, nor is it exclusively a turnpike Act. The 20th section gives a powe 'o the commissioners to erect turnpikes and toll-houses in or upon the several roads within the parishes mentioned in the Act, and the 23rd section enumerates the tolls which may be taken, but it is contended that the continuing Act of 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 10 was not intended to revive parts only of an Act where the Act itself would have died, and does not, therefore, apply to Acts which, like this local Act, are not exclusively turnpike Acts. [Tindal, C. J.—Is there not in the local Act any clause by which the commissioners are empowered to borrow money upon the security of "he tolls, because that may have an important bearing on the question of the Act being continued?] By the 39th section, the commissioners are empowered to borrow money, and to mortgage the tolls as a security for the same; but the mortgage is to be only for a term during the continuance of the Act. Then as to the conviction, there is no clause in the local Act applicable, and the same is not warranted by the 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, under which it is made; the 41st section of that Act, which imposes a penalty for forcibly passing through any toll-gate, declares that every such person shall for every such offence forfeit and pay any sum, &c. Now in this conviction there is no adjudication of payment, but it simply states that "James Barnes hath forfeited for the said offence," &c. The conviction is, therefore, uncertain in not ascertaining to whom the penalty is to be paid. As to this Rex v. Seale (8 East, 568) is in point. [Tindal, C. J.—That was a conviction under the 42 Geo. 3, c. 119; is any form given by that Act, because there is by the present Act? Cresswell, J.—By the 148th section of this Act it is declared that the forms in the schedule are to be used, and that no objection shall be made for want of form.] It is submitted that this is not an objection of form, but of substance. There must be a forfeiture by a neglect to pay before any distress can issue under the 141st section of the Act. Another objection is, that there are variances between the warrant and conviction. The warrant states the offence to be forcibly passing through a certain toll-gate "then and there situate and being," and does not state, as the conviction does, that the toll-gate is situate on the turnpike-road. [Tindal, C. J.—Is it a variance, or is it any thing more than this, that the warrant does not state so much as the conviction?] It is apprehended that it is a variance: at all events, the warrant is void, as there is no offence, unless the toll-gate is on a turnpike-road, and there is nothing in the warrant from which it can be necessarily inferred that it is so situated. The stating that the toll was avoided "contrary to the statutes in such case made and provided" is too general, when the language before was not sufficient for any such implication. (Wickes v. Clutterbuck, 10 Moore, 63.) The General Turnpike Act, 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, gives no right to the toll, but creates the offence of forcibly passing the toll-gate; it is under the local Act; that the right to tolls is given, and by that it is to be a toll on a turnpike-road; it must, therefore, be shewn to be a toll-gate in connection with a turnpike-road, or the warrant does not disclose any offence. Another objection is, that the warrant contains a misappropriation of the penalty. The 141st section of 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, directs one moiety to be paid "to the treasurer to the commissioners for repairing and maintaining the road on which the offence shall have been committed;" but the warrant directs one moiety to be paid to the treasurer of the commissioners for amending the roads and highways in the Isle of Wight. It is not in the warrant shewn that it is the road on which the offence w s committed. There has also not been a sufficient adjudication as to the costs. At the end of the warrant it is stated, "Costs, five shillings." There are two sets of costs: there are those attending the information and conviction, and the costs of taking and keeping the distress; but there is no adjudication as to the former. Lastly, there does not appear a sufficient demand of the penalty to have been made before the distress. [Cresswell, J.—The 141st section of the Act seems strong against you on that point; the penalty, it is there stated, is to be levied upon proof and conviction of the offence, and not upon demand.]

Byles, Serjt. (with him Barstow), contra, was directed to confine himself to the third objection, viz. as to the warrant being void for not stating the toll-gate to be on a turnpike-road. It clearly appears, from the warrant, that the offence was committed on a road in the Isle of Wight; and the 20th section of the local Act gives power to the commissioners to erect toll-gates on every road in that isle, therefore it was a road on which the toll-gate might be erected. A warrant ought not to be construed so strictly as a conviction, as there is more time given for drawing the latter than the former. The 41st section of 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, describes the offence to be forcibly passing through any such toll-gate; the difficulty is as to the word "such;" if, as it would appear, there is no antecedent to it, it may be struck out, and then it becomes a toll-gate absolute. Besides, no objection should be made that the warrant does not follow the precise words of this 41st section, as defects in form are cured by the 148th section. The forms given by the Act are not peremptorily required to be used, but the 148th section says only that such forms "may be used;" the difference in this respect between "may" and "shall" is shewn in Davison v. Gill (1 East, 72). It also appears by the warrant that the plaintiff passed through a toll-gate, by means whereof the payment of a toll then legally due was avoided. [Cresswell, J.—The question is, whether there may not be a gate for collecting tolls other than turnpike tolls.] The word toll-gate has in the Act a certain definite sense.

Channell, Serjt. replied.

Tindal, C.J.—It appears to me that the defendants are entitled to the judgment of the Court in their favour. There have been several objections taken on the part of the plaintiff. The first was that the local statute of 53 Geo. 3 has not been continued by the general Act 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 10, but I think that when the object and intention of the former Act are looked at, it is manifest that it has been continued. One of the objects must have been that persons who had lent money for the purposes of such local Act should not, at the expiration of that Act, be without any security for the money they may have so advanced. By the 39th section of 53 Geo. 3, power is given to mortgage the tolls as a security for the repayment of such moneys; and it would, therefore, be of most mischievous consequences if we were not to look at the spirit of the enlarging Act, and to say that this local Act is not included therein. The 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 10, recites that it is expedient that the several Acts for making, amending, and repairing the turnpike-roads in Great Britain should be continued; and then proceeds to enact that they shall accordingly be continued. Now, although it may be true that the local Act, 53 Geo. 3, is not limited to making turnpike-roads, but is for amending roads and highways in the Isle of Wight, still it certainly falls within the spirit of the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 10. The excepted Acts, which are specified in the second section of that statute, and which are for widening certain streets, shew what was meant by the general words Turnpike-road Acts; and that it was supposed necessary to expressly except them, although they did not come strictly within the meaning of Turnpike Acts. The second objection was as to the form of the conviction, in not adjudicating the payment of the penalty. The answer to that is, that this conviction precisely follows the form given in the schedule to the statute 3 Geo. 4, c. 126; and the 148th section states that no objection shall be taken for want of form. The third objection was, that there was a variance between the warrant and the conviction. The answer is, that there is no such variance; that the conviction only states the offence more fully than the warrant, but that in effect the warrant and conviction agree. It was then objected that the warrant was void, in not stating the toll-gate where the offence was committed to have been on a turnpike-road; but it appears to me that there is no ground for this objection. If we look at the warrant, it is true it does not state the toll-gate to be on a turnpike-road, but it states what is equivalent; it states a toll-gate "then and there situate and being, by means whereof the payment of a certain toll then and there legally due was avoided." I agree that you are to consider the local Act as incorporated with the 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, by the 41st section of which the penalty is incurred "if any person shall fraudulently or forcibly pass through any such toll gate." Now it is an answer to this objection, that the warrant follows the words of this Act, and is therefore sufficient. Besides, if we consider the local Act to be incorporated with the General Turnpike Act, then the toll is equivalent with a turnpike toll. The 22nd section of 53 Geo. 3 gives the commissioners power to take the several tolls there enumerated "at each and every of the several and respective turnpikes or toll-gates;" by which it appears that that Act treats toll-gates and turnpikes as equivalent. For these reasons this objection, therefore, seems to be answered. The fourth objection is, that the warrant does not shew a proper appropriation of the penalty; but it is sufficient to say that it is in the form given in the schedule to the 3 Geo. 4, c. 126. It is true that the warrant does not follow the very terms of the form, as in the schedule it is stated that one-half is to be paid to the person who informed, and the other half to the surveyor of the turnpike-road, whilst in the warrant it is stated that the other moiety is to be paid to the treasurer of the commissioners for amending the roads and highways in the Isle of Wight; but this makes no real difference, because it may be impossible to follow the precise words of the form in this respect, and the 148th sect. provides that the forms may be used "with such additions and variations only as may be necessary to adapt them to the particular exigencies of the case." The fifth objection was, that there had not been an adjudication as to the costs, but that has been properly abandoned. And the sixth and last objection was, that there has been no demand of the penalty; but that has been already answered by the 141st clause, which makes the power to levy depend on the conviction, and not upon the demand. Therefore I think not any of the objections can be supported.

The other judges delivered similar judgments.

Judgment of nonsuit.

Wednesday, Jan. 29.

Jackson and Another v. Galloway.

Where, after reference to the judge who tried the cause, a verdict has been entered for the plaintiffs on one count, and for the defendant on the other, and on error brought on the judgment of this Court by the defendant, the Court of Error has reversed such judgment, this Court refused an application by the plaintiffs made two years after judgment had been given by the Court of Error to allow the postea to be amended by entering the verdict for the plaintiffs on a different count.

Semble, this Court has not the power to alter the entry of the verdict on the postea after the judgment thereon of a Court of Error has been given.

Talfourd and Byles, Serjts. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Sir T. Wilde last Michaelmas Term, calling on the defendant to shew cause why the postea in this cause should not be amended by entering a verdict for the plaintiffs on the 4th count of the declaration in this cause, and by entering a verdict for the defendant on the issues joined on the first count of the said declaration, and why the judgment-roll should not be amended by making the same conformable thereto, and why there should not be a new taxation of costs with reference to such amendments. This cause has been several times before the Court, and is to be found reported in 6 Scott, 766, and 3 Scott N.R. 753.

The declaration was in assumpsit on a charter-party, by which the plaintiff's ship the City of Rochester was to proceed from Pembroke to Cardiff, and there load certain quantities of iron and coal, and proceed therewith to Alexandria, and deliver the same on payment of freight, forty running days to be allowed for loading at Cardiff, and for unloading at Alexandria, to commence on the 16th December, 1834, and ten days on demurrage over and above the said lay-days, at 7*l.* per day. It appeared that the contract had afterwards, with the mutual consent of the parties, been varied by loading the vessel at Pembroke instead of Cardiff.

The declaration contained several counts, but the only two which it is necessary to notice were the first, which was a special one on the charter-party for detaining the vessel over and above the lay days and the days of demurrage; and the fourth count, which was indebitatus, for the use and hire of ships retained and kept on demurrage. The defendant conceiving that the first and fourth counts involved the same cause of action, took out a summons before the judge to compel the plaintiffs to elect which they would have struck out, but the plaintiffs contending that they had a bonâ fide intention of establishing under each a distinct cause of action, the learned judge accordingly indorsed the summons with a certificate that he was satisfied, on cause shewn, that a distinct matter of complaint was intended to be established on each of the counts.

The question at the trial, which took place at the sittings after Hilary Term 1838, was as to the defendant having or not consented to the loading at Pembroke instead of Cardiff. The jury found for the plaintiffs on this point, and assessed the damages generally at 170*l.*

There was afterwards considerable difficulty in entering the verdict, many months having elapsed before the postea was finally settled. The defendant offered to consent to the verdict being entered for the plaintiffs on the fourth count if they would allow the verdict to be for the defendant on the first count; this the plaintiffs refused, and the parties having attended before Tindal, C. J., who had tried the cause, that learned judge decided that the plaintiffs were entitled to have the verdict entered for them on the first count, and for the defendant on the fourth count, and the postea was accordingly so made out in April 1840. Judgment having been afterwards entered up, the defendant brought a writ of error thereon, which was argued in Trinity Term 1841. After time taken, in Hilary Vacation 1842, the Court of Error gave judgment, reversing the judgment of this Court, on the ground that the first count was bad for want of a sufficient consideration for the defendant's promise.

It was now urged, on behalf of the defendant, that the present application, if granted, would have the effect of making void the judgment of the Court of Error, and that it went beyond every other case, and was altogether without precedent. That the case of Mellish v. Richardson (7 B. & C. 819) was the making the amendment before the Court of Error had pronounced judgment, and differed therefore essentially from the present. It was also questioned whether this Court had the power to make the amendments, and that, at all events, it ought not to do so after the great lapse of time and laches on the part of the plaintiffs in not coming sooner; citing Sutter v. Slade (1 A. & E. 608), and Harrison v. King (1 B. & A. 161).

Sir Thomas Wilde (Greenwood with him), in support of the rule, contended that the objection which had been made to the first count was of a technical nature, and that it was only in accordance with the principle on which the Courts always acted, to allow such amendments to be made, in order that justice might not be defeated; that it was no objection that the amendment nullified the judgment of the Court of Error (Rex v. Carlile, 2 B. & Ad. 362); and that the Court would not take into consideration the effect the amendment might have on the judgment of another Court, if the amendment was one proper to be made; neither would the lapse of time prevent the amendment being made, when the Court had that before them which would enable them satisfactorily to do justice. The following cases were cited: Henley v. The Mayor of Lyme Regis (6 Bing. 100); Doe v. Perkins (3 T. R. 749); and Petrie v. Hannay (3 T. R. 659).

TINDAL, C.J.—It appears to me that this amendment ought not to be allowed. I doubt whether we have the power of authorizing the amendment to be made, and no principle or case has been shewn where, after judgment delivered, the Court has made the amendment. In Petrie v. Hannay the amendment was made before argument in the Court of Error, and in Mellish v. Richardson the postea was amended before the judgment in error had been given. Here time is taken by the Court of Error to consider their judgment, during which time the plaintiffs might have come and asked for this amendment to be made, but they did not do so; judgment of reversal is pronounced, and two years are allowed afterwards to elapse before the plaintiffs make this application. Unless some authority were shewn us to the contrary, the Court below has no jurisdiction, I think, in such a case. But, supposing we have jurisdiction, I think the present is one in which we ought not in the exercise of our discretion to use it. The amendment sought is to enter a verdict for the plaintiffs on the fourth count, and for the defendant on the issues joined on the first count. Now, this does not appear to be one of purely a technical character. If the application to make this amendment had been made at the trial of the cause, and the plaintiffs had then insisted on their right to recover alone on the fourth count, the defendant might then have raised an objection, which it would not now be in his power to do; he might have raised a question as to the proper form of action, not being in indebitatus assumpsit to recover such demurrage, but I do not of course say what would have been the effect of such an objection. The circumstance also, of so long a time having elapsed, is a strong circumstance against the granting of the present application. The plaintiffs might have applied whilst the Court of Exchequer Chamber was considering its judgment, but instead of so doing, they stop to take the chance of that judgment being in their favour. Although this Court cannot but be sorry, that after the plaintiffs have recovered a verdict in the cause, this should be the result, yet this case must be decided on principle, and I therefore think the present application must be refused.

MAULE, J.—I am of the same opinion. This is something more than an amendment which is now sought for, it is an alteration of the record after the judgment of the Court of Error has been given. It seems a strong thing to say that this Court has this power, and I do not think it has, but it is not necessary now to decide this. The question is, which way the verdict should be entered. The proper tribunal for determining that is the judge who tried the cause, and, in the present case, this question has been brought before that learned judge. It appears the parties went before him and he then decided this very matter, namely, that the verdict should be entered for the plaintiffs on the first count, and for the defendant on the fourth. We are now asked to reverse that judgment of the Chief Justice, but we have no jurisdiction to do so. My lord, indeed, may request our assistance as assessors in determining the correctness of that decision; but I am of opinion we cannot advise him, after the length of time which has been allowed to elapse, to alter the judgment he had previously given. I think that, after the interval of two or three years, people should be allowed to consider that there has been an end of the matter, and that a final settlement has taken place. Here, when this cause is before the Court of Exchequer Chamber, the plaintiffs do not apply to postpone it, but they argue the point raised. Time is taken by the Court to consider their judgment, during all which time there is a chance of the judgment being in favour of the plaintiffs, and it is not until afterwards, when it is found to be against them, that they make this application. Suppose this objection, which was taken before the Court of Error, had been made on a motion in arrest of judgment, and that that motion had been argued, would the Court, after they had given judgment, have allowed this amendment to have been made? I apprehend not. It often occurs in practice, while the case is pending, and before the judgment has been pronounced, for an amendment to be allowed on payment of costs, but it would be beyond all analogy to allow such an amendment as this after the judgment of a Court of Error has been given.

CRESSWELL, J.—I fully concur in the doubt which has been expressed as to our having the authority to make this alteration. No case has been cited where the amendment has been made after the judgment of the Court had been given, with the exception of the case of Rex v. Carlile; but there the Court who had pronounced judgment gave its consent to have the alteration made, and the Attorney-General, on the part of the Crown, also consented; it is, therefore, no authority for allowing an amendment after the Court of Error has given judgment. Then as to the question of our exercising our discretion, supposing us to have the authority, I think it would be of very mischievous consequence if we were to entertain this application. It is quite contrary to practice to allow amendments to be made after argument, unless the matter has come upon either of the parties by surprise. There is no ground for our now interfering after this lapse of time.

ERLE, J. expressed a similar opinion.

Rule discharged with costs.

DENNING v. HAMMOND and ANOTHER.

An affidavit.

Where attempts have proved fruitless to serve a rule by the parties keeping the street-door closed, the affidavit must state that the defendants have been seen to come out of the house, or contain a statement from the deponent's own knowledge that they are living there, before the Court will interfere.

Byles, Serjt. moved for a rule absolute on an affidavit of service of a rule to compute principal and interest on a bill of exchange. Copies of the rule had been sent by post; the usual calls had been made, but the street-door had been kept closed. Copies were then put under, and others nailed upon the door. The deponents swore, in addition, that they believed the defendants lived in the house, although the door was always kept closed. [CRESSWELL, J. —You, in fact, swear you believe you have served the rule.] There is a difficulty. If we had an affidavit that they lived in the house, or the statement of any person who had seen them come out of the house, there would have been no occasion to apply to the Court.

COLTMAN, J.—Why do you not proceed in the usual course, by sticking up a notice in the office? You would then shew the parties had some notice of the proceedings, and the rule would be granted as a matter of course.

Byles, Serjt.—I must make a different application, on better materials. Rule refused.

BURTON v. KNIGHT.

Nonsuit—Wrongful dismissal.

Byles, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Shee, Serjt. to enter a nonsuit, pursuant to leave reserved at the time, on the ground that there was no evidence to shew a wrongful dismissal of the plaintiff from the defendant's service.

Shee, Serjt. contra. Rule discharged.

GOODAL v. POLHILL.

A party who pays a bill of exchange for the honour of another becomes the indorsee of that party, and has the usual time for giving notice.

Channell, Serjt. (Byles, Serjt. with him), opposing the rule.—The notice in this case was in sufficient time. The defendant is the drawer of the bill, which had several indorsements upon it; among others, that of De vos Rylandt, with a reference to the plaintiff in case of need. The bill was paid at maturity by the plaintiff, and notice sent by him to De vos Rylandt at Bruges on the very day; notice was then given to the defendant by the next practicable post. When notice is given of dishonour by the holder to an indorser, the indorsee has reasonable time for notice. In this case the plaintiff became indorsee of the bill. There is no objection to an agent giving notice as agent. (Woodthorpe v. Lawes, 2 M. & W. 109; Frith v. Thrush, 8 B. & C. 387.) A person paying a bill for honour has the same right as an agent acting for his principal, or an attorney for his client. A letter is sent by the plaintiff to De vos Rylandt on the earliest opportunity, and an answer is returned by the earliest mail, and it cannot be denied that the plaintiff had a right to communicate with the person on whose account he paid the bill; and if a right to communicate at all, there must be sufficient time allowed. It is also submitted on another ground the notice was sufficient; by the plaintiff striking out all subsequent indorsements to De vos Rylandt, he became a holder entitled to sue upon the bill. [CRESSWELL, J.—When did he become indorsee?] The plaintiff could elect. By the authorities he would be entitled to become an indorsee, and have his remedy against the parties to the bill. The facts here shew no negligence.

Shee, Serjt. contra.—This notice will not suffice. It is not necessary to contend that a notice may not be given by an agent of the holder. Was the Court clearly satisfied the plaintiff was an agent at all of De vos Rylandt? Even supposing he was, he must use reasonable diligence. (Beveridge v. Burgis, 3 Camp. 262.) The question always was, whether, under all the circumstances, the holder is excused from giving regular notice. Here, if it is admitted the plaintiff was agent to De vos Rylandt for the whole transaction, still he was bound to give immediate notice. Then, again, if the plaintiff was acting as sole agent of De vos Rylandt, was he justified in giving notice to them in the first instance? The plaintiff was bound to go through all the forms which a party to the bill would be bound to observe, and should have given notice at once. Having paid for honour, he becomes by that fact an indorsee. (Mertens v. Winnington, 1 Esp. 111.) And although the case does not go on to say he is bound by all the forms, it is a fair inference. Here, if the party acquires all the rights, he is subject to all the duties, or otherwise the parties liable would be subject to great inconvenience. The foreign authorities are conclusive (Code de Commerce, art. 159), that the plaintiff, as indorsee, should have given immediate notice.

By the COURT.—The only question in this case was, whether the party received notice in due time. The plaintiff by taking up the bill for the honour of De vos Rylandt has all the rights of an indorsee; and having given them notice, the plaintiff was afterwards apprised of their notice to the defendant as a good notice in his behalf. The notice was quite sufficient, and gave a right to sue upon it. Rule discharged.

MAYLAM v. MORRIS.

Special demurrer—Payment on demand—Condition precedent.

Action brought on an agreement for the sale of the good-will and fixtures of a public-house, either party to pay on default 30*l.*

Special demurrer—That it appears by the declaration the plaintiff seeks to recover damages for the non performance of an agreement, and that it appears by the declaration that it was specially stipulated that the money was payable on demand for damages; that it does not appear any such demand was made; and that such a demand was a condition precedent.

Byles, Serjt. (Ogle with him), in support of the demurrer, citing Wallace v. Scott (1 Strange, 88); Carter v. King (3 Campbell, 459); Nicholl v. Bromley (2 B. & B. 464); Simpson v. Routh (2 B. & C. 682).

JOHNSTON v. NICHOLLS.

Arrest of judgment—Variance—Sufficient consideration.

(Partly argued on a former day.)

Channell, Serjt. in support of the rule.—The rule was obtained in the alternative for a nonsuit or in arrest of judgment. The guarantee given in this case must shew the consideration. The words in the guarantee were, "As you are about to enter into business transactions with Claridge and Co., in consideration of their doing so, I hereby guarantee any sum of money not to exceed the sum of 2,000*l.*" Although the consideration need not appear in distinct terms on the face of the declaration, it must yet be distinct by implication. (Stadt v. Lill, 9 East, 348; Jarvis v. Wilkinson, 7 M. & W. 410; Newberry v. Armstrong, 6 Bing. 201; Hawes v. Armstrong, 1 Bing. N.C. 761; Russell v. Moseley, 3 B. & B. 211.) The consideration must be co extensive with the promise. If the defendant had said, "In consideration that you will forbear the past debt, and will supply goods for the future," the case would have been different with respect to the alleged variance. The plaintiff has not set out the guarantee, but has made some part of the consideration to relate to a continuance of prior dealings; this gives to the consideration a different character than that which could be drawn from it in the original.

By the COURT.—The declaration is sufficient, and judgment ought not to be arrested. The guarantee refers to prior dealings, and refers also to future transactions. It in fact says, I will guarantee not only whatever m y become due, but that which is due, not exceeding 2,000*l.* There is a sufficient consideration disclosed both for the past and for the future; and in consequence of the consideration being corresponding in value and amount for the promise, there is a sufficient consideration for the whole promise alleged. In the second place, there is no variance between this promise and that charged in the declaration, which is only an expansion of that contained in the guarantee. There was a legal and binding promise rightly alleged in the declaration.

Rule discharged.

REGISTRATION APPEALS.

Thursday, Jan. 23.

ECKERSLEY, Appellant, and BARKER, Respondent.

Where, on the list of county voters, the qualification is described to be "an undivided moiety of two freehold cottages in Tinker-lane, Hollingwood," and it was found in the case neither of the cottages had a number, nor known by any particular name.

Held, that the name of the occupying tenant was not required to be inserted on the register.

This appeal was argued on Monday, Nov. 18, by Cockburn, for the appellant, and Cardwell, for the respondent. The facts and arguments will be found fully d tailed in the following reserved judgment, which is given verbatim:—

JUDGMENT.

TINDAL, C. J. on delivering judgment, said:—The objection in this case was, that the description in the list of voters of the property in respect of which the respondent claimed a right to vote, was insufficient, inasmuch as it omitted to state the name of the occupying tenant. The qualification is described to be in respect of an undivided moiety of two freehold cottages in Tinker-lane, in Hollingwood, and it is stated as a fact in the case that none of the cottages in Tinker-lane are numbered, nor is either of the two cottages known by any particular name; the question, therefore, is, whether, under the circumstances of this case, the name of the occupying tenant is required to be inserted? and we think that, upon the proper construction of the Act, it is not. The 4th section of the statute 6 Vict. requires a notice of claim to be delivered or sent to the overseer, according to the form of notice set forth in Schedule A, No. 2, or to that effect. The form No. 2 requires the "street, lane, or other like place; the number of the house, if any, where the property is situated; the name of the property if known by any, or, the name of the occupying tenant, to be inserted;" and we think the word "or" in this form is distinctive; it states three different descriptions, and it is sufficient if the qualification is brought within any one of them; namely, either the street or lane and number, if any; or, the name of the property, if any; or the name of the occupying tenant, if any; and although it is contended that the 5th section of the Act requires the overseers to make out, according the form No. 3 in Schedule A, an alphabetical list of the claimants, containing, amongst other things, "the nature of the qualification and the local or other description of the property, and the name of the occupying tenant thereof," and that consequently the name of the occupying tenant must be inserted in each case; yet it appears a sufficient answer that this direction is qualified and restricted by the words that immediately follow; namely, that the same shall be "written as they are stated in the claim." The direction at the head of the form No. 2 appears to us to intend that if the house is in a street lane, or other like place in the parish, the street or lane should be mentioned; and if the houses are numbered, their numbers also should be given; but that if the house or premises be not in a street or lane or other like place, but in a road or a common, or the like, then the name of the property shall be given if known by any, or the name of the occupying tenant. If, however, the two latter requisites are held to apply necessarily to a house or premises, if situate in a street or lane, then this inconvenience will follow, that there is not the description required by the Act to be given of a house or premises not situate in a street or lane, or other such like road. The direction given by the Legislature to the overseers in the statute 2 Wm. 4, c. 45, s. 37 for the framing of their notice according to the form No. 1 in Schedule H, annexed to the Act, which is a duty precisely for the same object and purpose as that required by section four of 6 Vict. c. 18, is so plainly expressed as to leave no possible doubt that the requisition to give the name of the property or the name of the occupying tenant, only holds where the house is not situate in a street, lane, or other like place; and as the statute 6 Vict. is made in pari materiâ with the former Act, it may be properly inferred that no more is required by the latter Act than the former. We therefore think that the decision of the Revising Barrister, that the qualification of the respondent in the overseers' list was sufficient, was a proper decision, and must therefore be affirmed.

Decision affirmed.

CITY OF BRISTOL.

DANIEL, Appellant, and COULSTON, Repondent.

The word "house" is a sufficient description of the qualification within the meaning of the 27th section of 2 Wm. 4, c. 45, and the term "dwelling" is not required to distinguish it.

The voter claimed as occupier of a house, No. 4, Clare street, Bristol. It was objected that the description was insufficient, and that the description of the qualification should be "as occupier of a dwelling-house." The vote was allowed by the Revising Barrister.

Kinglake, Serjt. for the appellant.—The Legislature has, in the 27th section of 2 Wm. 4, c. 45, defined the specific sort of premises which entitle the voter to be placed on the register, and it is the duty of the party claiming to select one of the appropriate terms.

The COURT, without calling on Cockburn, Q. C. for the respondent, gave judgment.—The qualification was properly described. The only question was whether the building stated in the case did or did not constitute a house. The words in the Act were, "house, warehouse, counting-house, shop, or other building." All that is required is occupation, and the description sufficiently complies with the requirements of the Act.

Decision of Revising Barrister affirmed, with costs.

CITY OF LONDON.

WANDSEY, Appellant, and PERKINS, Respondent.

The notice of objection delivered to the voter in a city or borough need not specify the particular parish in the list of which the voter's name is objected to.

The objection in this case was, that the notice of objection to the voter did not specify the particular parish in which the voter's qualification was situated.

M. D. Hill, Q.C. for the appellant.—The intention of the Legislature was that the party objecting should have complete information respecting the parish in which the voter's qualification was situated. When that information is not given, if the voter has ten qualifications in ten different parishes, he would have to go to ten church doors to see if he was objected to. [TINDAL, C. J.—When a person is objected to, he must not sit still with his hands before him.] It is more reasonable the party should give the parish to which the objection refers. [TINDAL, C. J.—Then comes the question, does the Act require it?] In the notices to freemen and liverymen the names of the companies are inserted. The party would not know in what list he was objected to unless the name of the parish was inserted.

Humfrey, contrà.—Your lordships will take judicial notice that in the city of London there is only one right of voting in respect of occupation, namely, the 10*l.* householders. So that the overseers in each parish have only one list to make out. The notice of objection received by the voter is sufficient to put him on inquiry. The name of the parish is not required by the Act. In the case decided last Term it was said there might be two parishes of "Didsbury," but the Court said that fact must be shewn. The objector here has given a notice strictly in conformity with the Act.

M. D. Hill, in reply.

The COURT, in delivering judgment, said the objection in this case was, that the notice of objection which had been served upon the party himself claiming the right to vote was not a sufficient compliance with the requisites of the Act of Parliament. It appeared to them, however, upon looking at the Act and the notice, that it was sufficient. The difficulty complained of was, that inasmuch as the notice did not specify the particular parish in which the qualification objected to was situated, and inasmuch as the party claiming to vote might have various qualifications within the city in the different parishes, it imposed upon him the difficulty of discovering in respect of which particular qualification the objection was made. Some difficulty was certainly thrown upon him in that respect; and, perhaps, if the Legislature had carried out the form of the notice in the way which had been proposed, it might have removed such difficulty; but the question which the Court had to determine was, whether it had so carried it out or not. That objection could not occur at all in respect of the notice that was delivered to the overseers, because the notice could apply to the qualification only situate in that parish of which the parties were the overseers. This notice was in strict conformity with the form No. 11, given in the Act. It had, however, been contended that the form No. 10, which required, that where several lists were made out by the overseers, the notice should specify to which list the objections applied, should be virtually applied to the form No. 11, but no court of law had power to draw any analogy from the notice appended to the first form, and apply it to the second. The notice, therefore, being in strict compliance with the form required by the Act, the decision of the Revising Barrister was right and must be upheld. Decision affirmed.

WANDSEY, Appellant, and PERKINS, Respondent.

Where the overseer omits to put a claimant who has claimed to be rated on the rate for the time being, and the party omits to claim to be placed on the subsequent rates, the omission is fatal, and is not cured by the first claim.

The question raised in this case was as to the effect of a claim to be rated to the poor-rate. On the 26th of July, 1837, the claimant was in the occupation of a warehouse, as tenant, in the parish of St. Michael, Wood-street, and on that day duly claimed to be rated to the relief of the poor in respect of the same premises, there being then a rate for the time being, but not for the said premises. The overseers neglected to put the name of the claimant on the rate for the time being, nor did they put his name on any subsequent rate, nor did he make any subsequent claim.

It was contended that, under the 2 Wm. 4, c. 45, s. 30, the claimant must be deemed to be sufficiently rated for the purposes of registration, and that so long as he was in the occupation of the same premises, he need not repeat the claim.

M. D. Hill, Q. C. for the appellant.—The claim to be rated is good and continuous. [TINDAL, C. J.—The interpretation you put on the Act is, that it is for a period for ever. The Act means that he should not only be rated, but also pay the rates and the arrears also.] Yes; he is to pay the rates; but in some places as many as twelve rates are made: is he to make twelve claims? [TINDAL, C. J.—Certainly; if he is not inserted.] Is this claim to be repeated every time? [TINDAL, C. J.—Yes; and the payment of the new rate made.] The payment of the rate is no objection; the landlord is liable. [TINDAL, C. J.—Yes; he must pay the rates. It was never intended by the Legislature that all he was to do was to be rated.] If he is not put upon the rate, what is he to do? [TINDAL, C. J.—If he is not put upon the rate, he is to be heard before the Barrister, and he will insert his name. He must be continually claiming.]

Decision of Revising Barrister affirmed, with costs.

WANDSEY, Appellant, and PERKINS, Respondent.

Lodgers are not entitled to vote where the landlord resides on the premises.

The voter claimed to be placed upon the list for three rooms, No. 16, Budge-row. The rooms constituted the whole of one floor, and were in the exclusive occupation of the claimant as a dwelling-house and printing-office. He rented the rooms from a person who resided on the premises. Both parties had keys of the street-door. The Revising Barrister decided against the claim.

M. D. Hill, Q. C. for the appellant.—This case differs from the Westminster case in this, the lodger here has control over the street-door. This occupation is similar to that of a set of chambers.

Humfreys, contrà.—The key of the street-door does not give exclusive occupation of the house. In this case the claimant may only have the street-door key by permission. In the case of chambers there is a distinct and separate holding. Lodgers are not entitled to vote where the landlord resides on the premises.

By the COURT, delivering judgment.—A house may certainly be so completely divided into several and distinct tenements, that if the landlord gives up all possession and dominion over it, these separate tenements may, for the purposes of the Act, be construed separate house. But that is not the case here; the house belongs to —— Knight, the landlord, who, having the whole of the house, lets into the possession of the second floor the present claimant, he, the landlord, still retaining the possession of the other part of the house. This, therefore, is not a separate occupation of the rooms within the meaning of the Act, but puts the claimant in the situation of a lodger or inmate, the landlord still retaining the possession of the house, for the statute refers to a person who occupies, either as landlord or owner, "a house, shop, warehouse, or other like building."

Decision of Revising Barrister affirmed with costs.

BOROUGH OF TAUNTON.

ALLEN, Appellant, and HOUSE, Respondent.

A notice of objection which contains words not contained in the forms of objection given by the statute, is nevertheless good, as the words will be construed to fall within the maxim utile per inutile non vitiatur.

The case disclosed that the general right of voting in the borough was in persons qualified under the Reform Act. A certain number of persons fell within the reserved rights of that statute residing in the parish of St. Mary Magdalen, who qualified as "Potwallers." At the revision the overseers of this parish produced a list duly published of parties qualified under the 2 Wm. 4, c. 45, and another, also duly published, of parties qualified under the reserved right. In the latter list the names, places of abode, and qualifications of the voters, the qualification being described by the words "A Potwaller, &c." The appellant's name was entered in the list of occupiers, and was not in the potwallers' list. The notice of objection described the appellant as being in the list of householders, the latter word being an interlineation. It was contended that the introduction of this word vitiated the notice. The Revising Barrister held the notice of objection sufficient, and on the qualification not being proved, expunged the name.

Kinglake, Serjt. for the appellant.—The description here is not in conformity with the directions contained in the statute, but is ambiguous and uncertain, and applicable to no list at all.

Cockburn, Q.C. (E. W. Cox with him), for the respondent, stopped by the Court.

TINDAL, C. J.—It appears to me this notice is a sufficiently good notice. Although the word "householder" is in it, that word could not by possibility have misled any one; and although undoubtedly not in strict conformity with the form of notice given in the schedule, and if there was no necessity to insert the words, I do not see why they should not be rejected (utile per inutile non vitiatur), unless, indeed, the word was calculated to mislead the party, and put him to expense.

The rest of the Court concurred.

Decision affirmed.

In this case the Court said that where only one side was heard, the case would be considered clear, and costs would be allowed of course.

BOROUGH OF WENLOCK.

HINTON, Appellant, and HINTON, Respondent.

The Court will not entertain a case raised on a question of misnomer, but will treat it as a question of fact, upon which the Barrister's decision is final.

In this case the name of the voter objecting was "Nickless;" the overseers had put the name on the list "Nicholas;" the Revising Barrister held the notice of objection was good, notwithstanding the variance in the name.

Keating, for the appellant.—In this case the statute has not been complied with, and the variance is calculated to mislead. The question is not between the overseers and the objector, but between the objector and the voter. The party objected to would not, on going to the church-door, find the name of "Nickless," but that of "Nicholas," a name common to a great number of persons in the same parish.

Gray, contrà.—All that is required is, that the name shall be so stated as to be commonly understood. This is not a question of law, but of fact. This case was for the decision of the Revising Barrister; and, when decided by him, his decision was final.

Keating, in reply.

By the COURT.—The answer is conclusive—that this is a question of fact, and not of law. The statement of the name is a mere misnomer; and this being a question of fact, the Court has nothing to decide.

Decision of Revising Barrister affirmed.

CITY OF BRISTOL.

Monday, Jan. 27.

DANIEL, Appellant, and CAMPLIN, Respondent.

The incidents of a qualification for a voter in a borough need not be stated. Where the party is a joint tenant, it is not necessary to state the nature or amount of the interest the party has in the premises.

In this case the voter occupied a house and shop jointly with another. The question was raised as to value. The only objection was that the voter should have been described on the list as occupying jointly.

Kinglake, Serjt. for the appellant.—The present question arises upon sections 27 and 29 of 2 Wm 4, c. 45. In the 27th section the franchise is conferred upon the sole occupier of a house, &c. In the 29th section the occupation is conferred upon a joint occupier. The proper construction of the franchise is to be found in the 27th section, which gives the vote to the sole occupier; and then comes the 29th section, which gives to the joint occupier the vote in distinct terms; and being an exception engrafted upon the general right of voting, should be so described on the register. The grounds of the decision in Bartlett v. Gibbs (5 M. & G. 81, and Lutwyche's Reg. Cases, Part I.) must govern this case. The description here is not certain, and affords no information to the objector as to the sufficiency of the qualification. There should be something to shew that the party does not claim for the whole. The Revising Barrister has no power to amend in this case; he can only amend certain matters of description, such as the name of a street; this is matter of substance in the qualification itself.

Butt, contrà.—This is a good description. There is nothing in the schedules to the Act which requires any other description than that given. It is a matter of evidence for the Revising Barrister when objected to, and the question will be whether the interest amounts to 10*l.* In this case joint occupancy is evidence of joint tenancy. The case of Bartlett v. Gibbs does not apply. The successive occupation there was a claim arising out of two houses; the voter's interest in each was distinct, and the successive occupation was the essence of the right. In the second instance, this is a case of amendment under the 6 Vict. c. 18, s. 40. The decision of the Barrister in this case is right.

By the COURT.—The qualification is sufficiently described. This case, although of the same kind as that of the successive occupation case, differs materially in quantity and degree. In that case there was a total absence of a portion of one part of the qualifying premises during a part of the time the voter must occupy in order to obtain the right of voting. The objector there was perfectly in the dark. Here, there is sufficient information, and if a party wishes to object, he must go, as in any other case, and acquire the knowledge requisite to support his objection.

Decision affirmed.

BOROUGH OF BLACKBURN.

DEWHURST, Appellant, and FIELDEN, Respondent.

Premises which separately will not make up the required value to qualify the voter, cannot be united for that purpose, unless they are contiguous to each other.

In this case the voter had claimed for a "joiner's shop, warehouse, and land in Thunder and Back-lane, in the said borough." The voter occupied, with another, the joiner's shop in Back-lane, which, by itself, was worth less than 20*l.* a year, and the warehouse in Thunder was worth 11*l.* a year, the two yards being of the value of 5*l.* a year: the warehouses and land are 300 yards distant from the joiner's shop. The Revising Barrister decided that the property could be joined to make up the value.

Cockburn, for the appellant.—The property not being contiguous cannot be united for the purpose of making up the value. (Webb v. Overseers of Aston, Lutwyche's Reg. Ca. Part I.; Sweetman's case, Alcock's Reg. Ca. 27.) The result of the cases goes that extent.

Kinglake, contrà, citing Reg. v. Macclesfield (2 B. & Ad. 870); Reg. v. Tadcaster (4 B. & Ad. 703).

Cockburn, in reply, stopped by the Court.

TINDAL, C.J. delivering judgment.—I am of opinion that the Revising Barrister has come to a wrong decision. The 27th section of the statute gives the right to vote to occupiers: it goes on to specify that he occupies either as owner or tenant; then, when it describes the subject-matter, that which he is to occupy, it says, occupy "as owner or tenant any house, warehouse, counting-house, shop, or other building." Now the first observation upon the very surface of it is this, that all these words are in the singular number, and it would have been just as easy, if the Legislature had intended that when several of these distinct subject-matters might together make a sufficient qualification, to have used the plural number, as houses, warehouses, counting-houses, shops, or other buildings; but the section does not stop there, but it goes on to state that when the subject-matter of a shop, warehouse, or other building should not amount to the sum of 10*l.* yearly, it may be made up by the occupation of land in conjunction with it. Now it seems to me that the ordinary construction of the very Act of the Legislature is expressio unius est exclusio alterius. In this case we cannot see why they should have mentioned the joint occupation of land unless there had been an exclusion of another house, another warehouse, another counting-house, another shop, or another building. The argument b[illegible] from the form, No. 3, in which the list is to be made out. It is evident the description of the property—street, lane, and number of the house, and other things—points more to a single and definite subject-matter than that which is composed of several things. After all, we think, on consideration of the case, that construction is just and proper, for it may very well be that the Legislature intended that a man who occupied a house worth 10*l.* might be in a proper condition of life to give his vote on these occasions; whereas, if this were made up of a very large number of small and worthless tenements, he should not be allowed to add and eke them to make up the 10*l.* On the whole we think the claimant had no right to vote.

The other judges concurred.

Decision reversed.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Thursday, Jan. 23.

WATSON v. BOYS.

Taxation of costs.

W. H. Watson moved for a rule to set aside an order for the taxation of the plaintiff's costs. There had already been one taxation of costs more than a year since on certain issues found for the defendant, at which the plaintiff did not make any effort to tax his costs on certain other issues which had been found in his favour. The new rule speaks clearly of one taxation only, and the plaintiff having neglected to tax his costs on the former occasion, cannot now be let in. The defendant had been paid his costs by the plaintiff.

By the COURT.—The plaintiff has no doubt a right to his costs on these issues, if they exceed those of the defendant on the others. That right must be ascertained by taxation, and though a question may arise as to the means now open to the plaintiff to enforce payment, it would be an act of great injustice to deprive him of the means of trying that question, by preventing him from ascertaining the amount on taxation.

Rule refused.

DAVIS v. ANKRAM.

Attorney.

M. Chambers shewed cause against a rule calling on the plaintiff and his attorney to shew cause why certain sums of money, amounting to 5*l.* 1s. should not be refunded to the defendant, the same being alleged to have been extorted from him by the fraudulent misrepresentation of the latter, that judgment had been signed against him. In answer to this, the plaintiff's attorney, and his clerk deposed that no such misrepresentation had been made, but that the true state of things had been explained to the defendant, as appeared by the memorandum signed by him on the occasion in question, by which, in consideration of the plaintiff's attorney refraining from levying on his goods on the judgment now due against him, he, the defendant, undertook to pay, and did pay, the sum of 13*l.*; that sum being composed of various items. Among these was 2*l.* 10*s.* for the costs of signing judgment; 1*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* for interlocutory costs paid by the plaintiff to the defendant, and which the plaintiff's attorney alleged had been extorted from him by the sharp practice of the defendant's attorney.

Jervis, contrà, contended that the other items were not properly chargeable against his client, e. g. 1*l.* 3*s.* for a fi. fa. which was never issued, and which, therefore, the defendant ought not to have been called on to pay. As to the fraud, it was admitted that the defendant's rule was answered on that point; but he was entitled, at all events, to the sum of 3*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.*

Pollock, C. B.—As the defendant agreed to pay the 1*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* he ought to do so, but he cannot be compelled to pay costs for debts never taken. The rule must, therefore, be absolute, with costs to the extent of 3*l.* 13*s.* 6*d.* Rule absolute accordingly.

Tiley v. Hodgson.

Irregularity—Notice of rule.

M. Chambers shewed cause against a rule to set aside the service and copy of the writ of summons, with costs, on the ground of irregularity. It was admitted that the irregularity complained of existed; but it was contended that the defendant had not come in time. The service had taken place on the 6th of January, and on the 13th this rule was obtained, notice of which was given on the same evening; but the rule itself was not served till the afternoon of the 14th. On the opening of the office, as he might by the strict rules of practice, the plaintiff took a fresh step in the cause by entering an appearance for the defendant and filing his declaration. If the rule had been served on the 13th, as it might have been, the defendant would have been in time, but the plaintiff was not bound to pay attention to the mere notice of such a rule having been that day obtained.

T. W. Saunders, contrà, was stopped by

The Court.—There was distinct notice of this rule given to the plaintiff before he took this step, and he must be held to have taken it in his own wrong. The rule must be made absolute, with costs.

Rule absolute accordingly.

NEW TRIAL PAPER.

Spiller v. Mason.

Landlord and tenant—Fixtures—Pleading.

Covenant on demise of a messuage, dwelling-house, and premises, with the appurtenances. Breach — That the defendant, after the making of the said demise, and while he was so possessed as aforesaid, suffered and permitted to be removed from the said premises divers fixtures of the plaintiff, of and belonging to, and being then and at the time of making the said demise, part and parcel of the said demised premises.

Plea—That the defendant did not suffer and permit the said fixtures in the declaration mentioned to be removed.

At the trial before Rolfe, B. the plaintiff proved that the defendant had removed certain fixtures during the demise, but he did not shew that they had been on the premises at the making of the demise. On a rule to increase the verdict of the jury by the value of the fixtures so removed,

Jervis and Ball shewed cause.—It was necessary for the plaintiff to prove the description laid in the declaration, for he thereby confined his claim to a particular class of fixtures, and failing this, he was not entitled to recover in respect of the articles actually proved to have been removed. (Beeston v. Wright, 2 Doug. 655; 1 Stark Evid. 411; Thresher v. London Water-works, 2 B. & C. 608.)

Crowder and Lush, in support of the rule.—This is not matter of description which binds the plaintiff to the proof of particular class of fixtures, but is surplusage, which may be rejected from the record; and as some fixtures were proved to have been removed during the tenancy, the plaintiff is entitled to recover for them under this issue.

By the Court.—The question is, whether the words in the declaration by which the fixtures are described are binding on the plaintiff, or are superfluous and may be rejected. We think that they are clearly words of description, and that the plaintiff was bound to shew that the fixtures removed by the defendant had been on the demised premises at the time the demise was granted. Rule discharged.

Sinclair v. Sinclair.

Evidence.

A prochein amy is admissible as a witness for an infant plaintiff under the provisions of Lord Denman's Act, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85.

At the trial of this cause, the wife of the prochein amy was tendered, and received under an objection, as a witness on behalf of the plaintiff, a minor. A rule having been obtained on this ground,

Horn shewed cause.—A prochein amy is a good witness under Lord Denman's Act, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, for he is not a party to the suit, though individually named on the record. He is something more than an attorney, and something less than a party. Before the late Act he was inadmissible, because he was interested in the suit, but not because he was a party. (Worrall v. Jones, 7 Bing. 399; James v. Hatfield, 1 Str. 548; Cowling v. Ely, 2 Stark. 366; Webb v. Smith, R. & M. 106; Slaughter v. Caldwell, Willes, 190; Percival v. Percival, Barnes's Notes, 187; Maldon v. Eden, 1 B. & P. 130.)

Jervis, contrà.—A prochein amy is liable for costs, and he is, therefore, not admissible before Lord Denman's Act. He is so much a party, that the suit cannot be stopped without his consent. Under the Act, however, he is inadmissible as one individually named on the record. (Dennison v. Sparling, 1 Str. 506; Clutterbuck v. Lord Huntingtower, Ibid.)

Pollock, C. B.—A prochein amy can be called under Lord Denman's Act, notwithstanding his being a party to the suit. He is correctly described by Parke, B. in Morgan v. Thom (7 M. & W. 415), as "an officer of the Court specially appointed by them to look after the interests of the infant," and carry on the suit for him. As this Act removes all the objections which formerly existed on the score of interest, it is clear that a prochein amy is now a good witness, and so is his wife too.

Parke, B.—The word "parties" means the plaintiff and the defendant only. Rule discharged.

Saturday, Jan. 25.

Curlewis v. Payne.

James moved for a new trial on the ground of surprise, and on affidavits contradicting the statements of a witness called for the defendant at the close of his case, who swore that the goods, to recover which this action was brought in the form of detinue, to which there was a plea denying the property, had been given away by the plaintiff before the commencement of his proceedings against the defendant.

The Court granted a rule nisi, subject to some doubt which arose as to whether the motion was within the time limited by its rules for moving new trials. Rule nisi accordingly.

Wade v. Simeon.

Practice—Power of Court over order obtained by consent.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff as the holder of two checks for 1,000*l.* each, drawn by the defendant in 1840. The defendant pleaded that they were given to secure payment of 2,000*l.* he lost at fraudulent play with one Davis, and that the plaintiff became the holder with notice thereof. The cause stood for trial on the 7th December, but the defendant being unprovided with proof of the plea, took out a summons to withdraw it, and for a stay of proceedings, on payment of the debt and costs. On the 14th December, an order being made to that effect by Alderson, B., the defendant's costs were forthwith taxed; but on the 17th the defendant intimated his intention to repudiate the order, and paying the sum of 2,500*l.* into court, obtained this rule early in this Term to set aside the order and for liberty to go to trial, on the ground that he had discovered the means of proving his plea after the order and before the 14th of December.

Watson now shewed cause.—The rule was without precedent, and beyond the power of the Court to pronounce, as the parties had by consent put an end to the action. If the proceedings had been in invitum, the Court had power to control the parties and their process; but this order was drawn up on consent, and was, therefore, irrecoverable, there being no allegation that the contract had been obtained from the defendant by the fraud of the plaintiff.

F. V. Lee followed on the same side.

Cases cited: Bligh v. Brewer (3 D. P. C. 266), and Mills v. Barber (5 D. P. C.)

Martin and Barstow, contrà.—The Court has power over its own orders at all times, and the consent of the parties makes no difference, so long as the judgment has not been signed and the arrangement is in fieri. Cur. adv. vult.

By the Court.—There is no doubt whatever that we have the power to discharge our own order, though obtained by agreement between the parties; and the only question here is, whether the case is one which calls for the exercise of that discretion. We will look into the affidavits before we decide that matter.

Afterwards (Jan. 27th),

Pollock, C. B.—We have looked over the affidavits, and we think that the rule ought to be made absolute on payment of costs, and on condition that the money paid into court bear interest at five per cent. if the result should be favourable to the plaintiff. Rule absolute.

McIntyre v. Miller.

Plea—Payment—Proof—Partnership.

Debt for money lent and advanced, and on an account stated.

Plea—That before the commencement of the suit the said debt was paid to the plaintiff, to wit, by the defendant, and that the plaintiff accepted the same in full discharge and satisfaction of the damages in the declaration, on which issue was joined.

At the trial, before Pollock, C. B. it appeared that the defendant was a shareholder in the Marylebone Bank, with which the plaintiff had a deposit account, with a balance of 1000*l.* due at the time of its stopping. Mr. Walker, who was a director of the bank, advanced 10,000*l.* to Mr. Richards, in order that he might take assignment on his behalf from various creditors of the bank, so as to keep alive their claims, and enable him, Mr. Walker, by suing in the names of the several creditors, to enforce contribution towards the losses of the Bank on the part of certain of its members. The balance of the plaintiff's account was accordingly paid by Mr. Richards out of this fund, and an assignment of the debt made to him, at the same time that the plaintiff undertook to allow his name to be used in any action to be brought by Mr. Richards against any of the shareholders. It further appearing that the plaintiff had expressly disclaimed having any demand upon the bank, as his balance had been paid, it was contended for the defendant, at the trial, that the plea was proved by the above facts. The Chief Baron directed a verdict for the plaintiff, subject to a motion; and a rule to enter a verdict for the defendant having been obtained, Jervis and Butt now shewed cause.—The facts proved at the trial do not substantiate the plea of payment, for the debt of the plaintiff was not extinguished by Mr. Richards, who only bought it from him for the express purpose of keeping it alive. For this purpose it was formally assigned to him, and is now capable of being enforced against the defendant in the name of the plaintiff. Neither is it any objection that the action is brought for the benefit of Mr. Walker, on the ground of his being a partner of the defendant, for that is only open to the defendant in the Court of Chancery. Case cited: Copeis v. Middleton (Turn. & Russ. 234).

Sir Thos. Wilde, Serjt., Martin, and Barstow, contrà.—The facts of the case constitute a payment of this debt within the meaning of this issue; for Richards being the agent of Walker, and Walker the partner of the defendant, it follows that the payment was made on account of the bank generally, and therefore of the defendant. The assignment to Richards amounts to nothing, and can have no effect, for it is in fact to Walker, who is a member of the bank.

By the Court.—The facts in this case do not support the plea of payment, unless we are to give a meaning and intention to the acts of Mr. Richards and the plaintiff directly contradictory to their avowed and expressed object as set forth in the assignment. If the conduct of Mr. Walker be called in question in the character of a partner, that is a subject of inquiry in a court of equity, and cannot be entered into here. The plaintiff, therefore, is entitled to retain his verdict. Rule discharged.

Nordenstrom v. Pitt.

This case involving the same point, the same judgment was given. Rule discharged.

Monday, Jan. 27.

Green, Executor, v. Price.

Demurrer to declaration.

A contract not to carry on business in London or Westminster, or within 600 miles of either of them, is not void as being in restraint of trade.

Cowling, for plaintiff.

Martin, for defendant.

The declaration was founded upon a contract entered into by the defendant with the plaintiff, not to carry on the trade of a perfumer in London or Westminster, or within 600 miles of either of them.

Demurrer, upon the ground that the contract set out in the declaration was bad, as being in restraint of trade.

The Court said that the recent case of Mallan v. May (the judgment in which was reported verbatim in the Law T.) was precisely in point, and in favour of the contract. Judgment for plaintiff.

Tuesday, Jan. 28.

Harvey v. Pritchard.

Guarantee—Consideration—Judgment non obstante veredicto.

Guarantee as follows:—"Messrs. Harvey—All goods purchased of your firm by W. B. of L. I hereby agree to pay for when due:"—Held, that it was incumbent on the plaintiff to prove that it was given for future supplies.

Judgment non obstante cannot be had unless the party is entitled to judgment on the whole record.

This was an action on a guarantee for goods supplied to one W. B. in the usual form, to which the defendant pleaded non assumpsit; and, secondly, as to the sum of 185*l.* parcel, &c. that after the sale of the goods, and before this action, the said W. B. was ready and willing to pay, and offered to pay the said sum of 185*l.* to the plaintiff, but that the plaintiff refused to take it, and that the said W. B. at the time of the supply, and after credit expired, was ready and willing, and is now ready and willing, to pay the said sum of money. At the trial before Rolfe, B. at the London Sittings, on the 24th inst. the jury found for the defendant on both pleas.

Jervis, Q.C. now moved, by leave, to enter a verdict for the plaintiff for 185*l*. on the first plea, and for judgment non obstante veredicto on the second plea. The guarantee on which the action was founded was in the following terms:—"Messrs. Harvey,—All goods purchased of your firm by W. B. of Ludgate-hill, I hereby agree to pay for when due;" and besides that, it appeared that a lease was deposited by W. B. with the plaintiff as a security for goods not exceeding 210*l*. His lordship thought that the guarantee applied to goods already purchased, and therefore directed the jury to find on the first plea for the defendant. It is submitted that the proper construction of this guarantee is, that it was meant to be a security for future supplies, though it may certainly apply to past supplies.

By the COURT.—It is incumbent on the plaintiff to make out that the consideration for which this agreement was given was for future supplies by necessary implication expressed on the face of the document. This guarantee may mean any thing, and it is enough to say that you did not produce at the trial any instrument which, on receiving a fair and reasonable construction, corresponded with the contract set out in the declaration. There can be no rule, therefore, on this point.

Jervis.—The second question arises on the plea, which is bad, and the plaintiff is entitled to judgment non obstante, in order that he may have his costs thereon.

By the COURT.—You cannot have judgment non obstante except where you are entitled to judgment on the whole record. Your proper remedy would be to move to arrest the judgment on the second plea. If you choose to go down to trial on a bad plea instead of demurring to it, and lose the verdict on it, you must pay the costs of that issue, when the verdict goes against you on the whole case. Rule refused.

Evidence—Admission.

Wordsworth shewed cause against a rule for a new trial on the ground of the improper rejection of an entry in a certain paper offered in evidence by the defendant in support of a plea of set-off, as being subject to the Stamp Act, whereas it was alleged that the document in question was merely an admission, and not a receipt. In answer to this rule it was contended that the rejection of the item by the under-sheriff proceeded on the ground of its being an entry of a payment to the late husband of the defendant, and not to herself, though in her own handwriting, the whole cause of action having originated since the death of Mr. Page.

Charnock, in support of the rule.—No such objection as that was made at the trial, for the rejection was then put on the stamp laws, and the plaintiff having acknowledged the receipt of such a sum when furnishing her account to the defendant, ought not now to be permitted to contradict herself.

By the COURT.—This rule must be discharged. On looking into the notes, and the particulars of demand, and on inspecting this document on which the question arises, we think that the full item of 10*l*. was properly rejected, as being an admission only applicable to the estate of Mr. Page, after whose death alone the plaintiff's cause of action arose. It does not appear that the rejection proceeded on the stamp laws, which do not apply to this case.

Rule discharged.

JOHNSON v. MORLEY.
Affidavit.

Horne moved for a rule on the plaintiff's attorney to file the affidavit of increase of which a copy had been served on the defendant, and to pay the costs of the application, which proceeded on the affidavit of the defendant that certain witnesses mentioned in the said affidavit as having been paid certain sums by the attorney, had not been so paid. Upon this fact being discovered, the defendant's attorney searched the office, but being unable to discover any such affidavit of increase, gave notice of that fact to the plaintiff's attorney. On a subsequent day an affidavit was found in the office varying materially from the copy supplied to the defendant, and containing no mention of the two witnesses. This had, therefore, been filed as a substitute for that which had been stated to be filed, and of which a copy had been delivered. The object, therefore, of the present application was to compel the attorney to file the original affidavit.

Rule nisi.

BROWN v. SHORT.
Practice—The Court will not sanction any attempt to evade justice by taking advantage of Lord Brougham's Act.

Hindmarsh shewed cause against a rule to withdraw the plea of the general issue, and substitute in lieu thereof—the general issue, except as to 20*l*.—payment into court of 20*l*. and a set-off as to the residue of the plaintiff's demand. This was a scheme to reduce the plaintiff's verdict below 20*l*., which the Court would not sanction.

By the COURT.—The defendant may make his rule absolute if he will bring into court, in four days, the balance of the plaintiff's demand, after the payment into court of 20*l*. This appears to be a plan to evade justice by taking advantage of Lord Brougham's Act, and we will not sanction any such attempt.

Thomas, for the defendant, consented to these terms. Rule absolute, accordingly.

Wednesday, Jan. 29.

WOODBRIDGE v. COOPER.
I O U—Stamp—Evidence.

Lush moved in this case, which was tried before Rolfe, B. at the last sittings, for a new trial, upon the ground that the evidence had been improperly rejected, or to enter a verdict pursuant to leave reserved.

Declaration, containing common counts.

Pleas.—Nunquam indebitatus, payment, and set-off.

The rule was moved for on the ground that certain I O U's, which were all in nearly the same words as the following, had been held by the learned Judge to require a stamp.

"I O U, Mr. Cooper, 4*l*. until Saturday, the 20th. 30th April, 1842."

It was now contended that the documents did not require promissory note stamps, and were not of sufficient value to require to be stamped as agreements.

Cases cited: Brooks v. Elkins (2 M. & W. 74); 1 Selwyn's Nisi Prius, 391; Melanotte v. Teasdale (1 Ver. Rep. Practice Cases, 47). Rul nisi.

KING v. HOPKINS.

A writ of summons directed to T. H. of Wilson-street, Finsbury, in the City of London, Wilson-street being in Middlesex, is irregular, and will be set aside with costs. A person at whose house a writ of summons has been left for the purpose of founding an application for a distringas is entitled to treat that as a service upon him, and to apply to set it aside as irregular.

T. W. Saunders had obtained a rule to set aside a writ of summons as irregular with costs. The writ was addressed to Thomas Hopkins, of Wilson-street, Finsbury, in the city of London. It was sworn that Wilson-street, Finsbury, was not in the city of London, but in the county of Middlesex.

Bramwell now shewed cause; citing on the point of irregularity, Jelks v. Fry (3 Dowl. 37); Lewis v. Newton (4 Dowl. 355); Norman v. Winter (5 Bing. N.C. 279; 7 Dowl. 304); Launceston and Victoria Railway Company v. Brennan (3 Jur. 196; C. P.); 2 Wm. 4, c. 39, s. 12. He also contended that, under the circumstances of this case, the defendant was not entitled to make this application, as the writ had never been served upon him, but had only been left at his house for the purpose of obtaining a writ of distringas against him.

T. W. Saunders, contrà.

POLLOCK, C. B.—We are all of opinion that this rule must be made absolute. The statute expressly requires that the county be stated. Here it clearly appears that the wrong county is stated. Lewis v Newton is the most like this case in its circumstances. In that case the rule was discharged on account of the looseness of the affidavit, from which it only appeared indistinctly that Gray's inn, which was the place there mentioned, was not in the city of London. Here it does distinctly appear that the place in question is not in the city. As the writ would be irregular if it left out the county altogether, it is à fortiori irregular if it mention a wrong one.

Rule absolute, with costs.

ARTHUR v. DARTCH.

Thomas shewed cause against a rule obtained by Lush for a new trial. The case was tried before the Secondary.

Lush, contrà. Rule absolute.

GUY v. WRIGHT.

Newton shewed cause against a rule to compute obtained by Willes, upon the ground that it did not appear in the affidavit that judgment had been signed at the time when the rule was obtained.

Rule absolute.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.
Friday.

ACRAMAN v. COOPER.—In this case the Court did not give any judgment, but they said that the point was of such importance that they would grant a new trial, and the parties might, if they pleased, take the opinion of the Court of Error.

ALEXANDER v. PRATT.—Crowder, Q.C. and Goldsmid shewed cause against a rule obtained by Kelly, Q. C. to enter a verdict or for a new trial. Kelly and M. Smith, contrà. The case was argued at considerable length upon the merits, but turned at last upon a point of pleading, and the Court being of opinion that the really important questions between the parties were not raised by the pleadings as they stood, they granted a new trial upon payment of costs by the defendant, with leave to him to amend his pleadings or to add two additional pleas.

M'INTYRE v. MILLER.—Jervis, Q.C. and Butt shewed cause against a rule obtained by Martin, Q.C. for a new trial. Sir T. Wilde, Martin, Q.C. and Barstow, contrà. The arguments were not concluded when the Court rose.

Monday.

DOE dem. SAMS v. GARLICK.—This was a special case, stated upon admissions on each side, and for the purpose of obtaining the opinion of the Court upon a real property question. Chilton, Q.C. having been heard, the remainder of the argument was postponed until the sittings after Term.

HIERONS v. NICHOLSON.—— moved for a rule to shew cause why certain attorneys, whose names were not mentioned, should not answer the matters of an affidavit, and deliver up certain bills. The rule was granted for the latter purpose only.

Rule accordingly.

TURNER v. LAMB.—Ogle, for plaintiff. Pearson, for defendant. Both parties had leave to amend.

ROBSON v. LUSCOMBE.—Martin, Q. C. for plaintiff. Kennedy, for defendant.

Defendant had leave to amend.

RUSSELL v. POWELL.—Bovill, for plaintiff. Badeley, for defendant. Judgment for plaintiff.

MALLISON v. BRAYSHAW.—Cowling, for plaintiff. Crompton, for defendant. Judgment for defendant.

Tuesday.

MORGAN v. THORN.—This was a rule to set aside an award, on the ground of the arbitrator not having decided all the issues in the cause, which alone was referred. E. V. Williams shewed cause, and urged that the arbitrator need not decide all the issues expressly. It was enough if he did so inferentially.

POLLOCK, C. B.—We have decided this question recently, and I have considered it so much that I have determined to insert a clause in all the orders at Nisi Prius, empowering arbitrators to make their awards generally. This rule, however, must be made absolute. Rule absolute.

WILKSON v. GRIGGS.—This was a rule to amend certain admitted defects in the proceedings herein. Barstow for the rule. Horn, contrà, assented to the rule being made absolute on terms.

Rule absolute, with costs.

DOE dem. FARRAR v. ROE.—Butt moved for a rule to strike out the names of certain of the lessors of the plaintiff in this action, on the ground that it was really brought by their assignees of a mortgage in their names, without their consent and sanction. Rule nisi.

POOLE v. BIDDULPH.—Otter moved for judgment as in case of a nonsuit. Rule nisi.

WILKS v. VANFOSSER.—James moved to set aside an order of Parke, B. on the ground that it had been granted under an alleged misconception of the facts.

Rule nisi.

DOE dem. —— v. ROE.—Hayes moved to set aside the replication of the lessor of the plaintiff herein for irregularity, as the consent rule had not been joined in by him. Rule nisi.

DOE dem. FARR v. ROE.—Ball moved for judgment as in case of a nonsuit. Rule granted.

NEW TRIAL PAPER.

ATKINSON v. CLARKE.—Gunning shewed cause against a rule to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and to enter a nonsuit. Miller, contrà.

Rule absolute.

ELKIN v. JANSON.—Martin and Barstow shewed cause against a rule to enter a verdict for the defendant. Watson and Greenwood, contrà.

Rule absolute for a new trial.

Wednesday.

COOPER v. HURST.—Jervis, Q. C. moved for a rule for a new trial in this cause, which was tried before Rolfe, B. at the late sittings in Middlesex. It stood over, to be mentioned again when certain affidavits were sworn.

PACIFIC STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY v. LEWIS.—Brown shewed cause against a rule obtained by Cleasby for judgment as in case of a nonsuit.

Rule discharged upon the plaintiff's giving a peremptory undertaking to try at the sittings after Trinity Term, if a certain commission to examine witnesses abroad was by that time returned. If not, the matter to be mentioned again.

AMLOTT v. SIMONS.—Lush moved to enter a nonsuit pursuant to leave reserved, the Court to have the same power as the judge at Nisi Prius, to amend. The case stood over, with leave to Lush to apply again upon an affidavit.

DICKINSON v. ALSOP and ANOTHER.—Willis shewed cause against a rule obtained by Warren for an attachment for non-payment of costs pursuant to an award. Warren, contrà. The COURT said that the objections taken to the award were too serious to dispose of upon motion; and though they would pronounce no decision upon them, they would leave the party to his action. Rule discharged.

Thursday.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. REILLY.—Sir F. Thesiger, S. G. moved for a rule for an order to examine a witness now lying ill in St. George's Hospital, whom it was impossible to move, and whose evidence was material and necessary for the Crown in an information for penalties. Case cited: Jenkins, q. t. v. Harwood (Bunb. 12). Rule nisi granted.

Moody v. Leeds, Bart.—Gale moved for a rule to compute, and prayed that service thereof might be effected at the last known residence of the defendant, where he was served with the writ of summons. Rule nisi.

NEW TRIAL PAPER.

Chapple v. Purdy.—Crompton shewed cause against a rule nisi for a new trial. Cur. adv. vult.

Bartlett v. Dimond.—Jerris was part heard in opposition to a similar rule. Adjourned.

Saturday.

Toplis v. Glendinning.—Mellor moved for a distringas. Rule granted.

Harley v. Ward.—Ditto v. Ditto.—Rew moved for a rule calling on Mr. John Griffiths, the attorney of the plaintiff in these cases, to shew cause why he should not pay over certain sums received by him from the defendant in these actions, and which, as he alleged, he had omitted to account for to his client. Rule nisi.

Newbold v. Fourdrinier.—Riddell moved for a commission to examine witnesses on interrogatories in Russia. Rule nisi.

Flight v. Barnett.—Pollock moved for a distringas. Rule refused.

Davis v. ——.—Jerris shewed cause against a rule to set aside an attachment against the sheriff of Carmarthenshire for a false return of nulla bona in this cause, on payment of costs. Watson supported the rule. Rule absolute.

Egbier v. Price.—This was a rule to discharge one which had been obtained by the defendant to change the venue from Middlesex to Hants. Jerris shewed cause.—The question raised was, whether the defendant was entitled to change the venue on the usual affidavit, after he had been allowed time to plead, on terms of accepting short notice of trial at the second sittings in the present Term. By the Court.—No doubt of it. The rule must be made absolute. Horn, contrà. Rule absolute.

Wade v. Simeon.—Watson and F. V. Lee shewed cause against a rule to set aside an order of Alderson, B. and Martin and Barstow were heard in support thereof. Cur. adv. vult.

Guthrie v. Bowman.—Jerris shewed cause against a rule to set aside an award, on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the arbitrators. Whately, contrà. Rule absolute.

Cook v. Stratford.—Jerris shewed cause against a rule for a review of taxation of the defendant's costs in this case. On a motion after verdict before the Court, the defendant had been allowed to amend a plea which went to the whole action, but by misapprehension two pleas had been amended and verdicts entered thereon for the defendant in the postea. The Master having taxed the defendant's costs on both pleas, the question was, whether the plaintiff was entitled to review that taxation. Crowder and Udall, for the plaintiff, were stopped. Rule absolute.

The Attorney-General v. Reilly.

Cockburn and Barstow shewed cause against this rule, which was supported by Jerris, for the Crown. Cur. adv. vult.

BAIL COURT.

Friday, Jan. 24.

Keening v. Ackerman.

When a new trial of a cause tried before the sheriff is applied for on the ground that the verdict is contrary to evidence, it is not necessary to file an affidavit stating the grounds on which the motion is made—Where the plaintiff had a verdict, and the evidence in support of the verdict was satisfactory except as to an amount less than 5l., the Court refused a new trial.

F. Edwards shewed cause against a rule obtained by Cooper for a new trial. He objected that the rule must be discharged, as the resolution of the judges, reported in 4 Moore & Scott, 484, had not been complied with. That resolution required not merely that the sheriff's notes should be verified, but that they should also be accompanied by an affidavit stating the grounds upon which it was desired to apply for a new trial. No such affidavit had been filed by his learned friend's client in the present instance.

Williams, J.—It cannot be necessary where the sheriff's notes alone are relied upon. What could he say, Sir, but "I swear that I am dissatisfied with the verdict;" and what additional information would that give me?

Edwards then contended, on the merits, that the verdict ought not to be disturbed. The action was for a trifling sum, little above six pounds, for the price of two barrels of beer, and some porter. There was satisfactory evidence that the beer was good for nothing; and evidence on both sides with respect to the porter, which was, moreover, of very little value.

Cooper, contrà.

Williams, J.—If the goods are worth nothing, this forms a defence under the general issue. There was abundant evidence to shew this with regard to one of the casks of beer, and I think also with regard to the other; but supposing it to be otherwise with regard to one of the casks of beer and to the porter, the value of both together is under 5l.; and as the new trial could only be on payment of costs, I do not think I ought to interfere. Rule discharged.

Davies v. Vernon and Another.

Alexander, Q. C. moved to stay the execution herein, until payment by the plaintiff of 400l. to the defendants, the defendants undertaking to give up the documents which were the subject of the action, upon payment of that sum.

The action was in trover for the recovery of certain title-deeds and documents belonging to the plaintiff, and the defendants, who were attorneys, had resisted the action on the ground that they had a right to retain them, not merely for a lien of 100l. to which a client of theirs, of the name of Edward Vernon, was entitled, but also for the lien which they claimed themselves. The plaintiff had admitted Mr. Edward Vernon's right, and tendered the sum of 400l. before action. Judgment had eventually been given against the defendants, on the ground that they had no lien on the documents for their own claim. The defendants were quite willing to give up the documents upon payment of the 400l. to which their client was entitled. Rule nisi.

Gibbs and Others v. ——

Fortescue moved to enter up judgment on a warrant of attorney. It was not a year old, but the party who gave it had since married, and it was, therefore, necessary to apply for the leave of the Court. He should further state that the warrant of attorney was not set out in the attestation clause, but it was stated that it was attested by an attorney, which it was submitted was sufficient.

Williams, J.—Well, I think that will do. Rule granted.

Pitcher v. King.

This was a rule for an attachment against a witness for disobedience to a subpœna.

Platt, Q. C. shewed cause.

Watson, Q. C. contra. Cur. adv. vult.

Reg. v. The Masters and Fellows of Caius College, Cambridge.

Williams, J. gave judgment.—Nothing was said in the rule as to the right in which Jobson claimed to be admitted tenant, but it was clear from his affidavit that he claimed as heir-at-law to his mother, Martha Jobson, afterwards Martha Betts, and yet he did not venture to swear that his mother died intestate; indeed, he could not safely do so, as it appeared that he had already commenced a suit in Chancery for the purpose of upsetting his mother's will, which was referred to an arbitrator, who found in favour of the will. The affidavit was apparently framed for the purpose of deceiving the Court with respect to the will, and at the same time avoiding the penalties of perjury. The heir-at-law could maintain ejectment without admission, and did not require that the rule should be made absolute for that purpose, and as he had evidently attempted to commit a gross fraud upon the Court, this rule must be discharged with costs. Rule discharged with costs.

Reg. v. The Guardians of the Kingsbridge Union.

Mandamus to poor-law guardians to elect a chaplain.

Tomlinson moved for a rule nisi for a mandamus requiring the above guardians to appoint a chaplain, pursuant to an order of the poor-law guardians, dated June 1841, for the union. Rule nisi.

Reg. v. The Recorder of the City of Chester.

Certiorari to bring up orders in bastardy, with the view to quashing same.

Townsend moved for a certiorari to remove into this court an order in bastardy, made at petty sessions, and also an order of sessions confirming the same, to the end that they may be quashed. The grounds of objection were:

1st. That the order was signed by the clerk to the justices, and not by the justices themselves.

2nd. That this order merely says, that having heard the applicant and other corroborative evidence, &c. not averring, according to the terms of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 3, that the corroboration was in some material particular.

There were many other minor objections. Rule nisi.

Ex parte William Allison.

Motion for a criminal information against overseers of the poor.

Pashley moved for a rule calling upon two persons of the names of Robert Jennings and William Paxton, overseers of the parish of Storwood, in the east riding of Yorkshire, to shew cause why a criminal information should not be filed against them for gross misconduct, in endeavouring to force the applicant, his wife, and family, who were paupers, from the parish.

Williams, J. however, thought that as the conduct of the overseers is not likely to provoke a breach of the peace, and as proceeding against the parties by indictment would be as efficient and as little expensive a remedy as that by information, he was not called upon to interfere. Rule refused.

Schlesinger v. Flersheim.

The Court will not grant a rule nisi for an attachment against a party in a civil suit for endeavouring to influence a witness not to attend the trial.

R. Allen moved for a rule calling upon the defendant to shew cause why an attachment should not issue against him for a contempt, in endeavouring to obstruct the process of the Court.

It appeared that before the commencement of this action the defendant had written a letter to a Mr. Rose, in which imputations were made on the character of the plaintiff. This letter having come to the knowledge and possession of the plaintiff, he brought an action of libel upon it. It being necessary to subpœna Mr. Rose, he was sought for, and after some difficulty he was met with, when he admitted that, upon the importunities of the defendant, he had endeavoured to avoid being made a witness. It further appeared that the defendant had written Mr. Rose several letters, urging him to endeavour to re-possess himself of the letter before-mentioned, and to abstain from giving evidence, as without him and the letter the action must fail. The action stands for trial at the sittings after term.

It was now submitted that such conduct amounts to a contempt of Court, inasmuch as it is an attempt to divert the due course of justice, and that if the proceedings had been of a criminal instead of a civil nature, the defendant would have been liable to have been indicted. (2 Scott, 614; 2 East, 262; Smith v. Bond, Jurist, 18th Jan. inst. p. 20.)

Williams, J.—A criminal case is different from a civil suit, for there the public are concerned, and it is highly important that the course of public justice should flow clear and undisturbed. The case cited from The Jurist was where a party was kept in confinement, which is not the case here. If the witness will not attend, notwithstanding he is subpœnaed, you have your remedy. I do not think that I am called upon to interfere. Rule refused.

Hawkins v. Benton.

Award—Motion calling upon the defendant to pay the amount of the Master's allocatur.

Gray shewed cause against a rule obtained herein last Term by Best, calling upon the defendant to shew cause why he should not pay a sum of money due on an award and allocatur, and contended,

1st. That as the award and allocatur had not been personally served, there was no ground for this motion.

2nd. That the award was bad on its face, as the arbitrator had awarded that further proceedings between the parties should be stayed, he having no authority for that purpose.

3rd. That the submission or order of the judge being, that all matters in difference between the parties, and between William Cole and the defendant, should be referred, and that the costs should abide the event; the arbitrator had assessed the damages to be paid to the plaintiffs, Sarah Hawkins and William Cole, who had consented to become a party to the reference (he having a similar cause of action—trespass against the defendant), at 40s. by which it was rendered uncertain whether any costs were legally payable, inasmuch as if less than 40s. damages were recovered by any one plaintiff, he would not be entitled to costs in this action, and here only 40s. were given to the two plaintiffs.

4th. That the finding was uncertain, inasmuch as it does not shew to what costs the parties are respectively entitled, the plaintiff, William Cole, having come into the case only on the reference, and having, therefore, incurred no general costs in the cause.

Best, contrà, argued that the Court had already intimated that, under special circumstances, personal service may be dispensed with.

Gray waived this objection.

Best then took the several objections in their order. Cur. adv. vult.

Doe dem. Simons v. Rice.

The Act 48 Geo. 3, c. 123, for the discharge of prisoners who have lain in gaol twelve months for debts or damages under 20l. applies to prisoners taken in execution for the nominal damages in ejectment.

Barstow shewed cause against an application made by Giffard for a rule for the discharge of the defendant out of the custody of the keeper of the Queen's Prison, pursuant to the 48 Geo. 3, c. 123, the amount being under 20l. and the defendant having been in gaol more than a twelvemonth; and he contended, as the defendant was in gaol for the costs and nominal damages under a judgment in ejectment, that the Act did not apply. He admitted that there were the two cases of Doe dem. Daffey v. Sinclair (4 Scott, 477), and Doe dem. Threlfall v. Ward (2 M. & W. 65), which were decisions the other way, but thought that the case of Doe dem. —— v. Reynolds (10 B. & C. 481), which was in his favour, the sounder law.

Giffard, contrà.

WIGHTMAN, J. thought that the wording of the Act was quite free from doubt, and that it included cases of this sort. Prisoner discharged.

HARDING v. HOWARD.

An application to enter a suggestion on the roll to deprive a plaintiff of costs under a Court of Requests Act may be made at any time before final judgment is signed.

To entitle a defendant to enter a suggestion under the Middlesex County Court Act (23 Geo. 2, c. 33), not only must the defendant reside, but the entire cause of action must arise within the county.

T. W. Saunders shewed cause against the rule obtained herein by M. Chambers, calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why a suggestion should not be entered upon the roll to deprive the plaintiff of his costs, and give the defendant double costs, under the provisions of the Middlesex County Court Act (23 Geo. 2, c. 33, s. 119).

This action had been brought to recover a balance of a sum of money, and was, by a judge's order, directed to be tried before one of the Secondaries. On the 23rd of November last it came on for trial, when a verdict was returned for the plaintiff for 1*l.* 9*s.* 5*d.* Subsequently the plaintiff's attorney gave notice of taxing, but in consequence of the representation of the defendant, the Master postponed the taxation for a week. A judge's order was afterwards obtained, staying the proceedings, in order that the defendant might apply to this Court for leave to enter a suggestion. A rule was accordingly moved for and obtained on the 18th instant, being the eighth day of Term. Against this rule it was urged, as a preliminary objection, that the defendant had come to the court too late, and that he should have moved within the time limited for moving for a new trial. (Garratt v. Babington, 1 Dowl. & Lown. 820.)

WIGHTMAN, J.—I think as final judgment has not, in fact, been signed, and the costs taxed, that the defendant is in time.

Saunders.—There is then a complete answer to the rule in the fact that the cause of action did not arise within the jurisdiction of the Court of Requests. The Secondary's notes shew that the action was for work and labour and money laid out for the defendant in the borough of Southwark; and the cases of Bailey v. Chitty (2 M. & W. 28), and Thom v. Chinnock (8 Dowl. 585) are conclusive upon this point.

Chambers, contrà, admitted that he could not distinguish those cases from the present.

Rule discharged.

REG. v. THE TOWN COUNCIL OF ALDBOROUGH.

Quo warranto to members of a corporation.

Schomberg moved for a rule nisi for a quo warranto against Henry Mother and Christopher Churchill, for holding the offices of capital burgesses of the above town, they not having been duly elected. Rule nisi.

DAVIS v. TREVANION.

The 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 9, prescribing the form and requisites of attestations to warrants of attorney, applies to all instruments of that nature, though executed abroad.

An outlaw may come to the superior courts to set aside an illegal warrant of attorney.

Humfrey shewed cause against a rule obtained by Martin, Q.C. calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why the judgment signed on the 16th of August, 1841, on a warrant of attorney, and the sci. fa. issued to revive the same and all subsequent proceedings, should not be set aside, with costs, on the ground of the warrant of attorney not having been executed by the defendant in the presence of an attorney, pursuant to the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 9, and he contended,

1st. That as the warrant of attorney was executed by the defendant in France, the Act does not apply, for that the Legislature could not have contemplated a warrant of attorney executed abroad, where, perhaps, there were no attorneys.

2nd. That as the defendant is an outlaw he cannot be permitted to make this motion, the rule being that an outlaw shall not be permitted to take any step in a court of justice for his own advantage, until he has reversed his outlawry. (Walker v. Theluson, 1 Dowl. N.S. 277, 579; Hawkins v. ——, 1 Beavan, 73.)

Martin, Q. C. contrà, was stopped on the first point, the Court being with him, and argued on the second, that all the late cases have gone the length of holding that although an outlaw cannot commence proceedings for his own advantage, he may, nevertheless, come to the court to defend himself against an unjust or illegal demand.

WIGHTMAN, J. thought that the terms of the Act 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 9, were general and imperative, and applied to all warrants of attorney whatsoever and wheresoever; and that, notwithstanding the defendant was an outlaw, he was entitled to come to the court in this case, inasmuch as he was not instituting proceedings, but merely seeking to protect himself from an illegal demand.

Rule absolute, without costs.

REG. v. THE REGISTRAR OF DEEDS FOR THE COUNTY OF MIDDLESEX.

Mandamus to Registrar of Deeds to enrol a memorial.

Crowder, Q.C. moved for a mandamus commanding the Registrar of Deeds for the county of Middlesex to enrol the memorial of a deed creating a rent-charge according to the provisions of the statute of Anne. The memorial of the deed was lithographed, and no doubt the object of the rent-charge was to confer a vote for the county. The objection relied upon was, that the memorial was lithographed, whereas it was required by the statute to be in writing. Rule nisi.

WILDER v. BRYANT.

Motion to set aside interlocutory judgment.

V. Lee applied for leave to set aside the interlocutory judgment, which had been signed by the plaintiff herein, upon payment of costs, the defendant undertaking to withdraw all his pleas except the first and second. The defendant being under terms of pleading issuably, had delivered, in addition to the first and second pleas, to which no objection could be made, certain other pleas, which were not issuable, and the defendant had thereupon signed judgment as for want of a plea. He moved upon an affidavit of merits. Rule nisi.

Prohibition—Court of Requests.

Charnock mentioned this case, which was an application for a prohibition to the Southwark Court of Requests, to prohibit them from enforcing a judgment against the applicant, awarding the payment by him of a certain sum of money to the mother of a bastard child, of which he was said to be the father, for expenses incurred by her in support of the child. The applicant had never promised to pay the money, but the assessors of the court nevertheless insisted that they had an equitable jurisdiction over the matter. The case was originally moved before Wightman, J. and stood over to enable Charnock to refer to a case in which prohibition had been granted to a court of request. He now cited Roberts v. Humby (3 M. & W. 120). Rule nisi.

REG. v. THE MAYOR, ALDERMEN, AND BURGESSES OF LITCHFIELD.

Mandamus to a corporation to award compensation for loss of office.

Cole applied for a mandamus to the above defendants, commanding them to award compensation to a gentleman of the name of Simpson for the loss of the offices of town clerk and attorney and solicitor of the corporation of the borough of Litchfield. Mr. Simpson had been town clerk and attorney and solicitor of the borough for many years before the passing of the Municipal Corporations Reform Act, and was re-elected after the passing of that Act. He had, however, recently been dismissed from these offices, as the Town Council alleged, for misconduct on his part, but, as the applicant and two of the Town Council swore, for political reasons only. Rule nisi.

REG. v. GOMPERTZ and OTHERS.

Semble, it is sufficient to allege a county as venue in an indictment, without other parish or place.

Peacock moved to quash this indictment. The objection was that the allegation of venue was not sufficiently definite. The offence was alleged to have been committed at Gray's Inn, in the county of Middlesex. Now there was no such place as Gray's Inn, at least it was not such a place as a jury could come from, and was only a collection of buildings where students were called to the Bar. In R. v. Harris (2 Leach) an allegation at Guildhall, in the city of London, was held bad after verdict.

WILLIAMS, J.—Formerly, no doubt, it was necessary to allege some parish or place as venue from which the jury might be summoned, but I do not think that can be necessary now, as the jury come not de vicinatu, but de corpore comitatus. I think it is sufficient to allege a county as venue.

Ex parte LORD GIFFORD and TWO OTHERS.

Certiorari to remove recognizances of the peace entered into by a peer before a magistrate, refused, because not necessary, if the recognizances void.

J. W. Smith applied for a certiorari to bring up the recognizances of Lord Gifford and his two sureties into this Court. The applicants had been bound over to keep the peace by two magistrates of the county of Berks, and he objected—first, that justices of the peace have no jurisdiction to bind over a peer of the realm to keep the peace; citing 4 Blac. Com. 253, 254; Dalton, 68, Lambert, Book 2, C. 2, fol. 21; 1 Hawkins's Pleas of the Crown; R. v. Dunn (12 A. & E. 599; Corner's Crown Practice).

Pashley shewed cause in the first instance; citing Lambard, 82; 2 Hawkins, 429; Brooke; Corner's Crown Practice, 18.

WILLIAMS, J.—Without deciding the question, whether or not a peer can be bound over by a justice of the peace to keep the peace, I think I ought not to interfere on this application; for if the law be, as contended by Mr. Smith, that the recognizances are void, they of course are nothing worth, and Lord Gifford may take advantage of this circumstance in any proceedings that may be taken against him, without bringing them up into this Court to have them quashed.

Rule refused.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF BUCKINGHAMSHIRE.

A bastardy order under the 3rd sect. of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, must expressly state that the evidence upon which the order was made was taken upon oath, although it be not expressly required to be so taken in the Act.

Archbold had obtained a rule to shew cause why an order in bastardy, made by two justices of Bucks, under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, which had been brought up by certiorari, should not be quashed. The order was as follows:—

"At a petty session of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the county of Buckingham, holden in and for the Ivinghoe division of the three hundreds of Cottesloe, in the county of Buckingham, at the Town-hall at Ivinghoe, in the said division and county, on the fourth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-four, before us, the Rev. William Bruton Wroth, clerk, and the Rev. John Rich, clerk, two of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the said county.

WHEREAS one Mary Stilton, single woman, residing at the parish of Wingrove within this division and county, did, on the seventh day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-four, having been delivered of a male bastard child within twelve calendar months prior thereto, make application to William Jenney, esq. one of her Majesty's justices of the peace usually acting for this division and county, for a summons to be served upon one Thurston Earthrowl, of No. 13, Elizabeth-terrace, Liverpool-road, Islington, in the county of Middlesex, carpenter and joiner, whom she alleged to be the father of the said child, and the said justice thereupon issued his summons to the said Thurston Earthrowl to appear at a petty sessions to be holden on this day for this division and county to answer her complaint touching the premises; and whereas the said Mary Stilton hath been lately delivered of a male bastard child; and whereas the said Thurston Earthrowl, having been duly served with the said summons within forty days from the present time, and being now present, and the said Mary Stilton having now applied to us the justices in petty sessions assembled, for an order upon the said Thurston Earthrowl, according to the form of the statute in such case made and provided; and it now being proved to us, in the presence and hearing of the said Thurston Earthrowl, that the said child was, within six calendar months before the passing of an Act passed in the eighth year of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled 'An Act for the further Amendment of the Laws relating to the Poor in England,' that is to say on the thirty-first day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-four, born a bastard of the body of the said Mary Stilton.

AND we having, in the presence and hearing of the said Thurston Earthrowl, heard the evidence of such woman upon oath,(a) and such other evidence as she hath produced, and having also heard the said Thurston Earthrowl, by his attorney, and the evidence of the said Mary Stilton, the mother of the said child, having been corroborated in some material particular by other testimony to our satisfaction, do hereby adjudge, &c."

[Nothing turned upon the adjudication.]

The grounds upon which it was sought to quash this order were these:—1st, That it did not shew that the application was made by the mother to a justice of the petty sessional division in which she resided, as required by the third section of the Act, but simply a justice of the division, without saying of the petty sessional division. 2ndly, That it did not state that the child was born within six months before the passing of the Act, but merely that it was born within twelve months prior to the application. 3dly, That it did not appear that the justice before whom the original application was made was a justice of the county, but merely that he was a justice acting for the county. 4thly. That it was not stated that any complaint had been made to the justice. 5thly, That it did not shew at what time the mother was delivered of the said bastard child. 6thly, That the order recited an application for an order of bastardy, whereas it should have shewn not an application for an order, but an application that the evidence might be heard. 7thly, That it did not say that the evidence was heard upon oath. And, lastly, That it was not shewn in what material particular the evidence of the mother was corroborated.

Keane now shewed cause.—There are a variety of objections to this order, in which it is submitted there is nothing, and that this rule ought to be discharged.

(a) The words "upon oath" here were written, and not in the printed form.

The first objection is, that the application is not made to a justice then acting for the petty sessional division in which the mother resided. This turns on the clause of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 2, which directs "application to be made to any one Justice of the Peace acting for the Petty Sessional Division of the County, &c. in which she (the mother) may reside, for a Summons," &c. These words are directory only. It has been so held in construing statutes which mention justices of a certain division; and it is laid down in Paley on Convictions, p. 24, ed. 1838, that if any thing be directed to be done "in the division by the magistrates acting for the division, any magistrate of the county present at a meeting in the division is competent for that purpose." This is upheld also in 2 Keble, 559; 3 Keble, 383; 1 Sau. 263; Ashley's case, 2 Salk. 480; Ib. 473; Anon. 12 Mod. Rep. 546. It is necessary to obviate the inference which will be attempted to be drawn from Reg. v. Martin (2 Q. B. 1037, n.), which was an application under the ss. 94 & 95 of 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50, which provides that a bill of indictment may be ordered to be prepared for the non repair of a highway by the justices at a special sessions "to be held within the division in which the said highway may be situate." There the jurisdiction was held not to appear, where the sessions were not stated to be within such division. But a distinction may be well drawn between these cases; for Reg. v. Martin was on a statute in which the jurisdiction was exercised to prefer an indictment, but here only to make an order of maintenance. Previously to a recent case, it was held that the costs of such indictment must always fall on the parish, and the importance was great of having the proceeding in the neighbourhood of the locus in quo; but it is a very different thing in affiliating a child, where local knowledge is needless, neither have the overseers an interest in the order. [Wightman, J.—What are your other points, Mr. Archbold?] Archbold.—There are several, my lord. Keane.—My lord, it is extremely important to have the decision of the Court on this point. [Wightman, J.—What is meant by a petty sessional division?] Keane.—There is no such thing, my lord. Neither in Burn's Justice of the Peace nor in Archbold's Poor Law can I find any such term once named. Archbold.—It is named in 9 Geo. 4, c. 43, s. 6. Keane.—Indeed there is not a word about it in the whole Act; the only mention is of a "lawful division for holding special sessions." [Wightman, J. State some of your other material objections.] Archbold.—The whole of the first part of the order is bad, as shewing no jurisdiction. (He referred to the second ground.) It may have been that the woman was delivered more than six months before the Act passed. Keane.—The very words of the order are within six calendar months since, and the date of the birth is stated. Archbold.—That is under a videlicet. But there is no statement that the woman was residing in the petty sessional division at the time of the application, which is the groundwork of the jurisdiction. It is very well to say there is a distinction between this case and that in Reg. v. Martin, but it is a distinction without a difference. [Wightman, J.—In that case it was important that it should be in the neighbourhood. Then there is the case in Salkeld.] Archbold.—That had nothing to do with this case at all, and referred to 2 & 3 Chas. 2. [Wightman, J.—We ought to have it, to see what the words were. What other objection have you?] Archbold.—The evidence of the corroborating witnesses does not appear on the order to have been taken on oath. Keane.—There is nothing in the statute which requires it to be taken upon oath. Section 3 merely directs the justices "to hear the evidence of," &c. Not a word does it contain about being taken on oath. [Wightman, J.—Then you mean that it is unnecessary for the justices to take evidence on oath?] Keane.—No; they will be presumed to have done rightly. Either the language of the statute includes and imports that the evidence was taken on oath, or it does not do so. If it does, then, as it follows the express words of the statute, the order includes and imports that it was so taken. If the statute does not include and import that the evidence was on oath, then it is not requisite that it should be so taken or so stated. Orders of removal have been held valid though not founded on examination taken upon oath. (Hunger Munger v. Warden, 2 Sess. Ca. 40; 2 Bott, 817.) The order in Reg. v. Lewis (8 Ad. & Ell. 881) does not allege that the evidence was on oath, neither do the forms settled by Mr. Archbold's New Poor Law Act, 5th ed. p. 28. We have followed the statute, and shewed that we have done all the preliminary acts essential to the jurisdiction. Archbold.—The order must expressly state the evidence to have been on oath, though the statute states nothing about it. (Reg. v. Jones, New Sess. Cases, pt. 2; Ex parte Gray, 1 Bit. & Sym. 116), which was on the Masters and Servants Act, the 4 Geo. 4, c. 34; and there it was held that the jurisdiction was not sufficiently shewn, for it was not stated that the justices took the evidence on oath. Keane.—The statute requires the complaint to be on oath there. [Wightman, J.—Let me see the Act; it states that the complaint must be on oath.] Archbold.—But afterwards there is no such direction. [Wightman, J.—The words are simply to empower the justice to issue his warrant for apprehending such labourer, &c. and to examine into the nature of the complaint; "and if it appear, &c. it shall be lawful," &c. What are the other objections?] Archbold.—To state that a justice acts for the county is not enough; it should state he is of the county, for otherwise he may be a justice of Cornwall acting, without any right to do so, for Berkshire. The authority to make it must appear on the face of the order; the Court will intend nothing in favour of the jurisdiction, but only in favour of that which follows the jurisdiction. (Reg. v. Spackman, 2 Q. B. 301.) Acting may mean playing. The most rigid observance is required of the preliminaries of jurisdiction. (Reg. v. Cartworth, 3 G. & Dav. 163.) Keane.—Rex v. Dobbyn (1 Salk. 474) decides that a statement of the justices in the county would be wrong, but a statement of justices for the county is sufficient; and the case of Rex v. Andover (Cald. 373) also decides that justices acting for the division must imply that they were justices acting for the county.

Wightman, J.—This rule must be made absolute. The objection upon the ground that part of the material evidence is not stated to have been taken on oath by the justices at the petty sessions is an important one. It certainly does not appear here that the evidence was so taken. The cases of Reg. v. Jones and Ex parte Gray are decidedly authorities in this case, for they were upon a statute which does not expressly state that the evidence should be upon oath, and neither does this; and yet it was held in those cases that the order was fatally defective on that ground.

Morris v. Goodyear.—Borill shewed cause against a rule obtained herein by Payne for a new trial. Dowling, Serjt. and Payne, contrà.

Rule absolute, costs in the cause, to be tried at the next Hertford Assizes.

Bankrupt and Insolvent Courts.

COUNTRY COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

BRISTOL DISTRICT BANKRUPTCY COURT.

(Before Mr. Commissioner Stevenson.)

Wednesday, Jan. 8.

Re Drury.

An insolvent will not be allowed to amend his schedule by inserting debts wilfully omitted, unless the creditors do not object.

Cole, in shewing cause against the final order, stated, that the insolvent had wilfully omitted several debts in his schedule, and fraudulently removed property.

The omission of debts was clearly established by Cole's examination of the insolvent.

Homes, in support of the insolvent, asked leave to amend.

His Honour.—This petition must be dismissed. It is impossible to shut out from my mind the conviction that the omission of these debts was wilful; and as the opposing creditor prays for a dismissal of the petition, I will not, in such a case, allow the debts wilfully omitted to be inserted.

Petition dismissed.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

Parliament meets on Tuesday. As the facts will so soon be known, it would be idle to waste words upon rumours and conjectures.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

It will be seen by the Report, that the much disputed Bastardy Order of Mr. Lumley has been formally upset by a decision of the Queen's Bench; one of the many objections being held fatal, the rest were not adjudicated.

We trust that the Forms just issued at the Law Times Office will be found better to endure scrutiny. The utmost care has been taken in their preparation; they have been submitted to some of the most experienced members of both branches of the Profession, and whatever caution and skill could do to perfect them has been done.

As yet only the eight Forms most in request have been issued. A list of them will be found in the Advertisements, and orders are requested to be given with the description in that list.

Some misunderstanding appears to exist as to the publication of these Forms in a collected shape. It is, therefore, necessary to explain, that it is intended to add to the practical utility both of the Magistrates' Cases and the Criminal Law Cases published for the Verulam Society, by the addition of Forms relating to their subjects, which will be bound as an Appendix to each Volume. These sheets will also be printed and supplied as a distinct issue, for the use of such as may not take the Reports; but some time must elapse before a sheet of these Forms will be collected.

At present, therefore, be it understood, Mr. SYMONS'S Forms in Bastardy can only be had in quires for use, but one copy of each will be sent to any person observing the directions in the advertisement.

BASTARDY FORMS.

THE rule obtained by Mr. ARCHBOLD for quashing one of Mr. LUMLEY'S orders for the maintenance of a bastard child was argued in the Bail Court on Thursday, and quashed. A full report of the case will be found under the head of the Bail Court Reports in this day's LAW TIMES. Mr. ARCHBOLD had very judiciously selected eight of the chief objections to these forms. But Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN seemed, from the first, more inclined to dismiss the matter in the shortest time, than to afford a guide to the Profession as to the validity of the various objections raised, and on which so much doubt prevails. His lordship accordingly, after a cross fire between the counsel on each side, as the points were rapidly passed in review for his lordship's selection, decided the case upon the omission of an averment that the corroborating testimony was given on oath. We do not suppose that any question could ever have existed as to this gross defect in the mind of competent lawyers from the time of Dalton downwards, where it is laid down (we fancied with sufficient clearness) that in all cases where justices may take examinations, or rather accusations, or proof, though the statute does not expressly set down that it shall be on oath, yet it shall be intended that it shall be on oath (Dalt. c. 115); and so it has been held in other cases besides those cited in the argument by Mr. ARCHBOLD.

As far as the anxiety of the judge to find out and decide on th worst point permitted, the Lumley cause was valiantly fought, and very ably argued by Mr. KEANE. The decision is, to our minds, unsatisfactory. It needed not to put the Queen's Bench in motion to assure us that the forms in question were bad; on that point no doubt existed. Mr. ARCHBOLD had, however, raised some points on which doubt could exist, and in default of any decision on Thursday upon them, still exists. With very great deference to the learned and amiable judge who presided in the Bail Court on this occasion, we must say that his lordship has lost an opportunity of doing an essential service to the Profession, and especially to country practitioners. His lordship was especially pressed by Mr. KEANE to allow him to go fully into the question of a statement of jurisdiction. The few arguments and cases which were shot forth in the running fire kept up, as his lordship turned from point to point, have been preserved in our report. We have no room for further comment this week.

PERPLEXITY BY ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

IF the LAW TIMES did no other service to the commonweal than by recording the perplexities of her Majesty's subjects under the manifold inflictions of legislation, we should deserve well of the State. We do not speak of bad laws in a political sense, that being a matter far beyond our province, but of overmuch legislation—vexing, teasing, meddlesome, troublesome changes. Parishes, and parish-officers, and all within their sphere, seem to have been especially selected as a favourite field for the freaks of experimental law-making. It seems to be the delight of the powers that be, for refreshment after their sterner pursuits, to play at parish law. We give additional proofs, in the letters below, of the difficulties which encompass men of business, whose time and talents deserve better treatment for them, than to be thus harassed by incompetent legislation:—

THE BASTARDY FORMS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Mr. Lumley's forms are certainly very deficient; but if the objection is good that the evidence of the mother cannot be taken on appeal, no form will be of any avail; and I cannot help thinking the objection is fatal. It is true that under the old bastardy law the mother was always a witness, but the orders were always made upon the application of the parish-officers, who were always the respondents and the interested party; but, under the present law, the woman is the real defendant, and to whom the money is to be paid, and therefore in truth she is the only party who is interested, and also the party whose name is on the record. J. M.

We are much obliged to our respected correspondent for his frank statement, and are at all times favoured by any endeavours to advance discussion, even if opposed to our own views. We have already given, at some length, our grounds for the belief that by inference, based on the obvious intent of the statute as well as ex necessitate rei, the mother's evidence is receivable before the Quarter Sessions, on appeal against a bastardy order, and to this opinion we adhere. In fact, we find that, at present, no one has been sufficiently enterprising to bring the question before the Queen's Bench. Until this occur, we and our correspondent J. M. must agree to differ. To admit the objection nullifies the entire provisions for appeal in the Act, but the authorities are abundant that Acts are not to be so construed as to nullify themselves; and furthermore, that a provision in one clause is to be extended to another rather than that the latter should be void.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—In answer to your correspondent "W. P. P." that my plan of proving chargeability is incomplete, I did not think it necessary to trouble you or your readers with what, of course, all are aware of, viz. that it is always part of the proof by the relieving officer to state "for and on account of" which parish the relief is given; and this the officer is enabled from his own knowledge to do; at least in this union. The proof of chargeability by the certificate alone frequently fails, or at any rate gives rise to discussions by counsel for hours together. It was only the other day, at the Suffolk Sessions at Woodbridge, an appeal lasted two days, and one of the points was the certificate, which the Sessions pronounced bad. It was with the idea of avoiding these technical difficulties which made me mention what I still consider the best method of proving a simple fact.

I think "W. P. P." is wrong in his opinion that the bastardy order is incorrect in stating the deposition of the woman after birth was, in the first instance, taken by a justice on oath. What objection is there to this course? From the well-known authority of Paley, there can be no doubt of the jurisdiction of the justice to administer an oath; nor is it at all contrary to the common practice in justiciary proceedings to attach a request or application to a deposition, as every magistrate's clerk is aware.(a)

Section 2 of the late Act, as far as relates to an application after birth, and also section 3 in proceedings before the justices at the special sessions, are silent in both instances as to taking the evidence on oath; and the consequence has been, that an objection has been taken to the orders omitting the statement of the evidence being taken on oath.

Surely, then, Mr. Editor, if the magistrate can legally administer the oath in the first instance, the most prudent course must be to do so, the omission of which may, some time or other, form one of those technical objections which are now always raised.

I sincerely hope no other objection may be taken to the order. Yours, &c.

Stowmarket, Jan. 29, 1845. J. M.

(a) [But never to an information, unless expressly required by statute (1 Burn's Just. Peace, 963, edit. 1845). Why the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, should require the oath when the woman is pregnant, and not when she is delivered, we should be glad to learn.—ED. LAW T.]

EVIDENCE OF CHARGEABILITY.

THE following may serve as a useful Form. The correspondent who favours us with it broadly condemns the Certificate; but has he read the 69th sec. of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, which removes some of his objections?

County of Wilts, to wit. { The Information, &c. of John Smith, &c. who saith, I am one of the relieving officers of Union, situate in the counties of Wilts and Berks, and of and for the parish of , in the said county of Wilts, and within the said Union,—on the day of last, John Stiles, and Ann his wife, and their four children, &c. became chargeable to the said parish of , and I relieved them for and on the behalf of the overseers of the said parish of , by giving to the said John Stiles the sum of one shilling, and weekly and every week the sum of four shillings —(or gallons of bread) for relief; and the said John Stiles has, since the said day of last, continued weekly and every week to receive the like relief. And I do now relieve him with the same relief, and he is, with his said wife and children, now actually chargeable to the said parish of .

If paupers are in Union House, the chargeability might be thus stated:—

The said John Stiles, &c. were on the day of last admitted as inmates of the workhouse of the said Union, situate in the parish of aforesaid, as paupers chargeable to the said parish of , and they are now actually chargeable to and relieved by the said parish of , by their being maintained in the said workhouse at the expense of ten shillings weekly and every week, which said cost of relief and maintenance is charged to and is paid by the said parish of .

THE RIGHT OF VOTING IN PARISHES.—The following circular, addressed to the overseers of the poor, has been issued from the Poor Law Commission-office, Somerset-house. It is dated Jan. 24, 1845:—"Gentlemen,—I am directed by the Poor Law Commissioners to state, that having ascertained that in your parish the amount of the population, according to the last census, exceeds 2,000 persons, they deem it right to refer you to the provisions contained in the 15th section of the Act of the last session of Parliament for the amendment of the Poor Laws (7 & 8 Vict. c. 101), which require that you should, on or before the 5th of February next, enter in the proper book the names and addresses of all persons who, before the first day of February next, shall have given to you the statements of their claims to vote as owners of property or proxies; and that you shall allow any person to peruse such book, without payment of any fee, at all reasonable hours, between the said 5th day and the 10th day of February next. The Commissioners trust that you will not neglect these provisions, as the consequence of any neglect may be serious to the persons entitled to vote in the election of guardians. The Commissioners think it, moreover, right to inform you, that the wilful omission of this duty by the overseers would render them liable to an indictment. I am, gentlemen, your most obedient servant, W. G. LUMLEY, Assistant Secretary."

From Mr. Charles Willick's Annual Supplement to the Tithe commutation Tables for 1845, we gather the following general results. The average prices for last year were:—

51s. 3d. per imperial quarter, for wheat,
33s. 8d. ,, ,, barley,
20s. 7d. ,, ,, oats.

The average prices for seven years to Christmas last, amount to 7s.7d. per imp. bush. or 60s.8d. per imp. qr. for wheat,

4s. 1¼d ,, ,, 32s. 10d. ,, ,, barley,
2s. 9d. ,, ,, 32s. 0d. ,, ,, oats.

Each 100*l*. of rent-charge in 1845 will amount to 103*l*. 17s. 11¼d. or 5. 6d. per cent. less than the amount of last year.

The following buildings have been duly registered for the solemnization of marriages, pursuant to the Act of the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 85. The Baptist Chapel, situated in the parish of Wattisham, Suffolk, in the district of Cosford; Ebenezer Chapel, South Brent, Somersetshire; Orange-street Chapel, Orange-street, St. Martin's-in-the-Fields; Baptist Chapel, Bingley, Yorkshire.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

THE business of the Term has been so protracted by long arguments in two or three cases, that it is doubtful if even the sittings after Term will not leave a heavy arrear. A vast number of cases are standing over for judgment, and for three weeks, at least, we expect to have our columns deluged with them. But it is the most valuable and the most interesting matter we could present to our readers, for they can nowhere beside procure it. There can be no difference of opinion as to the importance of verbatim copies of the written judgments, containing the results of the mature deliberations of the judges. We believe the LAW TIMES is the only record in which all these are to be found. It will be seen that Mr. Baron PLATT has taken his seat in the Exchequer, and the talked-of exchanges have not been made.

A discussion has been proceeding in the daily papers upon the inconvenience attending the acceptance of briefs by counsel, who often, when the cause comes on for hearing, are engaged in another court. We have made some comments on this subject in a leading article, but we are compelled by an influx of reports to postpone the correspondence until next week.

PROMOTIONS, APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

WHITEHALL, Jan. 25.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint Francis Hart Dyke, Esq., to be her Majesty's Procurator in all causes and matters Maritime, Foreign, Civil, and Ecclesiastical, in the room of Iltid Nicholl, Esq., deceased.

The Queen has been pleased to grant unto William Prior Johnson Richardson, of Bridgend-cottage, near Bexley, in the county of Kent, esquire, eldest son and heir of James Richardson (afterwards James Richardson William Prior Johnson), of Stockhouse, in the parish of Stock, in the county of Essex, gentleman, deceased, and grandson of Thomas Richardson, of Lambeth, in the county of Surrey, gentleman, by Hannah, his wife, daughter and coheir of William Prior Johnson, of Stock aforesaid, esq., also deceased, her Majesty's royal license and authority, that he and his issue already born, and hereafter to be born, may take and use the surname of William Prior Johnson, in lieu of that of Richardson, in compliance with an injunction contained in the last will and testament of the said William Prior Johnson, deceased; and also to command that the said Royal concession and declaration be recorded in her Majesty's College of Arms.

CROWN-OFFICE, Jan. 28.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint Henry John Shepherd, Esq., one of her Majesty's Counsel learned in the law, to be one of the Commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy, in the place of Sir Charles Frederick Williams, deceased.

The Queen has been pleased to appoint Edmund Murray Dodd, esq. to be her Majesty's Solicitor-General for the province of Nova Scotia.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Charles Wyatt Estcourt, of Newport, in the Isle of Wight, gent.; Richard Harvey, of Dover, in the county of Kent, gent.; Josias Bull York, of Foleshill, in the county of Warwick, gent.; Richard Grave Hindson, of Penrith, in the county of Cumberland, gent., to be Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

THE NEW JUDGE.—It affords us great pleasure to state, that the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Baron Gurney has been filled up by the appointment of Mr. Thomas Platt, Queen's Counsel. The zeal and ability by which his professional career has been distinguished fully entitle him to the honourable promotion he has received. It is peculiarly gratifying to us who took an early interest in his success, and who have for a long series of years profited by his advice and assistance, to be able to congratulate him sincerely on his receiving the only reward that can compensate in any degree for the laborious duties of the Profession. We wish others had been spared to experience the satisfaction we now feel at his success. Mr. Shepherd, Queen's Counsel, has been appointed Commissioner of Bankrupts, in the place of Sir C. F. Williams. Mr. Shepherd was entitled to compensation exceeding 1,200*l.* per annum as Clerk of the Custodies, upon the abolition of that office in 1842, and this sum will therefore be saved by the appointment. Mr. Shepherd is the son of the late Mr. Samuel Shepherd, formerly Attorney-General, and afterwards Chief Baron of Scotland.—Times.—Monday.

WHITEHALL, JAN. 7. The Right Hon. Sir Nicolas Conyngham Tindal, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas, has appointed Edward Handscomb, of Ampthill, in the county of Bedford, to be one of the Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women, in and for the county of Bedford.

NEW QUEEN'S COUNSEL.—It was generally rumoured in Westminster Hall yesterday morning, that the following gentlemen of the bar, in the course of a few days, will be raised to the dignity of Queen's counsel, viz. Mr. Humfrey, Mr. Montague Chambers, Mr. Russell Gurney, and Mr. Butt.

GRAY'S-INN. January 29.—George Baker Ballachey, Esq., and William Redfern, Esq. were this day called to the degree of barrister-at-law by the Hon. Society of Gray's-Inn.

CALLS TO THE BAR.—Lincoln's-Inn, Jan. 29.—The undermentioned gentlemen having kept their full number of terms as members of this hon. society, they were this evening sworn in, in the usual manner, before several of the benchers, and admitted to the degree of barrister-at-law;—Mr. Augustus Robinson, of Balliol College, Oxford, the only son of Mr. Mathew Robinson; Mr. Thomas Yate Lee, of University College, London, the only son of Mr. Thomas Eyre Lee; Mr. William Sidney Gibson, of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, only son of the late Mr. Benjamin Gibson, merchant; Mr. Edward Buckle, of Great Marlborough-street, the eldest son of Mr. John Buckle; Mr. John Colpitts Dean, of Christ College, Cambridge, M.A. the only son of Mr. John Dean; Mr. James Lea, of Worcester College, Oxford, M.A. the only son of Mr. James Lea; Mr. Cornwall Simeon, of Christ Church, Oxford, M.A. the third son of Sir Richard Simeon; Mr. Alexander Perceval, of Trinity College, Dublin, M.A. the third son of Mr. Alexander Perceval; and Mr. James Shank, of ——, Oxford, M.A. the second son of Mr. Henry Shank.

NEW MAGISTRATES AT NORWICH.—It is understood that Dr. Lynn, W. Martin, J. G. Johnson, and J. H. Barnard, esqrs. have been added to the commission of the peace for Norwich. These gentlemen are all Conservatives, and occupy, deservedly, a high place in public estimation.

QUEEN'S COUNSEL.—We understand that previous to the ensuing spring assizes several gentlemen at the bar will be raised to the dignity of Queen's counsel.—Standard.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

OPINION OF SIR JOHN DODSON AND MR. BETHELL, Q. C., on the power of the House of Convocation at Oxford to degrade Mr. Ward from his degree.—A case was submitted to Sir John Dodson, the Queen's Advocate, and Mr. Bethell, Queen's Counsel, to elicit their opinion whether the House of Convocation has the power to degrade Mr. Ward for a theological offence such as that imputed to him; and whether it has the power to pass the proposed new "test?" Sir John and Mr. Bethell delivered an opinion against the competency of the University on both points, as follows:—

"We are of opinion that the House of Convocation has not the power of depriving Mr. Ward of his degrees, in the manner or on the grounds proposed.

"A degree is a certain dignity or title of honour which the University derives its right to confer by grant from the Crown; and to the rank or status thus conferred the law has annexed many privileges, both ecclesiastical and civil. The University can have no power of taking away this dignity and the franchises with which it is accompanied, unless such power be derived from the same source,—namely, royal grant,- or has been created by some statute or law which has received the sanction of the Crown, or been confirmed by Act of Parliament.

"But, upon an examination of the statutes of the University, we do not find any statute which confers upon or recognizes in the House of Convocation a jurisdiction or authority to deprive any one of its members of his University franchise, except only in the subordinate office of publicly executing the antecedent decree of a court of competent jurisdiction; and we are therefore of opinion, that the proposed act of degradation will, if it passes, be illegal; and inasmuch as by its consequences it would deprive Mr. Ward of certain legal rights, we think it may be properly made the subject of application to the Court of Queen's Bench; and that such Court would by mandamus compel the University to restore Mr. Ward to his degrees, and to the status and privileges which he now holds in respect of them.

"We desire to observe, that we give no opinion on the question whether Mr. Ward, by the publication of the doctrines contained in his book, has or has not committed an offence against ecclesiastical law, which might be made the subject of a proper judicial proceeding before a competent tribunal; but simply, that in our view of the case the House of Convocation is not such a tribunal, and that the notion that it can degrade by virtue of some general or legislative power appears to us to be erroneous.

"Should the resolution pass, Mr. Ward may have another remedy, namely, an appeal to the Crown as Visitor of the University; and this may be resorted to even if the Court of Queen's Bench should, on an application for a mandamus decline to interfere.

"With respect to the second statute, which in effect proposes to annex a new sense to subscription, we are of opinion that it is contrary to law. The law requires the clerical subscriber to take the Articles in their literal and grammatical sense; but the proposed statute requires him to take them in that sense in which he believes them to have been originally framed and promulgated, and also in the sense in which he believes them to be now accepted and taken by that body which at the time of his subscription constitutes the University. Thus the belief or conjecture of the subscriber upon these two difficult subjects of inquiry is substituted for the legal interpretation. Should this statute pass, protesting members of Convocation might perhaps appeal to the Queen in her capacity of Visitor of the University; but a shorter remedy will be to apply for a prohibition, in case the Vice-Chancellor shall proceed to require any member to subscribe the Articles with the proposed declaration.

SIR W. FOLLETT.—We have more than ordinary pleasure in being enabled to state, on the best authority, that very favourable accounts have been received of Sir William Follett's health, and that there is every hope of his immediate return to this country, and of his being sufficiently re-established to undertake the discharge of his duties in Parliament at the commencement of the session.—Western Luminary.

IRISH LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

Dublin, Wednesday evening, January 29th.

JUDGES' COUNCIL CHAMBER.

MEETING OF THE BENCHERS—MR. HARDY'S CASE.

Yesterday, at two o'clock, the Benchers of the Hon. Society of the King's Inns met in the Judges' Council Chamber, pursuant to adjournment, for the purpose of further considering the charges made against Mr. J. J. Hardy on the preceding Tuesday. As on the previous day, the public were excluded, and accordingly, as may be supposed, the general curiosity to know the probable result was rather increased than diminished by the circumstance of the inquiry being conducted with so much privacy. I have every reason, however, to believe that the Benchers have not yet come to any determination upon the subject, but have merely appointed a committee of three of their number to investigate the entire matter, and report thereon to their brethren. It would be improper, at the present stage of the proceedings, and amid such a scarcity of accurate information, to venture any prediction as to the conclusion at which the members of the Bench may ultimately arrive, or to say more than that the impression seems to gain ground that the result will be satisfactory to the high character of the profession, and tend rather to increase than diminish the confidence so generally reposed in its members by the public.

The Queen's Bench have deferred until next term giving judgment in the very important case of Conway and Lynch in error v. The Queen. The point involved is, whether a jury can, without any fatality occurring to any of them, and without the consent of the prisoner, be discharged without giving a verdict (see the circuit report of this case in 3 Law T. p. 23). It is much to be regretted, that the opinion of the Court will not be made known before the spring circuits go out, as a similar discharge of jurors has been hitherto by no means of unfrequent occurrence. The prisoners have been further respited.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CERTIFICATE DUTY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

SIR,—Much has been said for and against professional gowns for attorneys. To that much I wish to add but little. I desire to offer no objection to the wearing of gowns by those who would like to appear in them, but I, for one, amongst others with whom I have talked on the matter, should be extremely sorry were any compulsory order made in any quarter for their adoption, as I have no fancy for being encumbered with any thing of the kind.

One reason—the main one, I think—advanced for the gown is the want of some professional distinction for the attorney as a ready passport into the public courts. If, for the convenience of professional men, it is necessary that they should be armed with something of an official character, I take leave to suggest that, in lieu of gowns, they shall each on their admission be provided with a neat medal, about the size of a penny-piece, bearing some appropriate device on each side of it, which could not readily be counterfeited; as, for instance, the royal arms on one side, and on the reverse side the words, "Attorneys' and Solicitors' Admission Ticket to the Courts of Law and Equity in England;" to which might be added the year when the medal was struck off, and a small ring should be affixed to the medal, for attaching a piece of ribbon. This ticket would at once give uniformity of admission to all the Courts throughout the country, whilst the issuing of admission tickets by the several under-sheriffs or other authorities of the different counties, as suggested by one of your correspondents, would most likely be subject to a variety of regulations, according to the views of those in office, never to be learnt by the profession.

It is not likely, I think, that on the subject of gowns the profession will pull together; but there is one question, at present above all others, on which they ought to unite as one man, and make a vigorous and determined effort,—that for the repeal of the unjust and galling certificate duty. How such a tax ever got imposed upon the legal profession, all other professions and businesses going free, I cannot for my life discern. Perhaps, because its members always maintained a respectable appearance and standing, it was concluded that their occupation afforded them the means of a superabundant revenue. If the profession were a lucrative one at that time, it is certainly no longer so. We hear of tradesmen retiring from business with ample competencies, and also of merchants and commercial men realizing splendid fortunes; and this from businesses which interfere but little, if at all, with either body or mind. Do these gentlemen pay any thing in the shape of a certificate duty?—Not a farthing. How stands the attorney? With the exception of a few of the older members, attached to the larger houses and firms, it is now utterly impossible for the general body of professional men to do more than maintain themselves and families in respectability, and that only by hard plodding from day to day, the mind being generally at the utmost stretch, in an arduous profession. Ample competencies and splendid fortunes for them are out of the question. Their wives and children must be provided for, if possible, by life policies, and such precautionary provisions; whilst, in too many cases, the widows of professional men have no other resource but that of an application for the limited bounty of some law society. Such is the position of those who have to pay an annual certificate duty. Surely the State, in exacting the willingly-paid stamp duties upon the articles and admission of attorneys, gets enough, without also wringing from them a yearly bonus. But the question is one which, in my opinion, only wants clearly and calmly explaining to and discussing with Government. The Metropolitan Legal Association can do much in this matter, but they must be backed by petitions, numerously signed, from all parts of the country. Every member, too, of the House of Commons ought to be written to on the subject, ere Parliament meets, by some attorney connected with his election.

Thanking you for your past efforts on behalf of the profession, I am, Sir, yours very respectfully,

Yorkshire. CHAS. WILTON.

ARTICLES OF CLERKSHIP.

SIR,—The case of "E. L.," stated in his letter, inserted in the LAW TIMES of January 11th, being precisely my own case in 1832, he will, perhaps, be glad to know how I acted under the same circumstances.

Not having served the last six months of my original term, which had then expired, I laid a statement of my case before Master Le Blanc, and I have no doubt that I could find among my papers the advice he kindly gave me, and on which I acted.

I entered into a fresh contract with another solicitor to serve him for six months. The circumstances of the case were recited. The gentleman to whom I was originally articled was not a party; and the contract was on a 1*l.* 15*s.* stamp.

I should advise "E. L." however, to apply for admission without a fresh service, for I apprehend that the latter deed, which he describes, operated as a fresh contract, "E. L." having covenanted to serve C. for six months. I am, Sir, yours, &c.

WILLIAM GILES.

Shepton Mallet, January 27th, 1845.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

A transmits the following powerfully written letter on the evils of the profession generally. There is too much truth in some of his sarcastic hints. We shall be delighted to have the frequent aid of so able a correspondent in the good work he advocates.

No sane man denies that the law is an honourable profession, and you and others are nobly seeking to have it honourably pursued.

But the cultivation of conventionality is, after all, only rather sorry intellectual husbandry.

Bear with me, when I remind you that there are graver evils than advertising for business; grosser and more startling iniquities than unprofessionally asking leave to toil, at some sacrifice of toil's fair and accustomed recompence.

Advertising barristers and attorneys merely exhibit misguided industry and execrable taste; but "sham attorneys" are impudent vagabonds, and ought not to be classed with those guilty only of a foolish fussiness, which must eventually be its own punishment.

And shall you or I pronounce that these advertisements are not wrong from poverty? Shall we adjudge that they do not babble of the somewhat needful adjuncts of bread and breeches?

"Nevertheless they are wrong," you say; and echo, like a sycophant, softly says "they are wrong."

True; let us first crush the camel, and then crack the gnat.

Let us make people more like the excellent Mrs. Kenwigs, who was on all occasions "severely proper," after we have made them less like Ralph Nickleby.

Silly or excusable selfishness may be safely enough left to that knowing abstraction, called by puffing tradesmen "the discerning public;" but sinful selfishness—the making a merchandise of misery—is a very vicious bull, and should be taken firmly by the horns.

Therefore, I respectfully suggest that you give stiff battle to some of the mightier grievances.

Knavery flourishes, Sir; fraud thrives; the law is oftentimes wrested to feed fat ancient grudges; and, worse than all, because least remediable, to pander to what Virgil and collegians delicately call "auri sacra fames," but what a purer poetry and more practical philosophy emphatically terms "filthy lucre."

Set yourself, Sir, against the monstrous practice that gives lawyers a direct interest in perpetuating quarrels.

Agitate, I pray you, that the high principle of amicable arrangement may be rewarded with the highest fees, and that the low practice of unnecessary litigation may be requited with fees correspondingly low.

Struggle, I beseech you, to abolish the absurd distinction between civil and criminal fraud.

Assuredly there is no greater stain upon our law than that the educated and accomplished knave can easily escape, whilst his clumsier brother-criminal, whose wits are more abroad, soon gets his person sent abroad after them, doubtless to preserve the mystic connection between the body and the mind;—

the body atoning in suffering for what the mind has lacked in cunning.

It is impossible to imagine any thing more subversive of national honesty than this nonsensical distinction of fraud from felony. The only difference between scientific and simple knavery is that the scientific is infinitely the more base.

Enduring laurels must crown the editor who boldly exposes all bad laws and bad men; who fights against all manner of scoundrelism, polished or rude, sentimental or sneaking.

Honour to you, Sir, for the spirit of your exertions to purify the legal profession.

But so long as lying pleas can lawfully give opportunity to effectuate swindling bills of sale; so long as dishonest or partial executors can lawfully give preferences to favoured creditors; so long as reckless trading and extravagance seem to differ in nothing from misfortune at the Bankruptcy Courts; so long as Chancery is practically closed where might happens not to be associated with right; so long as law and lay rascality can prosper on clever management, and fail only by bungling; so long, above all, as to the lawyer litigation is gain, and peace poverty: so long, Mr. Editor, as this frightful mass of moral disease taints "Our Glorious Constitution," you have, in all conscience, enough to counteract and cure, before blistering briefless barristers, and physicking sham attorneys.

All I ask you to do is to direct your powerful energies to the professional heart, and afterwards, if necessary, to cut the corns.

To Readers and Correspondents.

H. E. B.—This is a query prohibited by our rule.

H. W. H.—The Court would certainly remedy such a defect on affidavit and motion, even if it were in itself a fatal error in the articles, which we much doubt.

An Attorney.—We have no doubt that the advertising Barrister is a very good teacher, and that many can testify to his services. Our complaint against him is, that we deem it unprofessional to solicit pupils by personal application. We may be wrong in this; but the best proof that the advertisers in question have some doubt of the propriety of their own proceedings, is the fact that they solicit by anonymous letters. If they deem themselves entitled to solicit pupils, why do they not append their names to their applications? Why address initials, or subscribe Alpha? The manner of doing it is even worse than the act itself.

TO READERS.

In reply to some inquiries as to the Table of Abbreviations used in citing the Reports, it is necessary to explain that in its completed form, mounted upon mill-board, it is too large and heavy for the post. Persons desirous of having it in that shape are therefore requested either to order it through their country booksellers, or direct the Publisher in what manner it shall be conveyed to them by parcel.

THE CERTIFICATE DUTY.

Last week we published the circular issued by the Legal Association, with a form of petition for the repeal of the Certificate Duty. We learn that a very large proportion of these petitions have been already returned, signed by every attorney resident in their several localities. It is desirable that such as may have had no opportunity of signing them, through absence or otherwise, should forward their names to the secretary.

We trust that the London solicitors will follow the example so promptly set by their brethren in the country. To them it is a matter of even greater moment, inasmuch as the duty levied upon them is higher than that imposed upon the country practitioners. An annuity of 12*l.* per annum at this time, when the rate of interest is so low, is a consideration worth a little trouble and effort. The petition lies with the secretary; let our metropolitan readers lose no time in signing it.

BRIEFS TO COUNSEL.

From a correspondence in the daily papers, we have extracted into the summary of Legal Intelligence three letters upon a subject which we know to be privately the theme of a great deal of indignant commentary among the attorneys, who not unfrequently have substantial cause for the complaint, inasmuch as they are the parties on whom the wrath of disappointed clients is visited, while the party really at fault escapes all the blame, and pockets all the profit.

We allude to the practice, which is undoubtedly in strict accordance with the established etiquette of the Profession, of counsel accepting briefs with heavy fees, and then, in consequence of their being engaged in other causes in other courts, being absent at the hearing, the entire conduct of the case is consigned to the junior, who cannot be expected to be so competent to the work of a leader as a man whose knowledge is aided by experience.

At this time, when the Profession is making glorious efforts for its purification, and for the exaltation of its social position, by proving itself worthy of public respect, it behoves us no more to shrink from the investigation of alleged grievances which have been established than from the exposure and redress of abuses not recognized. Any practice which may be proved unjust or inconvenient ought to be abolished without hesitation, however sanctioned by time and use. The question now occurs, is the alleged practice a grievance? Let us look it fairly in the face.

The legal fiction of the counsel's fee being mere honorarium, which he condescends to accept, but for which he has no equitable or legal claim, we lay aside as one of the few tamperings with the truth that yet linger in our legal system. We have to deal with the fact, and, disguise it as we will under fine names, the fact is, that the dealing between the counsel and the client is precisely similar to that of every other hiring for reward: there is an implied contract that, in consideration of certain fees received, certain skill and labour shall be given. True it is that the law will not help counsel to the recovery of his fee; but it is not the less a contract on that account, for it is presumed that the fee is always paid before the labour is bestowed.

Now such being the contract between the parties, and presuming, as we are bound to presume, that the employer has fulfilled his part of it by the payment of his fee, what is the duty of the counsel accepting it? that is to say, what is it that he thereby and therefore undertakes to perform—what is his moral, if not his legal, obligation?

The brief is committed to him, if a senior, with an understanding that he shall devote to the cause all his skill and learning; that he shall conduct it at the hearing, and shall not quit it during the period of the contract.

Can the moral obligation be said to be fulfilled, if he omit to do this, even if that omission be the consequence of his engagement in another court?

Certainly not. There can be no hesitation by the mind of any conscientious man in pronouncing the omission of a counsel to conduct a case he has undertaken, by reason of any excuse less than physical impossibility, a breach of a moral obligation.

And if to this be added the pocketing of the fee, when the work for which it was paid is not done, the transaction is little short of downright dishonesty.

But it will be said that counsel cannot be in two places at once. If he have a cause in another court, he cannot quit that without an equal wrong on the other side; it is for him a choice of evils, which can be determined only by the accident of which cause may be first called on.

This answer is a fallacy. Plainly a man has no right to undertake to do a thing and then put himself in a situation which might prevent his fulfilment of his engagement. He has no right, after having accepted a brief in one court, to accept for another court a brief that might prevent his keeping his word with the first client. Nay, so obvious is all this when it is plainly set forth, that one starts with surprise to reflect that the force of custom should ever have prevailed to blind an honourable Profession to the moral offence it sanction[s].

But, once recognized, it should not be permitted to remain to blot the otherwise unsullied reputation of the Bar. A remedy should be applied forthwith, and that remedy might be somewhat after this fashion.

Let it, in a conference of all the Benchers of all the Inns, or by the Judges, be promulgated as the rule of professional etiquette, that counsel, having accepted a brief, should be deemed bound to conduct the case in person, unless absent from unavoidable circumstances, or by the consent of the attorney. If afterwards there be tendered another brief, in another court, or aught which the brief already received might prevent him from attending to in person, he should be bound to reject it, or to inform the attorney of the acceptance of such prior brief, leaving it then to the option of the attorney if, with knowledge of such a probability, he would choose to take the chance. If the attorney, knowing this, leave the brief, he will have to blame himself only for any unpleasant consequences. And in all cases, if a counsel be unable to perform his engagement, and conduct his cause, unless passed into other hands with the full consent of the attorney, he should be required to return the fee.

Such a regulation would remove a very serious, and certainly a very well-founded, cause of offence in the Profession; it would add much to the dignity and repute of the Bar, and be a source of satisfaction to many who feel acutely the moral wrong of the existing practice, but who dare not depart from it while it is the practice. It is the system that is to be blamed, not the men; the greatest among us could not depart from it if he would.

But if the attorneys pleased, they might do much to suppress it; this branch of the subject, however, we must reserve for another article.

ADVERTISING ATTORNEYS.

The Secretary of the Metropolitan and Provincial Legal Association has forwarded to us the following circular. Upon deliberation, we deem it best to withhold the name of the advertiser, lest we should be helping his designs. We copy the document to exhort those of our readers who may receive it from the advertiser to treat it with the contempt it deserves. We can assure them that not the slightest confidence is to be placed in the writer.

SIR,—In soliciting the agency of country attorneys and solicitors, I beg to call your attention to the losses sustained by the Profession generally in consequence of the present mode in which agency business is conducted in London; and at the same time to submit to you the following terms upon which I propose to transact business; the advantages and nature of which will, I trust, appear obvious and satisfactory to you, and prevent London agents taking all the benefit to themselves.

The losses to which I more particularly allude are principally the effect of incompetency or inattention of the clerks, to whom principals too frequently leave the conduct of their business, and those occasioned by defendants availing themselves of one of the Insolvent Debtors Acts, or friendly fiat in bankruptcy; thereby evading a judgment, or the costs of an unsuccessful defence. Hence the attorney is left to the disagreeable alternative of losing his or their costs; or, by applying to his client for payment, thereby losing his future business.

To remedy this as far as practicable, I beg to propose to the country practitioner the following advantages:—

1st. To personally superintend all agency business entrusted to me.

2nd. In unsuccessful cases (excepting friendly suits) to receive such costs only as are actually expended out of pocket. And in the event of dividends or compromises being accepted, to share proportionately.

I feel convinced that agency conducted upon these terms will be of infinite service to the Profession and the public. To the professional man it will enable him, in unsuccessful cases, to so arrange with his client, without risking his loss, as well as being confident a proper degree of attention is bestowed to his client's interest.

I am, Sir,
Yours very obediently,
———, Solicitor.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

THE third number of Practice Cases will be ready on Tuesday, and the fourth, completing the first part, and commencing the cases of the present Term, is in rapid progress. It has been deemed desirable to add to the Practice Cases of the Common Law Courts the cases in Equity relating to the Taxation of Solicitors' Bills, and the Law of Solicitors generally.

It is, perhaps, right to state that the Practice Cases will comprise only such as are properly so called, the test being, if it be a case to be noted up in Chitty's Archbold. The only exceptions to this are Cases on Evidence, which, though not strictly Practice Cases, are so important to all practitioners as to form a desirable addition.

The 7th number of Magistrates' Cases will be ready in the course of next week.

The 3rd and 4th numbers of Criminal Law Cases, completing the first part, will be published previously to the commencement of the Circuit, so as to be of service at the Assizes.

The 7th and 8th numbers of Real Property and Conveyancing Cases, completing the second part of this unique series of Reports, will be sent to the press next week.

We are unable as yet to inform the members what is the result of the circular lately issued. Not half of them are yet returned, and nothing can be done till the members have declared their choice. We hope that those who may yet have delayed will forthwith inform us what is their purpose, even though they should decline to order any of the works named in the list sent.

NECROLOGY.

SIR C. F. WILLIAMS.

The late Sir Charles Frederick Williams was senior Commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy, and many years have elapsed since he entered upon the profession of the law. It has been supposed that he was a person of humble origin; at least so little knowledge was ever current in society with respect to his descent, that it was assumed he could not boast of very dignified ancestry; for most men take pains to make such advantages well known, and Sir Charles Williams was the least likely person in the world to omit the publication of anything that could redound to his own honour. Nevertheless, the subject of this memoir was a man of respectable parentage. His father was Richard Williams, esq. of Dursley, in Gloucestershire, of which place it may be presumed that Sir Charles was a native. He did not possess the advantages of a university education, and he came to the bar not very eminently qualified for the duties of the legal profession; he managed, however, in one way or another, to attain a certain degree of success; but the practice which he did enjoy was principally as a provincial counsel, his business at Westminster Hall being of moderate extent. He went the Western circuit, and for many years practised at the Somerset and Bristol Sessions. That he displayed unbounded zeal in the support of every client's interests is universally acknowledged, and that if perseverance and laborious care could command success, no client of his would ever have been defeated.

Sir Charles had passed the mature age of forty before he found it prudent to incur the responsibilities of married life, but he thought that the time had arrived when such a step could no longer be advantageously delayed. On the 22nd of April, 1822, he married Elizabeth, the fourth daughter of Ralph Broune Wylde Broune, esq. of Glazely, in the county of Salop, by Mary Anne Whitmore, sister of Thomas Whitmore, esq. of Apley park, in the same county. This event had of course a tendency rather to increase than diminish his professional zeal; his business increased, and in the year 1828 it had reached so respectable an amount, that by the Government of that day he was deemed worthy to be invested with the dignity of "one of his Majesty's counsel learned in the law;" but as a leader at Nisi Prius he was not much distinguished. For one peculiarity he was however noted; a solicitor might prevail on him to name the junior counsel with whom he liked to be associated. With high professional delicacy he always shrunk from the appearance of making any such suggestion; but even twenty years ago he was accustomed to say to his clients that there could be no better junior counsel in any cause than young Follett. Even then Mr. Williams had the sagacity to discern the great powers of the present Attorney-General.

For four years after he obtained a silk gown Mr. Williams continued at the bar; but at the end of that period he was appointed one of the Commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy under Lord Brougham's bill. It discharging the functions of that office, he evinced great quickness of apprehension; but was rather ostentatious in displaying it. His judgments were therefore often hasty; and his manners were by no means distinguished for the dignity, or even the decorum, which ought to be observed by every man who occupies a judicial seat. So eager was he to shew that he saw at a glance the tendency of questions put to a witness, that he would often spoil a piece of evidence by taking an examination out of a solicitor's or counsel's hands, as well as by putting ill-considered questions, and making extra-judicial observations; but he was perhaps one of the most obliging public functionaries that ever lived. If stopped in the street—if called away from an agreeable party,—nay, if called out of bed,—he would kindly and cheerfully transact any business that might be required. He once met with an accident, when riding on horseback, which confined him for some weeks, and so anxious was he to avoid encroaching upon the time of his brother commissioners, that his bedchamber was converted into a court of bankruptcy. He scarcely ever omitted an opportunity of making a civil observation or paying a personal compliment:—

"He brow-beat none, nor bore a being odium;
But fairly blazoned every man's eulogium."

He received the honour of knighthood on the 18th of July, 1838; and was for some years Recorder of Ipswich, but resigned that office in 1842. Sir Charles attained to a good old age, but of the precise year in which he was born we have not met with any authentic trace; it is believed, however, that he could not have been less than seventy-five or seventy-six years of age. The further he advanced in life the greater was the interest which he seemed to take in the causes and the influence of longevity. No elderly witness ever escaped him, and the most important proceedings were often delayed in order that Sir Charles might have an opportunity of inquiring into the habits of life and the constitutional peculiarities of any curious specimen of the last age who might happen to enter the witness-box. In this respect the columns of the Historical Register would have been a great source of consolation to him. He was a magistrate for Hampshire, and for some years had a residence near Havant, in that county.—Historical Register.

SIR J. GEERS COTTERELL, BART.—We have to record the death of Sir J. Geers Cotterell, bart. at the advanced age of 88 years. The venerable baronet expired on Sunday last, the 26th ult. at the family seat in Herefordshire. Sir J. was son of Sir J. Cotterell, knt. by the only daughter and heir of Mr. J. Geers, of Garnons, Herefordshire. He married in 1791, Miss Frances Isabella Evans, only daughter of Mr. H. Michael Evans, who died in 1813. The deceased was created a baronet in 1805, in which he is succeeded by his grandson, now Sir J. Cotterell, who inherits the extensive family property in Herefordshire and the adjoining county of Worcester.

THE CRITIC.

New Books.

New Commentaries on the Laws of England (partly founded on Blackstone). By HENRY JOHN STEPHEN, Serjeant-at-law. Vols. I. and II. London, Butterworth.

THE receipt of the two first volumes of this valuable work enables us to inform our readers more particularly than we were able to do when noticing the third volume, a few weeks since, what was the author's design, as developed in his preface. An examination of these earlier portions of the works confirms the justice of the commendations elicited by the review of the later volume, and all that we said of it then is amply justified by the further acquaintance we have now made with its learned pages.

We felt some doubt in our former notice whether these were properly called the Commentaries of STEPHEN; whether they should not have been termed Stephen's Blackstone. That doubt has been entirely removed by the explanations of the preface, and a closer examination of the text. Mr. Serjeant STEPHEN is something more than editor; he has not merely revised and corrected and annotated his master, he has remodelled him. His idea doubtless was to make Blackstone such as it would have been had the author lived and written the Commentaries at this day; and so largely has this recasting become needful, from the changes in the law, that Mr. Serjeant STEPHEN is entitled to the honours of authorship.

The work was suggested, it appears, by the obvious inconvenience which had attended the previous editions of Blackstone, in which the notes had grown to be greater than the text, and the reader was every moment subjected to the torturing process of perusing an oracular sentence only to unlearn it forthwith, until ordinary brains became so perplexed between the law as it was and the law as it is, the dictum of the author and the contradiction of the editor, that when the student closed the book he was unable rightly to distinguish what he was to remember, and what forget. This palpable inconvenience, to give it the mildest appellation, suggested to Mr. Serjeant STEPHEN the propriety of wielding his pen, not alone to comment upon the commentator, but boldly to blot from his pages whatever they contained which time and change had marred, and to add to the pure metal that remained from the stores of his own knowledge, adapting his manner as best he might to that of the composition with which his own was to be incorporated.

And this delicate task he has accomplished with wonderful success; but for the brackets that mark the interpolations, few readers could discover where the one writer ends and the other begins. Blackstone melts into Stephen, and Stephen dissolves into Blackstone, with a skill which proves that the Serjeant might have ventured upon a distinct treatise without any fear of the comparison, although we think he has done wisely in the course he has adopted, for he would not have superseded the judge, and we should have had two Commentaries to read and purchase, and the old one still vexing us by the perplexity we have above described. But by the plan pursued, the Profession enjoys a Blackstone improved, and to be mastered with more ease, with less labour, in less time, and at less cost than hitherto.

The learned Serjeant has deemed it desirable to depart in some measure from the arrangement of his predecessor. The main division of municipal law into Rights and Wrongs he has retained, but instead of classifying Rights into the Rights of Persons and the Rights of Things, an order both ungrammatical and illogical, he has substituted a plan entirely of his own conception, the leading principle of which is to make the distinction between persons and things the foundation, not of a primary, but of a subordinate, arrangement, and to consider persons as constituting, in a primary sense, the only objects of the law's regard. Persons are considered first as individuals, and in that capacity their bodily rights are examined; secondly, in their connection with things around them, which introduces the consideration of their rights of progards; thirdly, as members of families, which involves their rights in private relations; fourthly, as members of the community, which leads to the discussion of their public rights. The propriety of this alteration will not be disputed; it is, like every thing introduced by Mr. Serjeant STEPHEN, a decided improvement.

It is scarcely necessary to add to this description of the work a formal recommendation of it to the regards of the Profession. It is the only form of Blackstone that any man would now think of buying or reading. Having so lately treated of its merits, we will say no more of it now, and the reports of the Term forbid the selection of any of the interesting and instructive passages we had marked for extract. But we have said enough to shew that Mr. Serjeant STEPHEN has added another to his claims upon the respect and regard of the Profession, of whose literature he is so great an ornament.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

DEAN AND CHAPTER OF ELY v. BLISS.

Tithes—Statute of Limitations—Case for the opinion of a court of law—The tithe commissioners.

The form of the case, which in this suit had been directed to be stated for the opinion of the Court of Exchequer, was this day spoken to in consequence of a difference between the parties.

Lloyd, for the plaintiffs, objected to the case as proposed by the defendants, the pleading parties, that it stated an equitable case. The simple question upon the record was the construction of the recent Statute of Limitations in reference to the subject-matter of this suit.

Eagle, for the defendants.—The plaintiffs had stated upon the case, as originally framed by them, that they were entitled to all the tithes of the parish. Now that was not in accordance with pleadings; for the claims made by the plaintiffs in this suit were, 1st, predial tithes; 2ndly, tithe of lamb and wool, arising in a particular district; and as the district was not co-extensive with the parish, and the defendant, besides lands in the district in respect of which the plaintiffs claimed tithes by this suit, held other lands out of the district, but within the parish. The averments of the plea had also been altered.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The case seems to be framed in the very words of the plea. No one but the dean and chapter claims any tithes; but those words which would give a more extensive effect to the plaintiff's claim than that made by the bill must be omitted.

Eagle said that upon the argument at the hearing his lordship had observed, that knowing the tithe commissioners had put a narrower construction upon the Act than that intimated to be, in his lordship's opinion, the true one, and that an appeal from the decision of the commissioners to the Court of Queen's Bench was then pending, he would not take upon himself to construe the Act without the opinion of a court of law. Now he (Eagle) had seen Mr. Jones, one of the tithe commissioners, and that gentleman stated no such case existed; that the commissioners had never given any decision upon the construction of the Act; they had merely made awards between different tithe-owners and land-owners, but had formed no opinion as to the construction of the late Statute of Limitations.

FRISBY v. STAFFORD.

Payment of money into court—Acquiescence—Practice.

Where a fund is liable in the first instance to costs before distributable amongst a class, as the children of a testator, the whole fund will be directed to be paid into court, although a majority of the persons interested oppose the application for payment, and no hazard to the fund in the executors' hands is suggested.

It appearing that most of those who opposed the payment into court had received more than their full shares, although one of the questions in the cause was, whether they were liable to account for the difference, they were ordered to pay the costs of the petition.

Tinney and Koe appeared in opposition to a petition by some of the parties interested under the will of Mr. Stafford, the testator, praying that the executors should pay into court a sum of money amounting to about 4,000*l.* the produce of certain canal shares which had been ordered, in May 1833, to be sold, and the money paid into court. The shares had been sold and the produce paid into the Leicester bank, where it had remained, without interest, until the recent failure of that bank.

The testator had left a very large estate, which after the death of his widow became divisible amongst his ten children. The widow (now dead) and —— Stafford, were the executors, and the bill was filed, in the widow's lifetime, for the administration of the testator's estate, by the husband of one of the daughters. The residue consisted of 54,000*l.* part of which had been paid into court. The widow, by her answer, claimed to have advanced 29,000*l.* to several of the children, but these advances had not been made rateably: some of them having received more than their due proportions, while others had received less, and one had received nothing. Six of the ten children, or their representatives, now opposed the payment of this money into court; but it appeared that all those six children had been overpaid.

On the former occasion, when the sum of 54,000*l.* was ordered to be paid into court, the share of such of them as required it only were paid in. They proposed that course should be now adopted. Mrs. Stafford, the executrix, died in 1827, and in 1830 the suit was revived against the present defendant, who was her executor. By her will she stated, that the payments made by her were gifts to her children. No application was ever made to pay in this money until the failure of the Leicester Bank, and it was admitted, that the claim of the children was good as a personal demand against the executors.

Teed, Wakefield, James, Parker, Freeling, Busk, and Renshaw, for others of the children, said the whole of the fund should be brought into court, as it was, in the first instance, liable to costs, and the surplus only was distributable amongst the children.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The sum of 29,000*l* was not paid to the children rateably, but some received more and some less than their shares; all those who oppose the petition say is, that they don't wish the money to be paid in. The others say that the fund is in the first instance liable to costs, and that then it is to be apportioned between the children. The executrix states in her will that certain of the sums are gifts to her children, but the executors have a fund in hand, and the children had some claim upon that fund. There, has, however, been no winding up of the account, and I cannot now safely decide as to the state of the account between these parties; the money, therefore, ought to be paid into court. The parties who have opposed the payment of the money into court must pay the costs.

COLSTON v. COLSTON.

Married woman—Next friend—Pauper.

A motion was made on behalf of a married woman, who petitioned that her next friend might be allowed to sue in formâ pauperis. The usual affidavits had been made both by the plaintiff and her next friend, and the Master of the Rolls, to whom the application was originally made, had required the certificate of some barrister practising in the Court of Chancery. A certificate signed by a barrister had accordingly been handed in, but the Master of the Rolls not deeming it satisfactory, still declined to make the order. On that refusal the present application was made.

James, for the defendant, opposed the motion, and stated the above circumstances.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The application cannot be made here, the plaintiff must apply to the Master of the Rolls after having obtained a proper certificate.

Re THE KING'S GRAMMAR SCHOOL, WARWICK.

Educational charity—Scheme—Religious education—Principles on which the scheme of a grammar school will be settled.

The case of the Attorney-General v. Cullum overruled.

The teaching of the French language adopted in the scheme as a part of the compulsory routine of the school, and the teaching of other modern languages left to the discretion of the schoolmaster.

Practice—Submission of questions to the Court as to the modification of the scheme, without exceptions to the Master's report.

This was a petition for certain alterations in the scheme approved of by the Master for the future regulation of the Royal Grammar School at Warwick, and for the confirmation of the Master's report when thus modified.

Rolt, on the part of the trustees of this school, appeared to support the petition.

The estates for the maintenance of the school were granted by Henry VIII.; and, upon an information filed in the time of Charles I. a new scheme was approved of, by which, after the payment of certain yearly sums to the schoolmaster, the residue of the income was given to the corporation of Warwick, to be appropriated to pious, charitable, and useful works, for the advantage of the borough of Warwick. It was in that scheme expressly provided that, as it was impossible to see what in the lapse of time might become the most useful mode of applying the income of the charity estate, a large discretion should be confided to the corporation. The corporation have from time to time made an increase to the salary of the master; and on the death of the old master in 1842, the appointment of a new master took place. With the consent of all parties in the borough the present master, the Rev. Mr. Hill, had been chosen; and the corporation had agreed to act with great liberality, and to appropriate a considerable portion of the surplus funds of the charity estate to the improvement of the school. They engaged to pay a sum of 200*l.* a year to the head master, and 100*l.* a year to a second master; and also to expend a considerable sum in the improvement of the school-house and buildings. The scheme required that the head master should be in holy orders, and that he should have graduated at one of the English universities. The master was to add to the usual instruction of a grammar school the subjects of general education, as allowed by the recent Act. Certain other regulations were, however, laid down for the government of the charity, upon some of which all parties, in a most amicable spirit, desired to take the opinion of the Court. On the first regulation, which fixed the salaries of the masters, there was no difference of opinion. The second related to the number of boarders which the head master should be authorized to receive into the school. By the scheme the number had been fixed at thirty; but it was the opinion of the trustees, and also of the master, that he should be allowed to take a larger number, the trustees thinking that the increase of the number of boarders would tend to raise the character of the school. The school to be open to the children of the inhabitants of the borough of Warwick, and the boarders are to be the children of persons resident within the county of Warwick and other counties, but the scheme gives a preference to the residents in Warwickshire; such preference, however, was not to exclude any boy already established as a boarder; that is, the master was not to be required to dismiss any boy of his full number because a non-resident, and to take a resident's child, who might be desirous of coming to the school.

Rolt suggested that there was no use in restricting the number of boarders to thirty; the trustees of the charity considered it an advantage to the school that there should be a large number of boarders.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The number of boarders must depend upon the state of the buildings. I presume the master, in deciding on the scheme, must have taken into his consideration the extent of the buildings and the accommodation they are capable of affording. I cannot decide that the number shall be greater than thirty without considering the state of the funds and of the building. I think that it would not be proper that the boys should lodge in the town, as it would be inconsistent with moral discipline. I think thirty boarders are enough.

Rolt.—The 3rd and 4th regulations provide for the appointment of an under or assistant-classical master, who is to teach mathematics and the higher branches of arithmetic; and also that each boy on the foundation should pay an annual fee of 7*l.* 7*s.* to be divided between the masters in certain proportions. By the 5th regulation a salary of 40*l.* a year is allotted for a writing master. It was thought that sum might be usefully increased.

The Lord Chancellor.—You had better make it 50*l.*

Roll.—By the 6th rule the head master must reside at the college, and neither the head or under master is to be at liberty to undertake clerical duties having the cure of souls, unless, and so long only as they should be excused from residence on each benefice "by the proper authorities." [It was, after some discussion, settled that neither should they hold any lectureship beyond the town of Warwick, lest it might withdraw their attention from the boys on Tuesdays.] The 7th and 8th rules provided that one hour a day at the least should be devoted to the religious instruction of the pupils. It was thought better to omit this regulation, and leave the whole matter of religious instruction to the schoolmaster. Such a rule in the scheme of a grammar school was quite new, and had been introduced for the first time by Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce in the Attorney-General v. Cullum; the master had felt bound to insert it by the authority of that case.

Hetherington, for the schoolmaster, suggested that the rule should be altered thus, "that in every school all the boys should receive one lesson at least of religious instruction."

The Lord Chancellor.—I think it is better to leave the care of religious instruction to the discretion of the schoolmaster, without any limited provision. The object will be much better attained by leaving the subject to the master's discretion. The 7th and 8th rules must be struck out. This does not imply that religious instruction is to be omitted, but I think the mode in which that instruction is given may be most usefully left in the schoolmaster's hands.

Rolt.—The next rule on which it is necessary to remark, is the 13th, which specifies the various subjects on which the master is bound to give instruction to all the boys alike, which, amongst other branches of modern education, mentions the French language. By the 15th rule, any pupils, whose parents desired it, might be taught German or other modern languages.

The Lord Chancellor.—It would be better not to make the teaching of French compulsory, and to make the 15th rule applicable to modern languages in general, without specifying any.

Hetherington, for the schoolmaster, wished that it should be compulsory on all the boys to learn French, because that would then form a part of the ordinary routine of the school, and would not interfere with the arrangement of the classes.

The Lord Chancellor.—I accede to that view. French may prove useful to many boys who would not learn it, unless it formed part of the regular school instruction.

Rolt.—The 19th rule provides that the schoolmaster should have the power of expelling any boy, and on so doing should report the grounds of expulsion to the governors of the school; and an appeal should lie to the Lord Chancellor, as visitor.

The Lord Chancellor.—Omit the report to the governors, and add that the appeal shall lie to any person whom the Chancellor for the time being may appoint.

Rolt.—The only other rule to be mentioned is that which provides that two examiners, graduates of one of the English Universities, shall yearly receive a fee of five guineas each. It was proposed that one examiner only should be appointed, and that he should receive a fee of ten guineas.

The Lord Chancellor.—He should be a graduate of Oxford or Cambridge. I hope the school will go on well.

Rolt.—The unanimity of all the different political parties in the borough, in carrying these regulations into effect, for the benefit of the school, is the best proof of their desire that there should be no difference of opinion in all that related to the school.

Bayley, for the corporation, consented to the alterations, and the Master's report, as modified, was confirmed.

Wray, for the Attorney-General.

Re The Bishop of Bath and Wells, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Service on agent.

Bird supported a petition praying that some person might be appointed to convey, in the place of the Bishop of Bath and Wells, a lunatic. The Master had found the Bishop to be a trustee within the Act. The former order had been directed to be served upon the Bishop's agent, who had not attended the Master; and it was asked that the present order should be served upon the same agent. — Ordered.

Re Peover, a Lunatic.

Practice—Diminution of security by committee of the estate.

[illegible], in support of a petition, asked that the committee of the estate might be authorized to pay certain sums of money belonging to the lunatic's estate into court, and that he might deposit with the commissioner various securities for money. The lunatic was also entitled to the fifth part of a testator's estate, which would become payable in parts, and at different times. It is stated in Shelford on Lunacy that the only way to get over the difficulty is to obtain a special order to authorize the committee to pay in the money as received from time to time. (Re Sherrard, App. Shelford on Lunacy.) The object of the application was to decrease the amount of security to be given by the committee.

The Lord Chancellor.—The committee can give no receipt without a special order.

— Ordered.

Reed v. Pike.

Alibone v. Jones.

Pauper—Prisoner—Costs—Suitors' fund.

Blunt, as counsel to the suitors' fund, moved, upon the report of the Master under Sir E. Sugden's , that the defendants in both the above suits, who were prisoners in contempt for not putting in their answers, might be discharged; and, by reason of their poverty, that the costs of putting in their answers might be discharged out of the suitors' fund.

— Ordered.

Murray v. Vibart.

Substituted service of subpœna against a defendant residing abroad ordered upon a solicitor in London shewn to be her agent—Evidence of agency—Collusion.

This was a suit by creditors for the administration of the estate of an intestate. The administratrix was resident in Boulogne, and it was sought to obtain an order that service of the subpœna upon Mr. Bennett, a solicitor in London, should be deemed good service under these circumstances. Three letters had been written by the plaintiff's solicitor, and addressed to her at Boulogne; the first of which was written in June, and the last on the 27th of December last. On the 30th of December last, the plaintiff's solicitor received a letter dated the same day, in which he said, "Mrs. Vibart has forwarded to me your letter of the 27th instant, and in replying to it I have to express my regret at your client's want of courtesy and precipitation. Immediately upon receiving your partner's two former letters, Mrs. Vibart handed them to me to do what was necessary on her behalf." A distringas had been placed upon certain stock at the Bank, which belonged to the testator's estate, and Mr. Bennett applied to remove that distringas.

Anderson, for the plaintiff.

The Lord Chancellor.—What recognition have you of Mr. Bennett by Mrs. Vibart as her agent? These parties might be playing into each other's hands. What was the first thing Mr. Bennett did in the matter?

Anderson.—He wrote the letter of the 30th of December to the plaintiff's solicitor, in which he shewed himself fully aware of the contents of the letter of the 27th of December, which had been sent to the defendant. Though the affidavit on which the application is grounded does not expressly deny collusion, yet the circumstances shew collusion to be out of the question. A similar was made by the Vice-Chancellor of England in Hobhouse v. Courtney (12 Simons, 140), where all the cases on the subject are collected in the notes. (English v. Kendrick, 6 Mad. 205; Kinder v. Forbes, 2 Beav. 103; Webb v. Salmon, 3 Hare, 3rd part.)

The Lord Chancellor.—I think that will do. The plaintiff undertaking again to communicate by post with the defendant, the order may be made. The affidavit of the plaintiff's solicitor does not negative any understanding with Mr. Bennett; but of course in such cases the order can be made, if the Court is satisfied with the evidence.

ROLLS COURT.

Thursday, Jan. 30.

Cattel v. Symons.

In a suit for the administration of the estate of a deceased debtor, a bond creditor, who was also an equitable mortgagee by deposit of title-deeds, comes in under the decree, and claims the debt on bond; and it being suggested that there was an equitable mortgage, the claim was allowed to stand over to be amended, but this had not been done. The estate is then sold, and a conveyance made to the purchaser without the title-deeds. The sum realized being insufficient to pay all the debts, the equitable mortgagee presents his petition, after a lapse of seven or eight years, for leave to come in and prove his lien, so as thereby to gain priority over a specialty creditor, suggesting that he had then only for the first time ascertained that his claim had never been amended. The petition was dismissed, with costs.

This was a petition presented by Ann Bates, the widow and administratrix of J. L. Bates, of Daventry, who died in April 1839. It appeared that Henry Fleckno having died indebted to a considerable amount, a suit was instituted for the administration of his estate, and on the 9th March, 1836, a decree was made for taking an account of the debts, and of the real and personal estate of the deceased. Under that decree J. L. Bates claimed 200*l.* secured to him by a bond of January 1832, and in his affidavit suggested that the same was further secured by a deposit of title-deeds. The claim was then allowed to stand over for the purpose of being amended, and allowing a state of facts to be carried in. This was never done, and the Master marked opposite the debt—"Note.—Secured also by deposit of title-deeds. See affidavit." On the 16th December, 1837, the personal estate of Henry Fleckno, by the Master's report, was represented to be insufficient for payment of his debts, and the Master found that E. Bromwich and E. Smith were mortgagees of the real estate, and J. L. Bates was a creditor by bond. Mr. Fleckno, the surviving trustee of a settlement in which Henry Fleckno, deceased, covenanted to pay the trustees 1,000*l.* on the trusts thereof, went in before the Master, under the decree, and established his claim as a specialty creditor. The real estate was sold, and a conveyance made to the purchaser without the title-deeds. On the 16th July, 1844, there was an order for payment of 518*l.* to R. Bromwich, the personal representative of E. Bromwich, and of 324*l.* 4s. 1d. to E. Smith. On the 7th December, 1844, a reference was made to the Master, who found that 95*l.* 7s. 9d. was due for interest on the 200*l.* to J. L. Bates, or his administratrix, and that 476*l.* 10s. 1d. was due on the 1,000*l.* to Mr. Fleckno. The fund applicable for payment of these sums being only 871*l.* 17s. 10d., the petitioner now applied for leave to carry in a state of facts as to the deposit of the title-deeds, stating that she had now, for the first time, become aware that the claim was not amended, and that, by accident, the Master had excluded J. L. Bates in the report, and so the priority of his claim was lost, and that she had never been asked for the title-deeds.

Bird, for the petitioner, insisted upon her right to come in now, under all the circumstances, to establish her claim. He said there was a misconception on the matter in the mind of the country solicitor, who believed his town agent had taken the necessary steps before the Master, and produced an affidavit to that effect. In order to shew that it was quite in accordance with the practice of the Court to permit such claims to be established, on further directions, even at so late a stage of the proceedings, he cited Lashley v. Hogg (11 Ves. 602); Angell v. Haddon (1 Madd. 529); Gillespie v. Alexander (3 Russ. 130).

Daniell, for the plaintiffs, insisted that Bates was only a specialty creditor, and had stood out; and that Fleckno had come in under the decree.

Chandless, against the petitioner, said that on the last order on further directions, there was only 871*l.* 17s. 10d. applicable to the payment of debts, and that Fleckno, being a creditor to a large amount, would be hardly dealt with if, after all his trouble in proving his debt, the petitioner should now be permitted to come in and deprive him of the fund. The petition is wrong in its prayer, untrue in fact, and absurd. This is a creditors' suit, involving the usual inquiries as to incumbrancers, &c. Two incumbrancers came in, and the estate was decreed to be sold. The principle of the decree is, that an incumbrancer is only entitled to the proceeds if he comes in and submits to the sale. This was not so here, but, on the contrary, the petitioner held out, and kept the title-deeds. The estate was sold, and the purchase-money distributed; and now this petition seeks to undo all that has been done under three reports of the Master, and those orders. This, however, cannot be effected on further directions, though cases are cited as authorities for the position that it can. No laches, however, appeared in those cases as here; nor is this a petition of a creditor, but of one trying to establish her claim as an incumbrancer. But a creditorial character is given to her by the Master's report, and what she is entitled to as such lies for her at the Master's office. The situation of a creditor is peculiar. As soon as the decree for an account, &c. is pronounced, the object is to have the debts paid, and the bill will not be dismissed; and creditors are under an obligation also to sue in equity, and not at law. The other side argue from the case of a creditor to that of an incumbrancer. It is said the petitioner's priority was lost by the Master's accidentally excluding her from the report. But the only thing Mr. Bates did was to put in an affidavit of his debt; no memorandum was given, nor any state of facts carried in, though that is always done by an incumbrancer as contradistinguished from a creditor; and the Master could not, therefore, have done more than he did. And now they ask to make out their claim on this memorandum and deposit.

The Master of the Rolls.—The only question is, whether the incumbrancer can have his claim considered on petition.

Bird, in reply.—The circumstances, notwithstanding the lapse of time, are favourable to the petitioner as regards Mr. Fleckno. When Bates went in with bond and mortgage, there was quite enough to pay him and the simple contract creditors in the suit, and it was therefore unnecessary to take any further steps; but then Mr. Fleckno under the decree makes his claim, and we knew nothing of our mistake till December last.

The Master of the Rolls.—It does not appear from the Master's report what were the proceedings before him. And it is clear that no just imputation lies on any one, and that the costs of the petition must be borne by the petitioner. The question is whether there is to be an inquiry. The cause has advanced so far, that after sale of the estate and payment of the mortgagees, there remains a sum insufficient to satisfy the specialty debts, and it is ordered to be apportioned between the petitioner and Mr. Fleckno; and after that the petitioner presents this petition, and says, I am not only creditor, but equitable mortgagee, and have priority to Mr. Fleckno. In 1836 the charge was carried in as a bond debt, and it is said that petitioner's testator also claimed as mortgagee, and that claim, therefore, at the suggestion of the Master, stood over. It was known, then, in 1836, that the claim was not put forward in the most advantageous way, and the debt is ultimately allowed as a bond debt, and not a mortgage. An affidavit is produced, but it was no evidence on which to found a claim as equitable mortgagee. It is said the country solicitor was informed by his town agent that the state of facts had been amended; however that may be, the debt was only allowed as a bond debt. Now, then, from December 1836 to the present time, with the knowledge that the claim should be amended, and a representation that it had been so, the cause going on without the Master's requisitions being attended to—whether, after all these years, we ought to give effect to this security, and thereby deprive another party of his fund, is difficult to determine. I think I cannot give relief, and it is the less to be lamented, as if I had, the petitioner must have paid the costs throughout, which would have made it a useless proceeding.

Hughes v. Wynne.

Taxation of bill of costs—9th General Order of 26th October, 1842.

The consideration of what is a fit amount of remuneration to an accountant for services performed, is for the Master in Ordinary, and not the Taxing Master, the remuneration being brought in in the shape and under the name of a bill of charges.

In this case a bill of costs was referred to the Master for taxation, and the taxation was accordingly made. The Master having made his report, an order was obtained to review the same, on grounds of irregularity; and an inquiry was also directed before the Master as to the proper amount of remuneration to be given for his services to an accountant, in reference to whom a bill of charges had been brought in along with the bill of costs. The reference being ordered after the publication of the General Orders of the 26th of October, 1842, the Master thought his jurisdiction, upon objection being taken to it, had been taken away by the 9th of those Orders, which transfers all the powers of the Master as to taxation to the Taxing Masters, and refused to proceed to take into consideration the question of remuneration without an order distinctly directing him to do so. The party raising the objection now applied for the authority to enable the Master to proceed.

Turner and Bilton, for the application.

Kindersley and Fleming, on the other side.

The Master of the Rolls.—As I understand you, there is an order to tax, and along with that there is mixed up a direction that a proper remuneration be allowed to the accountant. This, which was brought in as a bill of charges, produced some confusion in the Master's mind, and the party who now seeks to have the estimate made took the objection as to the Master's jurisdiction, which the Master allowed. The Taxing Master is not the proper person to deal with this matter, but only the Master in Ordinary. The only object is to ascertain the proper amount, and if too much is given, the other side can object. Can I do better than make an order that the Master shall proceed to take cognizance of the question? The application having been occasioned by the party who now asks to remove the obstruction, he must therefore pay the costs.

Friday, Jan. 31.

Gibert v. Hales.

9th Order of 5th May, 1837—Practice.

If a court of equity retains a bill, and gives leave to bring an action of debt at law, and judgment is obtained in the action, it has no priority over simple contract creditors.

The facts of this case are stated in 2 Law T. 496; it will be seen by referring to the report that the bill was retained for twelve months, to allow an action at law to be brought on certain terms by the plaintiff. He did so, and succeeded in obtaining judgment in his favour. It being then apprehended that the judgment would give him an advantage over simple contract creditors, a common creditors' suit was on advice instituted in the meantime in the Court of Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce for the administration of the estate of Hales, the intestate, and a decree was obtained therein. It was then sought to restrain the plaintiff from proceeding further at law or in this suit, and to oblige him to come in in the other suit and prove his debt and have his costs taxed. Leave was accordingly obtained from the Lord Chancellor to move at the Rolls in both causes for that purpose.

Kindersley, for the motion.—We wish to restrain the plaintiff, and we have got leave from the Lord Chancellor to move in both causes, notwithstanding the 9th General Order of May 1837; and therefore in this particular case it is the same as if there was no General Order. [The Master of the Rolls.—There can nothing reasonably be done but transfer from either Court to the other.] That is no use, for the suit will be at an end if your lordship grants the motion. [The Master of the Rolls.—How can I when it is not in the same cause, but in a cause in another court? This is the first time I have received a peremptory order from the Lord Chancellor.] [Calvert.—The order was only giving leave to move before your lordship.] The doubt as to the priority of the plaintiff's judgment is unfounded, and he himself does not wish to take any advantage. We wish to make him come in and prove his debt and costs, &c.; but he objects, and says he should not be asked to prove it again. Mrs. Hales is quite satisfied about it now, and we merely wish him to come in and we will admit it before the Master. That removes the principal objection. [It is strange that it should be thought that the Court giving him leave to bring his action, would permit his judgment afterwards to have priority.]

Calvert, on the same side.

Lowndes and Shadwell, for the plaintiff in the other suit, concurred with Kindersley.

Turner, for the plaintiff.—There must be an inquiry into the assets in the hands of Mrs. Hales, the administratrix. [The Master of the Rolls.—That of course, if an injunction be asked.] Mr. Gibert does not desire to take the conduct of the cause; but still, the other bill being filed at the instance of Mrs. Hales, as appears from the solicitor of the latter being also the solicitor of the plaintiff in that suit, we ask for liberty for Mr. Gibert to attend the administration at the expense of the estate.

White, on the same side, said it was more Mr. Gibert's interest than that of any one to take care of the property, as the debts owing to him were fifteen times the amount of all the rest.

Kindersley, in reply.—Let him make oath as to his debt; even in his own case he would have to do so. [The Master of the Rolls.—If the cause was at the hearing, I could declare the debt proved, but not on an interlocutory motion.] He would have been entitled to his costs as between solicitor and client, if the estate had been solvent, but as it is not, he can only have them as between party and party.

The Master of the Rolls.—I understand the other suit is to be brought here. The only doubt I have is as to the two solicitors attending at the cost of the estate; though, as Mr. Gibert is much the largest creditor, that expense will chiefly fall on himself. I am surprised that any doubt should ever have been entertained on the question of the judgment obtaining priority. I give Mr. Gibert leave to attend the proceedings as asked.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Tuesday, Jan. 14.

Davies v. Salusbury.

Principal and surety—Release—Demurrer.

A bill filed by a surety on a promissory note for the purpose of having the note cancelled, stated that the principal had executed an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, and that, in consideration thereof, his creditors had released him, and that the solicitor of the payee in the note had executed the assignment on his behalf, and that the payee had accepted the dividend. A demurrer to the bill, for want of equity, was reserved till the hearing, on the ground of its not appearing sufficiently clear upon the bill that the release of the debt had been executed by the payee of the note.

The bill in this case was filed on the 28th of Nov. 1844, and stated, that on the 4th July, 1843, Sir J. Salusbury put up for sale by auction the growing crops on his farm at Cord Robin, and one of the conditions of the sale was that the purchasers should give security for the payment of their purchase-money. The defendant, William Mellish, became the purchaser at the sum of 233*l*. 17s. 6d. and the plaintiff and the defendant, Robert Parry, became security in a promissory note for him to Sir J. Salusbury, for the payment of that sum by two instalments—the first, on the 1st January, 1844, and the second, on the 1st July, 1844. Before the 4th May, 1844, William Mellish had reduced the debt to 123*l*. 17s. 6d. In May 1844, Sir J. Salusbury issued a writ of summons against Mellish for the payment of the balance, but proceeded no further in the action. Mellish by transactions subsequent to the date of the promissory note, became further indebted to Sir J. Salusbury, and on the 9th May, 1844, was indebted to him to the amount of 138*l*. 6s. 6d. By an indenture of the 9th May, 1844, Mellish assigned to trustees all his property for the benefit of his creditors, and in consideration thereof the several creditors, whose names and seals were thereto attached, released Mellish from all actions, &c. which they, or any, or either of them, might have or claim against him. The bill stated that "Thomas Evans, attorney and solicitor, as the solicitor and agent of the said Sir J. Salusbury, executed the same for and on behalf of the said Sir J. Salusbury, and which execution was in the handwriting of the said Thomas Evans, and was in the words and figures following, i. e. 'For Sir John Salusbury, Thos. Evans, 138*l*. 6s. 6d.;' and a seal was also affixed thereto, opposite to his said signature." The creditors, and amongst them Sir J. Salusbury, received a dividend of 10s. in the pound upon their debts; and on the 28th October, 1844, Sir J. Salusbury signed a receipt for his dividend. On the 30th October, 1844, Sir J. Salusbury commenced an action in the Queen's Bench against the plaintiff and Parry to recover the balance. The bill charged that Sir J. Salusbury recognized the execution of the deed of composition on his behalf by Evans, and in other parts spoke of Sir J. Salisbury's having executed the indenture. The bill prayed that the promissory note might be given up to be cancelled, and that Sir J. Salusbury might be restrained from proceeding. To this bill a general demurrer was filed by Sir J. Salusbury.

Wigram and Smollett, for the demurrer, urged that the release of the principal to the note was a release of the sureties. (Coke's Inst. 232; Cheetham v. Ward (2 Bos. & Pull. 630); Pickard v. Sears (6 Ad. & Ell. 469); and Nicholson v. Revill (4 Ad. & Ell. 675). The deed was the deed of Sir J. Salusbury, and could have been so pleaded at law.

The Vice-Chancellor.—Supposing Sir J. Salusbury's legal remedy or legal right on this instrument as against the plaintiff in equity not extinguished, the bill states an equity giving the plaintiff a standing-place here. The question is, whether the bill states such a capacity of defending by the plaintiff in equity at law as to exclude this jurisdiction. I qualify the phrase in this manner for obvious reasons, for there are several cases of concurrent jurisdiction, and questions of the discharge of sureties by dealing with the principal form a part of them. The first question is, whether the release is to be taken as pleadable at law as a release; but it is stated by the bill that Sir J. Salusbury authorized the execution, though it is not said by what means, nor that it was executed in his presence. I can not infer that the authority was by deed. He has done other acts of recognition; and I think it is highly probable, that if in the trial of an action the jury were to presume that he authorized the execution, a new trial would not be granted. I do not, however, see that so clearly upon the face of the bill as to bar him from access to the Court at this stage. There is strong language in the bill, amounting almost to the assertion of personal execution by Sir J. Salusbury. That Sir J. Salusbury did authorize Evans to execute, and that he did so execute, is not so clearly sufficient as to render the deed the deed of Sir J. Salusbury. It is also said that there is here accord and satisfaction; that is, that the acceptance of part is a discharge of the whole: but I think that it is not so clear upon the bill as to allow the demurrer, or to stop the case at this stage of the cause. Subject, then, to what the plaintiff's counsel may say, I think that the benefit of the demurrer should be saved till the hearing.

Russell and Stinton, for the plaintiff, cited Hawkshaw v. Parkins (2 Swanst. 539).

The Vice-Chancellor.—I cannot say that cases of extinction, and of time given, are to stand upon the same ground. Save the benefit of the demurrer, reserving all costs.

Bond v. Warden.

Stamp Act—Check—Reasonable diligence.

A check directed to "A, B, and Co. bankers, L." without any other mention of the place of issuing the check, is not within the exemptions from the Stamp Act, and being unstamped, is void.

A received a check at L, after office hours, on the 20th of April, and sent it to his bankers, at R, eight miles from L, on the same evening. On the 21st, the bankers at R forwarded it by post to the bank at L, where it was received on the 22nd, and at half past one o'clock on that day the bank at L stopped:—Held that A had used reasonable diligence, and that the check was no payment.

On the 7th of October 1841, a contract was entered into between the plaintiff and Mr. Wallin, since deceased, for the sale to Wallin of a farm at Willey, in Warwickshire, for the sum of 4,200*l*. the contract to be completed on the 6th of April 1842. Wallin entered into possession, and by his will devised the farm to the defendants upon certain trusts, and subsequently died.

On the 20th of April, 1843, the deeds of conveyance to the defendants were executed, and a receipt was signed for the purchase-money. The purchase-money and interest, amounting to 4,734*l*. was paid by a check on the bank of Messrs. Clarke, Mitchell, Phillips, and Smith, at Lutterworth. The check was directed to Messrs. Clarke and Co. "Bankers, Lutterworth," but no other mention was made of the place of issue. It was given after the office hours of the bank at Lutterworth, and on the same evening the plaintiff sent the check by a private hand to the bank at Rugby, where it was received by one of the partners in that bank.

On the 21st of April, the Rugby bankers sent the check by post to Messrs. Clarke and Co. with directions to pay the same to their agents in London, and at half-past one on the 22nd, the day on which Messrs. Clarke and Co. received the check, their bank stopped payment, and the check was returned dishonoured. This bill was filed for the specific performance of the agreement, for the payment of the purchase-money, and for a declaration of a lien on the farm, &c. for the amount of the purchase-money. Two points arose in the case: 1st, whether the check was valid, it not being stamped, and not having, according to the requisitions of the Stamp Act, the place where it was issued upon the face of it; and, 2nd, whether there had been laches on the part of the plaintiff in presenting the check.

Wigram and Freeling, for the plaintiffs, cited Rough v. Webb (1 Esp. 129); Wilson v. Viner (4 Taunt. 287); Walters v. Brogden (1 Y & J. 457); Rickford v. Ridge (2 Campb. 537); Williams v. Smith (2 B. & Ald. 496); Monke v. Brown (4 Bing. N. C. 466; 5 Scott, 697.)

Russell and Speed, for the defendants, cited Boddington v. Shinker (1 B. & Ad. 752), and Cannage v. Hannay (6 B. & Cr.)

The VICE CHANCELLOR.—I think the plaintiff is right on both points. The Stamp Act requires, in order to the exemption from a stamp that the place where a check is issued or drawn should be expressed upon it, that is, so expressed as to shew that it is the place from which it was issued. The mere circumstance that the place is mentioned for another purpose is not sufficient. Here it is plainly so used as to describe the situation of the bank, not the place where the check was drawn, though nothing wrong was intended. This then, was an insufficient security, and a void check, and I think, therefore, no payment. But supposing the document were not open to this objection, a question arises whether reasonable diligence was used. It was delivered in the town where it was drawn, and where it was made payable, after the office hours, after it had become impossible to receive the money on that day. What was incumbent on the plaintiff to do? He was a country gentleman or a farmer, living two or three miles out of the town. There were bankers at Rugby whom he chose to employ. He sends the check to Rugby that evening, and it was received after office-hours by one of the partners, who deposited it in a place of safe custody, and in the morning it was paid into the bank in the ordinary way. I think the plaintiff was entitled to employ a banker, as he was not bound to keep the check in his own custody, where it might be exposed to various hazards. I think the distance at Rugby was not an unreasonable distance, and that the plaintiff pursued a right and reasonable course. The banker then must have a reasonable time to present the check; he inquires in the morning as to the best mode of conveyance, and puts it in the post-office, directed to the bankers upon whom it was drawn. This mode of presentation was not under the circumstances unusual. In this state of things, before two o'clock, the ordinary banking hours extending to four, the bank stops. I am of opinion that the Rugby bankers had, under the circumstances, the whole of the banking hours of the day for their own and the plaintiff's protection. I must, therefore, hold that the plaintiff's debt is due, and that there is a lien on the farm, &c. sold for the amount.

MORGAN v. HERBERT.

Service of copy of bill—Husband and wife.

Order made for the entry of a memorandum of service of a copy of a bill upon a wife alone who was living separate from her husband.

In this case, W. M. James moved for leave to enter a memorandum of the service of a copy of the bill. The copy of the bill was intended to be served on the defendants John Lloyd and Ann his wife, but upon serving the wife, she stated that for the last eight years she had lived separate from her husband. It was now asked that the memorandum might be entered of the service upon the wife alone.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he thought this service might be treated in the same way as the service of a subpœna upon a woman living separate from her husband, and accordingly made the order as asked.

CLOUDER v. KENDALL.

Witness—Re-examination.

Order made for the re-examination of a witness for the purpose of proving exhibits and liberty given to the other party to cross-examine him.

Swanston applied for liberty to examine John Burgess as a witness, either viva voce before the Master to whom the cause stood referred, or before the examiner or commissioner, or by any of the said means (notwithstanding he had been already examined in chief), confining such examination to the proof of exhibits not entered in the decree or matters not already deposed to by the said witness. He cited Whittaker v. Wright (3 Hare, 412).

Willcock, on the other side, asked that the mode of examination should be now named by the applicant, and that his client should be at liberty to cross-examine.

Swanston stated his willingness that the examination should be taken by interrogatories, and

The VICE-CHANCELLOR made the order accordingly, giving the other party liberty to cross examine the witness.

COCKRILL v. PITCHFORTH.

Will—Construction.

A B gave the residue of her personalty to trustees upon trust to sell and to divide the proceeds among twelve persons, and then gave her real estate to the same trustees upon trust for payment of three annuities to three persons for their respective lives, and after the decease of the survivor of the annuitants upon trust to sell the real estate, and divide the proceeds between the same twelve persons and three others, or such of them as should be then living. A clause was then introduced, declaring that the share or proportion of one of the twelve (who was a married woman) should be held in trust for her separate use for her life, and after her decease in trust for her son. Then followed the usual receipt clause, the clause for indemnity of trustees, and a clause giving the trustees power to lease for twenty-one years. Held, that this clause as to the married woman's share related to the personalty as well as the realty.

Elizabeth Pocock, by her will dated the 15th of Nov. 1824, after bequeathing certain pecuniary legacies, gave and bequeathed the residue of her personal estate to trustees upon trust to sell and convert the same, and upon further trust to pay, apply, and divide the same unto and amongst the several persons following, that is to say, Truman Machin, Hector Tause, John Machin, Sabra, wife of Thomas Cockrill, Sarah, wife of John Cockrill, Elizabeth, wife of David Bidmead, Maria, wife of Frederick Kerchevall, Jane Elizabeth Hankinson, Elizabeth Mary Wardell, Caroline, wife of Charles Pitchforth, Charlotte St. George, and Elizabeth Eleanor St. George, or such of them as might be living at the time of her decease, in equal shares and proportions. The testatrix then gave and devised all her real estates to the same trustees upon the trusts therein mentioned for payment out of the rents and profits of the said premises or otherwise of three several annuities of 40*l.* 30*l.* and 10*l.* to Edward Machin, Eleanor Anson, and Elizabeth Hankinson, during their respective lives, and after payment of the said several annuities upon further trust to lay out and invest the surplus rents in Government securities, and from time to time to lay out and invest the accruing dividends and interest to be received from such investments as an accumulating fund during the lives of the said several annuitants, and the life of the survivor of them, and after the decease of the survivor of them, then upon trust to sell and dispose of the said real estate in the manner therein mentioned, and to pay, apply, and divide the clear produce of such sale unto and amongst the following persons, or such of them as should be then living; that is to say [here follow the names of the legatees above mentioned, and of three others]. The will then immediately proceeded thus: "Provided always that as to the share or proportion of the said Sabra, the wife of Thomas Cockrill, it is my will and mind that such share or proportion shall be invested in the funds in the names of my said trustees, upon trust, to pay the dividends and interest thereof into the hands of the said Sabra Cockrill, during her life, for her own absolute use and benefit, and not to be subject to the control of her present husband or any future husband, and after her decease, then upon further trust to pay, assign, and transfer the funds in which such share shall have been invested, and all dividends and interests accrued thereon, unto Richard Cockrill, the son of the said Sabra, for his own use and benefit." Then follow clauses to exempt purchasers from the obligation of seeing to the application of the purchase-money, and to make the receipts of the trustees good discharges,—for the indemnity of the trustees,—and to enable the trustees to lease all or any part of the premises for 21 years. The testatrix then appointed the same persons before named as trustees, to be her executors. The testatrix died in March 1826, and the will was proved in the following month. The trustees paid the legatees, and set apart 145*l.* 14*s.* 4*d.* consols to answer Mrs. Cockrill's legacy. On the 31st of July, 1841, Tomlinson, one of the defendants in this suit, purchased Richard Cockrill's share in this sum for 49*l.* Mrs. Cockrill being now dead, her husband filed this bill against the trustees and Tomlinson, claiming the transfer of the fund to himself, alleging that the clause in the will directing the share or proportion of his wife to be for her separate use, &c. was applicable to the real estate only. One only of the annuitants mentioned in the will was dead.

Tripp, for the plaintiff.

Russell and Bagshawe, for Tomlinson.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that the words upon which the dispute had arisen were "the share or proportion" not "the said share," not "the last-mentioned share." Although in effect there were two distinct properties payable at different times and in different proportions; yet the words were large enough to include both. Without changing the ordinary interpretation of the words used, they were properly applicable to one or two. If the words could be applicable to both, the question was, what was the more probable construction? In the personalty her share was immediate, and with regard to the realty, it was subject to several contingencies. It was highly improbable then that the testatrix would confine the limitation to the more remote and most contingent fund. His Honour said, that he was at first struck with the expression, "my said trustees;" but the testatrix also gave the personalty to them "upon trust." The position also of the clause was worthy of attention, preceding as it did, the clause providing for the receipts of the trustees being sufficient discharges for the purchase-moneys. However unnecessary this clause, where the trustees were also executors, there was an express trust for the sale of the personalty as well as the realty. Considering too the other clauses introduced, His Honour thought no reliance could be placed on the respective positions of the clauses. He thought then, that the grammatical construction ought to prevail. Of course, in such a case, the plaintiff could not pay costs, but the defendant's costs should come out of the general estate of the testatrix, and, if there were no general estate, then out of the fund.

VICE-CHANCELLOR WIGRAM'S COURT.

Wednesday, Jan. 29.

JUDGMENT.

HARROP v. HEAWARD.

Separate use—Anticipation.

Under a marriage settlement, a sum of money, the personal property of the intended wife, was vested in trustees upon trust, to lay out and invest the same in the Parliamentary Stocks or Funds, or at interest upon Government or real securities; and to stand possessed of such stock or securities upon further trust, to pay the interest, dividends, or yearly proceeds thereof, from time to time, as the same became due and payable, into the proper hands of the wife, or into the hands of such person or persons as she, by any note or writing under her hand, should, from time to time, appoint to receive the same during her life, but not so as during the joint lives of herself and her husband to dispose thereof, or deprive herself of the benefit thereof by mortgage, charge, sale, assignment, or otherwise, in the way of anticipation, to the intent that the same might be for the sole and separate use of the wife, and might not be subject to the debts, control, disposition, or engagements of the husband, or any other person with whom she might, after her then husband's decease, intermarry. And here it was also, by the settlement, agreed and declared that the receipt or receipts of the wife, or of such person or persons as she should appoint to receive the same, and his, her, or their receipt or receipts, should be a good and sufficient discharge to the person or persons paying the same, or so much thereof as, in such receipt or receipts, should be acknowledged or expressed to be received. The question in this case was, whether the clause against anticipation was effectual in the absence of any words restraining anticipation in the receipt clause.

HIS HONOUR said that the only doubt was, whether the effect of the clause against anticipation was rendered inoperative by the absence of negative words in the receipt clause. That clause certainly must operate as an effectual restraint upon anticipation; and, in his opinion, the receipt clause must be construed with reference to the previous words of restraint, which could not be altered or indued with a different sense by the subsequent language, provided such was not of a distinct revocatory character.—See Moore v. Moore (1 Coll. 54); Baggett v. Meux (1 Coll. 138); and Brown v. Bamford (11 Sim., 127).

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Thursday, Jan. 30.

REG. v. CARTER.

Judgment on several counts of an indictment for the same and similar offences.

The Solicitor-General prayed the Court to pass sentence upon the defendant, who had pleaded guilty to two several indictments, charging him, being an excise officer, with obtaining money under false pretences in the counties of Merioneth and Montgomery; the false pretences being, that larger sums than the law authorized were payable for excise licenses; and also in other counts with forging and falsifying excise licenses. There were eight counts in the first and twelve in the second indictment.

PATTERSON, J. in pronouncing the sentence of the Court, went through each count of each indictment separately; and upon each sentenced the defendant to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour, the same eighteen months in the House of Correction at Cardiff.

PARNELL v. SMITH.

DENMAN, C. J.—We think that we ought to grant the rule for a new trial unless the parties can agree on the case. Upon the case we should enter the verdict for the plaintiff, if we thought him entitled on the facts. Rule accordingly.

PITCHER v. VICARS.

DENMAN, C. J.—In this case we think the verdict of the jury as to the non-identity was warranted by the facts, and there is an end of the case. Rule discharged.

PRICE v. CARTER.

DENMAN, C. J.—We are quite satisfied that there is no ground for the motion made in this case; and that the defendant had no right to take advantage of the objection to the warrant of attorney. Rule discharged.

REG. v. HUDSON.

This Court will not interfere by mandamus to order the gaoler of the Queen's Prison to pay a certain sum weekly out of the fund for poor prisoners to a poor prisoner in his custody: the regulation of the prison being in the Secretary of State, according to Act of Parliament.

Pashley shewed cause against a rule calling on John Long, the prosecutor, to shew cause why the mandamus which had been issued to the defendant, the keeper of the Queen's Prison, commanding him to pay to the prosecutor a sum not exceeding 3s. 6d. per week, out of a fund in his hands provided for the relief of poor prisoners, should not be quashed, quia improvide emanavit. Two points are raised by the affidavits: 1st, whether this Court had any jurisdiction to issue the writ, or whether the exclusive jurisdiction over the subject-matter was not vested in the Secretary of State; 2nd, if the Court had the power, whether the circumstances were such as called for its exercise. It appeared that John Long had been a prisoner in the Queen's Prison from May 1843, for a contempt of the Court of Chancery. At first, 5s. a week had been allowed him out of the fund for poor prisoners, and afterwards a diminished allowance of 3s. 6d. which he received from the 24th Feb. 1844, when he became master of the racket court, which produced about 5s. a week; his allowance was then discontinued, and not restored to him after he had ceased to hold the office. The stat. 5 Vict. gave the Secretary of State power to make regulations concerning the government of the Queen's Prison, and under that stat. Sir James Graham had made certain rules authorizing the payment of 5s. during the first six months, and 3s. 6d. during the second to poor prisoners imprisoned for a variety of causes, but not including cases of contempt, after which period it was to cease altogether. He had also ordered a diet to be provided similar to that which was provided in county prisons for poor debtors; and that diet the prosecutor had received from the 23rd to the 29th November, when the mandamus to pay the money was served upon Mr. Hudson. Upon the first point it is submitted that, under this Act, the Secretary of State had certain powers given to him, in the exercise of which even he would be liable to a mandamus from this Court; and that a mandamus to him could not be treated as a mandamus to the Crown; that whatever might be the authority of Sir James Graham, it could not afford any protection to Mr. Hudson for his wrongful act, the rule respondeat superior not being in such cases recognized by the law of this country; that mandamus was the appropriate remedy in all cases of oppression to the subject; and although it was doubtful whether, at common law, a gaoler was bound to feed his prisoners, that very doubt rendered the duty of distributing any funds provided for poor prisoners by statute the more stringent upon the gaoler; that in this case the gaoler had a fund in his hands; that the Secretary of State had made no regulation applicable to the case, but had in express terms provided that if any case occurred which did not fall within the regulations which he had made, the gaoler was to act in the manner which he considered most appropriate; and lastly, that the motion to quash the writ could not properly be made till after the return: citing on the last point —— v. —— (2 Atk. 318); Tidd's Pr. 403; R. v. Lediard (Say. Rep.); R. v. Owen (Skinner, 669; Comberb.) [PATTESON, J.—It is laid down in those cases that there may be a motion to quash even after the return, —much more before.] On the second point it was contended that the circumstances demanded the interference of the Court, as it appeared from the affidavit that the prosecutor had been reduced to the extremity of destitution by the refusal of the gaoler to make him any allowance.

Authorities cited as to office of Secretary of State: —— v. Carrington (2 Wils. 725); Hallam's Constitutional History; 1 Blackst. Com. 338; Stat. 38 Geo. 3, c. 36; Lord Canterbury v. —— (1 Phil. 324). As to the rule respondeat ouster: Whitfield v. Le Despenser Lord (Cowp. 754); Gidley v. Lord Palmerston (3 Brod. & B. 275). Not a mandamus to the Crown: 2 Co. Inst. 186; R. v. Powell (1 Q. B. 352); R. v. Steward of Manor of Witchford (7 Dowl. 709; 1 Q. B. 356, n.). As to ground for mandamus: Bagge's case (11 Rep. 93). As to the duty of gaoler to feed his prisoner: Co. Litt. 295; Pinchon's case (9 Rep. 86); Robinson v. Walter (Popham, 127); Bro. Ab. tit. Ley. Gage, pl. 8; Driver v. —— (Plowd. 68); Munby v. Scott (1 Mod. Rep.); Mood v. The Mayor of London (2 Salk. 683); R. v. JJ. N. R. of Yorkshire (2 B. & C. 286); 2 Hawkins, P. C. c. 22. As to the provision for poor prisoners: Stats. 22 & 23 Car. 2; 2 Geo. 2, c. 22, s. 19; the Lords' Act. General authority over gaolers: R. v. Huggins (17 How. Sta. T. 179); Magna Charta.

The Solicitor-General (M. D. Hill, Q. C. and Waddington, with him) in support of the rule.—The question here is not whether this Court will interfere by mandamus to save a prisoner from starvation; but whether it will direct a payment out of a particular fund. It appears upon the affidavits that a diet was provided for the prisoner under the orders of the Secretary of State, and that he refused it. The statute 5 & 6 Vict. for regulating the Queen's Prison, provided much more amply for the relief of poor prisoners than did the previous Act, 53 Geo. 3; and it gave the Secretary of State power to make regulations. It is admitted that the Secretary of State is bound by that Act as much as any other public officer executing a statutory power; but he has issued his regulations under the statute; they have been acted upon by the gaoler in this case, and the question is whether this Court will interfere. (He was then stopped by the Court.)

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—It is clear that the keeper had no authority to do what we ordered. We granted the mandamus under the supposition that some violence had been done to the rights of the subject; but as the facts now appear, we cannot suppose that the prisoner was in the slightest degree of danger from destitution. Rule absolute.

Ex parte STANESBY and OTHERS.

It is not necessary on an application for a rule for payment of money pursuant to an award, to shew the same formalities of demand and refusal which are necessary on moving for an attachment.

Smirke (Martin, Q. C. with him) then shewed cause against a rule which had been obtained in the same matter, for the payment of the money awarded by the arbitrator. He submitted that the award was bad. It purported to be the award of three, and appeared on the face of it to be signed by one in London, and two at Truro, and there was also an affidavit to that effect. The Court of Exchequer last Term decided that point in a case of Stalworth v. Innes. Little v. Newton (2 M. & G. 351); Perrin v. Keane (3 Ad. & E. 215), are authorities on the same question. Then, before this application can be granted, the Court must see that a formal demand has been made, there being no distinction between this application and that for an attachment.

Alexander, Q.C. amicus curiæ, stated that in Stalworth v. Innes, the Court of Exchequer refused to set aside an award by two arbitrators, on the ground that both had not argued it at the same time and place; but declared that they would not assist the party to enforce it by attachment, but leave him to his remedy by action.

O'Malley, in support of the rule. That was a perfectly extra-judicial opinion; and here, at all events, there is nothing to shew that this award was not signed by each in the presence of the others. It is true that the attestation to the two signatures is by the clerk of an attorney of Truro; and to the other one by a person describing himself of London; and the dates are different; but it is not inconsistent with that, that all the arbitrators were present when each signed; and the affidavit only states that when the last signed, the award then purported to have been signed by the other two; which would have been the case if the others had signed a minute before.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—We think that the evidence does not raise that point, as to the execution of the award.

Montague Smith.—As to the other point, the practice is not the same on moving for payment of the money, and for an attachment; in the former case it is only a summary method of obtaining the money that is due, but in the latter, the formal demand and refusal, and the warrant of attorney are necessary, in order to bring the party into contempt. (Doe dem. Moody v. Squire, 2 Dowl. N. S. 327; Jones v. Williams (2 Dowl. N.S. 938).

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—We think that distinction is sufficient. Rule absolute.

Re CHARLES CARUS WILSON.

REG. v. THE VICOMTE OF JERSEY.

Under stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 45, every judge of the superior courts of common law has power to make an order at chambers directing a writ of habeas corpus to issue under the seal of the court, and returnable in any of the three courts.

The stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 45, is binding in Jersey, though not expressly named therein.

It is no ground for quashing a writ of habeas corpus issued by a Baron of the Exchequer under the seal of this court, returnable in this court, that the affidavit on which the order of the learned judge is made is entitled in the Exchequer, the rule of H. T. 2 Wm. 4, not applying to that case.

Semble—That if it were shewn beyond all doubt, that fraud had been practised on the judge who issued the order, that would be a ground for quashing the writ; but the general practice of the court is not to quash the writ for any matters which can properly be raised on the return.

Kelly, Q. C. and Peacock shewed cause against a rule calling on Charles Carus Wilson to shew cause why a writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum, to bring up the body of the said Charles Carus Wilson, a prisoner in her Majesty's gaol in Jersey, should not be quashed. The first objection taken to the writ was that the learned judge (Mr. Baron Rolfe) under whose order the writ had issued had no authority to make that order. It must now be taken for granted that the great prerogative writ of habeas corpus would lie to Jersey; and the first answer to the application was that the matters of fact and law raised by it could only be properly discussed on a return; then an opportunity would exist of traversing the facts stated. The writ in question had been issued under the seal of this court, i. e. out of this court, and made returnable in this court; and the question was, whether the learned judge, being a Baron of the Exchequer, had power to make the order. That depended upon the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 45, than which no words could be more comprehensive; the former Act applied only to matters pending in the courts; and it was found necessary to extend the powers of single judges sitting in chambers to all business which might be transacted by a single judge, in any court, the granting of writs of habeas corpus and certiorari being expressly named; and as to the writ of certiorari, that must always issue out of the Queen's Bench. Pro hac vice Rolfe, B. was a judge of this court. The necessity of such a provision is obvious, when it is considered that during the circuits, only a single judge remains in London to transact all the business of all the courts. The Court will not be astute in finding defects in the issuing of a remedial writ so important as the habeas corpus, and will not construe the Act of Parliament so as to narrow the powers given. (The Canadian Prisoners' case, 9 Ad. & El. 731.) Another objection was, that this writ being issued as at common law, and not under either of the statutes, could not be issued in vacation; but that is not so. First, this is not a criminal matter, and, therefore, the writ is good under the 56 Geo. 3, c. , which extended the remedy by habeas corpus, given originally in criminal matters by stat. Chas. 2, to other than criminal matters (Long Wellesley's case, 1 Dowl. N. S. 152): and secondly, at common law every judge has power to order a writ of habeas corpus to issue in vacation, either returnable before himself, or, if Term should intervene, before the Court of which he is a member; and then the stat. 1 & 2 Vict. says that he may do it in any court. (Re The Canadian Prisoners, 9 Ad. & E. 731; Ex parte Beachy, 4 B. & C. 3; Blackstone's Com.; Shepherd's case, 1 Burr. 660; Wilmot's Notes.) Another objection is, that in the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 45, Jersey is not named, and that that Act, therefore, is not binding there. But a great confusion of legal doctrines is involved in that proposition; if a new penalty were imposed upon any offence, or a new offence created by any Act in which Jersey was not named, it might not take effect there; but that is the full extent of the doctrine. It might as well be said that the Act for altering the Terms, or the Regency Act, making George 4th Prince Regent, or the present Regency Act, has no force in Jersey. Where powers already existing are intended by Act of Parliament, if they applied to Jersey before, they apply afterwards in their extended force. The affidavits shew no ground for quashing the writ; they only shew at the most that there were the means of serving a former writ, which the opposite party had got a rule to set aside, quia improvide emanavit. Lastly, the application is irregular; it ought to have been to set aside the order of Mr. Baron Rolfe; until that is done, the writ cannot be quashed. (Turquand v. Hawtrey, 9 Mee. & W. 727.)

The Solicitor-General, Wortley, Q. C. and J. W. Smith, in support of the rule.—At common law, no Court had power to issue a habeas corpus, except the Queen's Bench. In the Common Pleas and Exchequer their power to do so was limited to cases concerning the officers of their own courts. Whether the single judges of the Queen's Bench could in vacation was long doubted. (Coleridge's Blackst.; R. v. Cowle, 2 Bur. 834.) When, therefore, a Baron of the Exchequer issues a writ of habeas corpus, he does it by statute. Under the 31 Car. 2, he could do it in respect of criminal or supposed criminal matters, and "under the seal of the Court of which he was a member." By the 56 Geo. 3, that power was extended to other than criminal matters; but still the writ could only be issued under the seal of the Court of which the judge issuing it was a member. Then the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 45, recited the 1 Wm. 4, c. 70, which it was clear gave to the judges of all the courts equal power as to all matters depending in the courts, and over which they had concurrent jurisdiction; and it was equally clear that the object of the statute 1 & 2 Vict. was to extend that power to business belonging to some one of the courts, exclusive of the others, and to such business only. The Act does not therefore apply here, because the granting of writs of habeas corpus did not, when that Act passed, exclusively belong to any one court. It is true, the issuing of writs of habeas corpus is expressly mentioned; but it is mentioned in conjunction with writs of certiorari, which do exclusively belong to this court; the meaning must therefore be, such writs of habeas corpus as belong to one court in particular, as writs of habeas corpus cum causâ or ad testificandum, arising out of matters depending in one of the courts. As to the second point, Jersey is not bound by Acts in which that island is not expressly named (4 Inst. 287); and by the statute in question extensive powers are given, which may materially affect the people of Jersey. Unless the rule of law be strictly acted upon, the greatest uncertainty will arise as to what Acts are, and what are not, binding on the people of Jersey. The Acts referred to are not analogous. The Act altering the Terms gives no additional powers; and the Regency Acts contain words large enough to comprehend Jersey, and all the dominions of the Crown. (Sir F. Dwarris, 12 Rep. 109.) As to the objection to the form of the rule, if the writ is void, the order is void; and Turquand v. Hawtrey has no application. The writ of habeas corpus is a writ of right, but not a writ of course; and at common law the judge ought to be satisfied that there is reasonable ground for believing that the party is illegally imprisoned (the case of The Hottentot Venus, 13 East); nor will the Court issue the writ if it sees that it will be useless to do so. (R. v. Stirell, and other cases cited in Hobhouse's case, 3 B. & Ald. 420; Blake's case, 2 M. & S. 428; Way's case, 2 M. & S.) [It was then contended, upon the affidavits, that if Mr. Baron Rolfe had not been kept in ignorance of the facts, he would not have granted the application, or at most only a rule nisi, for that it appeared from the affidavits, that Mr. Carus Wilson well knew that there was a legal judgment of the Royal Court of Jersey pronouncing him guilty of contempt; and that that alone, by the law of the island, justified his imprisonment without any warrant; and that the jurats were ready to swear him to any affidavit; which he had denied.] Lastly, the affidavit on which the order of Mr. Baron Rolfe was obtained, is entitled in the Exchequer, and cannot therefore be used in this court.

Lord Denman, C. J.—Mr. Peacock, can we act on an affidavit so entitled?

Peacock.—The Court is not asked to do so. The writ has already issued; but the motion was not made on that ground; and if the objection had any weight, it would apply to the order and not to the writ. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Denman, C. J. now delivered judgment.—That the writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum has legal force in the Island of Jersey, and must be obeyed, is now admitted on all hands, nor can we be parties to the encouragement of any doubt whether the inconvenience that may result may justify us or any judge in declining the exercise of it in behalf of any person who lawfully requires it. The present question, therefore, on the rule for quashing the writ, depends upon the peculiar circumstances attending that writ: had the learned baron power to issue it, returnable in this court? We are convinced that he possesses that power. The statute of the 1 & 2 Vict. uses the words "habeas corpus" in the most general manner. In any case we should be slow to control the operation of unambiguous words for any supposed intention of the Legislature, and we should least of all think ourselves at liberty to pursue that course to restrain the power of the habeas corpus. It is not needful to dwell more particularly on the arguments of counsel in support of that proposition; but those affidavits upon which the writ was issued appear to be entitled in the Exchequer, and a doubt was felt whether, so entitled, they can authorize a learned baron of that court to act as a judge of this under the statute. No reference is made to the rule (promulgated by all the Courts) in the 2nd Wm. 4, which said that an affidavit sworn before any judge shall be received in the court to which such judge belongs, but not in any other, unless entitled in the court in which it is to be used. This is not applicable to the present case; but this language points out a distinction which we think is applicable. These affidavits are not pressed upon us to be received here; they have been received and performed their office before the Baron: were they properly received? is the question. It is not enough to say they may have been; for when they were last before him he may have acted as judge of the Court of Exchequer, having power to make the writ returnable there; and it is stated he was requested to do so, but he suggested it should be made returnable before us. Then he would have received them properly in the first instance; and it seems to us he had a discretion at the last as to the court where the writ should have been made returnable, and might legally act on those affidavits in sending the matter to the Court of Queen's Bench. But a deception is said to have been practised, as the applicant knew he was in prison under sentence of contempt in the Royal Court of Jersey, and fraudulently kept Baron Rolfe in ignorance of that fact; and that if he had been properly informed of that he would not have issued the writ at once, but would have obtained further information of such fact from the applicant, or, at least, have granted a rule nisi; and in either case there may be good reason for believing it would not have issued. It may be that if it appeared, beyond all doubt, a fraud had been practised, the writ ought to be quashed; but of the fact we are not quite satisfied. It rather seems to us that Mr. Wilson, an English lawyer, may have assumed a warrant for his commitment was necessary, and that the absence of any warrant, or the refusal to shew him the warrant, would entitle him to his liberation; and it may be that he was ignorant of what was stated upon the affidavits, that a sentence of the Court was a sufficient warrant. If the fraud is not made out, then we must consider whether the writ is to be set aside because the learned baron did not obtain that information which might have been given, that is, whether he has abstained from exercising a discretion so obviously demanded by the occasion that we ought to condemn and annul that which he has done. The strong cases supposed of a sick man sinking under an infectious distemper, or of an insane man being brought into court, are instances where, if shewn to the Court, all other considerations must give way. But there is a wide difference between such a state of things and the imprisonment of a sane man. We do not intimate any opinion that a previous inquiry would be wrong, where there was reason for supposing the prisoner to be under a sentence of the Court; but we think such a course desirable, and the learned judge would, on further reflection, have granted a rule nisi. But this is an application to quash a writ actually issued forth. We find from the Master of the Crown-office that this Court held more than once in the 26 Geo. 3, that no writ of habeas corpus should be quashed for matters that can be properly returned to it; and we certainly think, as a general rule, that is the most convenient course, the most just to the party applying for the writ, and most in furtherance of the great object for which our Constitution has appointed it. Still, as the learned judge thought proper to issue the writ without these facts being required to be proved before him, we do not think we should be justified in setting it aside, and the consequence is, this rule must be discharged, and the return must be made.

Rule discharged, the writ returnable in ten days.

Friday, Jan. 31.

Sir J. Bayley moved for leave to make a judge's order a rule of Court, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 18, for payment of debt and costs by instalments, or the plaintiff to be at liberty to sign judgment and issue execution upon non-payment of any instalment. The motion had been referred to the full Court, as there was some doubt whether such an order was within the Act. Leave granted.

JOHNSON v. HILL.

The construction of particulars of demand is a point of law, and will not be taken the last day of Term.

Gale moved to enter a verdict for 8*l.* the plaintiff having been nonsuited upon what was alleged to be a misconstruction of the particulars of demand.

Lord Denman, C. J.—That cannot be taken today.

DOE dem. DEACON v. PERRY.

Practice—Amendment of declaration in ejectment.

Bramwell shewed cause against a rule obtained by Willes to set aside an order of Mr. Justice Williams, with costs, giving liberty to the plaintiff to add a new demise on payment of costs.

Willes, contrà, stated the principal point to be, that the attorney had concealed from the learned judge that there was an action of ejectment already pending in the name of the proposed new lessor.

Lord Denman, C. J. That would have made no difference. Rule discharged without costs.

FORSTER v. BANK OF ENGLAND.

A plaintiff suing in formâ pauperis has no right to amend without payment of costs.

This was an action by the plaintiff, suing in formâ pauperis against the Bank of England, for non-payment of dividends. The declaration had been demurred to, and Pearson had obtained a rule for leave to amend the declaration without payment of costs, against which Bovill now shewed cause.—The 23 Hen. 8, c. 15, exempted paupers from all costs given by that statute. In Pratt v. Delarue (2 D. N. S. 32, 10 M. & W. 309) the Court of Exchequer decided, that although paupers were exempt from interlocutory costs, they were liable to costs under 1 Reg. Gen. H. T. 2 Wm. 4, s. 110. The judgment confined their liability to this single exception, but the older cases of costs imposed for vexatious conduct were not referred to. They are collected in 16 Vin. Abr. The Court will exercise its discretion to inflict costs. (Doe dem. Lindsey v. Edwards, 2 D. P. C. 471.) Here it appears the alleged ground of action occurred in 1841, and nothing is done until 1844. The declaration is full of objections.

Pearson, contrà.—The pauper has a right to amend. [Lord Denman, C.J.—How do you shew that? Amendments are at the discretion of the Court.] By 23 Hen. 8, c. 15, s. 2, he is exempted from all costs. If it is a matter of discretion, the Court will not compel a person who is not worth 5*l.* in the world to pay costs. [Lord Denman, C.J.—Then he should take care and have a better declaration.] The faults are only grounds of special demurrer.

By the Court.—This amendment is asked as of right, and we therefore give our opinion upon it. A pauper has no right whatever to make amendments without payment of costs. We might advise the Bank to make some arrangement, but as a matter of law, the rule must be discharged. Rule discharged.

REG. v. JUSTICES OF HERTFORDSHIRE.

Costs of certiorari to remove order of petty sessions after certiorari for order of quarter sessions on appeal.

Wordsworth mentioned this case again to the Court as to the second rule for a certiorari, which had been obtained to bring up the order of the petty sessions. (See suprà, p. 291.) It was unnecessary, as by the removal of the order of quarter sessions, that of petty sessions was also removed.

Kelly, Q. C. and Hawkins, contrà.

Discharged with costs, if the order of Petty Sessions was, in fact, removed.

SHORT v. STONE.

Averment of request in a declaration for breach of promise of marriage may be material, although the subsequent marriage of the defendant is averred.

Butt shewed cause against a rule obtained by Peacock for rescinding an order of Wightman, J. setting aside a judgment signed, for want of a plea. It was an action for breach of promise of marriage. The promise was laid to marry upon request. The breach was a refusal to marry upon request, and that the defendant had married another person. Plea—Traverse of the request.

The Court called on

Peacock, who contended that it was not an issuable plea, and that the judgment was rightly signed. The marriage of another person dispenses with the request. (Harrison v. Gage, 1 Lord Raym. 386; Ford v. Tiley, 6 B. & C. 325.) A woman cannot be expected to request a man who is already married to marry her. The request, although a condition precedent, is dispensed with.

By the Court.—The plea is material. The plaintiff has chosen to allege a double breach. Suppose the case of a purchase of goods, and an action for non-delivery, and an averment that the defendant refused to deliver, and threw them into the sea, the traverse of the request would be good.

Discharged with costs.

REG. v. PRINTER and PUBLISHER OF THE COURT JOURNAL.

Talfourd, Serjt. appeared on the part of the defendant, and stated that the defendant felt that it was his duty to take the earliest opportunity of adopting the course which appeared to be that most befitting him in the circumstances of the case. The application had been made against the printer and publisher, and not against the proprietor of the paper, who was a lady. He (Mr. Serjeant Talfourd) could well understand the feeling which had induced the noble earl to abstain from making an application against the proprietor, who now came forward to express her deep regret at the introduction into her journal of the unfounded calumny of which the noble earl had complained, and she had already done every thing in her power to atone for the injury which had been involuntarily done. In the week following the publication she wrote a letter, in which she apologised for it, and this letter she caused to be inserted in the Court Journal, and sent for insertion to the morning papers, in some of which it appeared. Whether Lord Cardigan would be satisfied with this he (Mr. Serjeant Talfourd) did not know. The lady, however, felt the deepest contrition, which was shared in by the printer and publisher, who placed the most perfect reliance on the denial of the noble earl. It now remained for Lord Cardigan to state what course he should adopt. The parties for whom he (Mr. Serjeant Talfourd) appeared had made all the reparation in their power, and had now only to throw themselves upon the mercy of the noble lord.

The Solicitor-General said that, not having had any communication with his client, he was unable at present to do any thing else than make the rule absolute. What might be done afterwards would be a matter for future consideration.

Lord Denman, C. J. observed that the apology was most ample.

The Solicitor-General admitted such to be the fact, and expressed his gratification at the defendant's conduct. Rule absolute.

ROWCLIFFE v. GUNDRY.

Practice—Application for peremptory undertaking to try after consolidation of actions.

This was a rule obtained by Kinglake, Serjt. calling upon the plaintiffs to give a peremptory undertaking to try at the next Devonshire Assizes, or that money paid into court in this action and in Rowcliffe v. Brown should be paid out.

These were two actions in covenant, one against the executor of the lessee, the other against the assignee of the lease. On July 2, 1844, at the application of the defendants, Wightman, J. ordered the actions to be consolidated; that Brown should pay 400*l.* into court, Gundry should pay 200*l.* into court upon his plea of payment; that the present action should be tried, and the other stayed; but all the evidence applicable to both to be admissible in this, and the defendant Brown should be bound by the result. The commission day was July 23. On August 10th the plaintiff was ruled to reply. On November 29th there were some amendments made to meet the form of the order. Replication delivered Dec. 2, with rule to rejoin. Jan. 10, 1845, issue joined.

Bull now shewed cause, contending that the affidavits were entitled in one action only, and further, that there had been no neglect on the part of the plaintiff.

Kinglake, Serjt. contrà.—The facts and dates shewed that it was intended that the action should have been tried at the Summer Assizes; one of the terms was, that the defendant should accept two days' notice of trial. [PATTESON, J.—Is there any precedent for such a peremptory undertaking?] Under the circumstances, the Court will either order the money to be paid out of Court or the undertaking to be given.

Bull objected that the money belonged to Brown, upon which

Gray, for Brown, assented to the money being paid out to Gundry.

Bull pressed the objection to the affidavits.

By the COURT.—Probably the necessity of the case will be met by the defendants making a prompt application if the cause is not tried at these assizes.

Discharged without costs.

SIMMONS, Assignee of BIRCH, v. KING.

Practice—Acceptance of costs under a judge's order, after a rule nisi obtained to rescind it, precludes the party from making the rule absolute.

Watson, Q. C. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Pashley to set aside an order of Wightman, J. allowing the plaintiffs to amend the record in a feigned issue, under the Interpleader Act. A bill of exceptions had been tendered at the trial, and error brought thereon. The Exchequer Chamber held that a writ of error did not lie upon a feigned issue; but as it appeared by the record in this case, that the cause had been commenced by writ of summons, which was untrue, they postponed the judgment to allow an application to be made to this Court to amend the record. Wightman J. had made the order, the plaintiffs to pay the costs occasioned by the amendment. This rule was moved for on the 14th or the 15th King had his costs taxed, and received them on the 16th; the defendants are therefore estopped from disputing the order. (Kennard v. Harris 2 B. & C. 801.)

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—It is quite clear the defendants are not entitled to the costs.

Pashley.—There was no jurisdiction to make the order. [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—You rely on Green v. Miller (2 B. & Ad. 781).] It was an improper application, and therefore we are still entitled to the costs. [COLERIDGE, J.—How is the rule drawn up?] To rescind the order allowing the amendment. It can be moulded as to the costs. The record was drawn up two years ago.

By the COURT.—You cannot now object. It is a personal disability. There is no further occasion for the rule. Discharged with costs.

KING v. TRESS.

Practice—Where a cause is made a remanet from one sittings to another, the record must be resealed before the commencement of the sittings to which it stands over.

A rule had been obtained by D. D. Keane (suprà, 289) to set aside the verdict in this case, which had been tried as undefended. Notice had been given that it would be taken as undefended, but it stood over to the sittings after Michaelmas Term. On the first day of these sittings it was in the cause list, when Keane applied for a postponement, on the ground of the absence of a material witness for the defendant. Lord Denman, C. J. who presided, said it should keep its place, but that at all events it should not come on that day. It appeared that the officer of the Court had pointed out that it was not resealed, but this was not then heard by the defendant's counsel. The record was then resealed, and the case taken as undefended on the Saturday following. The irregularity complained of was, that the resealing should have been prior to the sittings.

Pashley now shewed cause.—It is a question of strict right, and the Court will decide in favour of the plaintiff, unless the words of the rule relied upon by the defendant are express beyond all doubt. The rule of 7 E. T. Geo. 1 requires that all records are to be sealed on or before the respective days for which the trials are appointed. By rule 1 E. T. 33 Geo. 3, all writs of distringas and records which stand over from one sitting to another are to be regularly resealed previous to the sittings of the Court to which they stand over; and in default thereof that the causes be not tried. The rule Hil. 4 Wm. 4, R. G. 18, orders that it shall not be necessary to repass the record which shall have been once passed," and gives power to a judge, on an ex parte application, to amend the day of the teste and return of the distringas or the habeas corpora, or of the clause of nisi prius. But this has been held to be unnecessary where the cause is made a remanet. (Wells v. Day, 8 A. & E. 941.) [COLERIDGE, J.—Rightly it should be rescaled before. I have refused to try where it has not been resealed.] There is no absolute rule requiring it to be resealed before the commencement of the sittings. It would be sufficient if done before the trial. The whole "sittings" may, for some purposes, be considered as one day, but not for this.

D. D. Keane, in support of the rule.—The postponement of the trial is no bar to this rule. There can be no trial where there is no record, and the sealing is essential. And if there is no power to try, there is no power to postpone. The 7 Geo. 1 allowed the rescaling to be "on or before;" but experience having proved this to be inconvenient, the 33 Geo. 3 required the record to be resealed previous to the sittings. It is clear this meaning of "sittings" is, before the commencement of the sittings, not the day on which the trial takes place. This rule has been often acted upon. (Walker v. Hussey, 1 Car. & M. 366; Cook v. Smith, 1 D. N. S. 861.) [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—You say that there was no right to postpone, and you did not consent.]

By the COURT. The rule must be made absolute, with costs. Rule absolute, with costs.

Saturday, Feb. 1.

BROWNING v. SUGDEN.

Practice—Intervention of rights of third parties.

Bliss shewed cause against a rule obtained by Gray for setting aside a judgment and execution upon a warrant of attorney against the defendant and another, on the ground that it was entered up after the death of John Sugden, jun. The application is too late. The execution was levied on the 12th of November; on the 14th a fiat issued against the defendant. This rule was not obtained until Jan. 13. The plaintiff has since obtained a rule to enter a suggestion of the death, and to amend the fi. fa. His right to do this is shewn by various cases. (Newnham v. Law, 5 T. R. 577; Lacock v. Washbrough, 2 T. R. 757; Shaw v. Maxwell, 6 T. R. 450; Webb v. Taylor, 1 Dowl. & Lownd. 678.) [PATTESON, J.—Your judgment is wrong your rule does not go far enough.] Entering a suggestion implies amendment of the judgment. [PATTESON, J. The words do not include it.]

Gray waived his objection, and supported the rule upon the merits. It is not too late, because other interests have intervened. (Hunt v. Passman, 4 M. & S. 329; Webber v. Hutchins, 8 M. & W. 319.)

By the COURT.—The plaintiff's rule will be discharged, and the defendant's made absolute.

Judgment accordingly.

REG. v. DOBSON.
DOBSON v. GROVES.

M. Chambers had obtained two rules in these cases, the first of which was an indictment, and the second an action arising out of the dispute concerning the Greenwich pier. (The award had been set aside, suprà, 155.) In the indictment the verdict of guilty was to be entered, and the verdict in the action to be set aside, the case referred to a new arbitrator, and the costs to abide the result.

Bodkin offered a stet processus, but refused an undertaking that no new action should be brought.

Verdict of guilty to be entered, and verdict in the action set aside.

Re MANDER.

An outlaw cannot refer a bill to taxation.

Hoggins shewed cause against a rule obtained by Martin, Q. C. on behalf of Mr. Fulke Greville, to refer an attorney's bill for taxation. The bill appeared to be partly due from the late Countess of Mansfield and partly from Mr. Greville, who was her executor. It had been delivered as a joint account. This application to tax had been refused at chambers, on the ground that Mr. F. Greville was an outlaw, and this objection was again urged, and Aldridge v. Buller (2 M. & W. 412) was cited.

V. Williams, with whom was Martin, Q. C. in support of the rule.—There is no rule of law which debars an outlaw from having an attorney's bill taxed. It is not necessary, however, to consider this, as it appears Mr. Greville is the administrator of the Countess of Mansfield. [COLERIDGE, J.—You acquiesced in receiving a joint bill, and there must be a joint taxation.] He is the survivor. [COLERIDGE, J.—Yes, but not as administrator.] An outlaw may sue as administrator; and what is to be done here if he cannot tax the bill? It is a demand of moneys due from him at law as survivor, but from the intestate also in equity. He cannot tax the bill in equity, and must, therefore, do so here. But although an outlaw, he may tax the bill. The distinction is, that he cannot be heard to enforce a legal right of his own; but he may do so to protect himself from the claims of others. (Walker v. Thelluson, 1 D. N. S. 277, 578.) Suppose an action brought, and the bill cannot be taxed, the attorney will recover an unreasonable amount. The right depends upon the late statute. The words are general. [WIGHTMAN, J.—He has allowed a month to elapse, and there must be special circumstances.] He may take advantage of the Insolvent Act. (Hamlin v. Cropley, 8 Ad. & E. 677.) [PATTESON, J.—There is no undertaking necessary under the new Act, but how could judgment on the taxation be enforced?] There are abundance of funds to pay; the affidavits shew this. Unless there is a binding rule against it, the taxation will be allowed. An outlaw may file a bill for relief in equity.

By the COURT.—We think the rule applies to all cases where the outlaw is seeking to set the Court in motion for his own benefit, as he is doing here. If an action is brought, he can defend himself by an application. Rule discharged with costs.

FITZBALL v. BROOKS.

Is an action for less than 20l. under 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 15, s. 2, an "action for the recovery of a debt," within 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 57?

Ogle moved for a rule nisi to rescind a judge's order. The question is upon the construction of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 57, as to the meaning of the words "action for recovery of any debt." The declaration was upon the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 15, s. 2 (Dramatic Property Act). It follows the form of the Act. Judgment went by default for less than 20*l.* as stated in the declaration, and the defendant was arrested. He paid the amount, and the order was for the sheriff to refund, on the ground that the arrest was illegal according to the Act. There was no writ of inquiry, but the action was for unliquidated damages by the statute. "Debt" must mean contract on which the defendant owes. (Davies v. Lloyd, 3 M. & W. 69.) Here the jury must have found more than the sum. [COLERIDGE, J.—It is not penal action in requiring local venue. (Fyfe v. Bousfield, 3 Law T. 160.)] It has been held also not to be a debt. It is a quasi penalty. It might have been drawn for unliquidated damages.

Cur. adv. vult. Notice to be given to the sheriff that the question is under consideration.(a)

COLE v. DUKE OF SUTHERLAND and BARKER.

Costs—Sufficiency of allocatur.

Ogle shewed cause against a rule obtained by Gray, calling on Barker to pay to Cole certain costs, and the costs of the application. This question has already been disposed of in an application by the attorney for Cole for an attachment, which was refused in the Bail Court.

WIGHTMAN, J.—No; that was made by the wrong party. According to your view, neither party could obtain the money. The former application was altogether by a different party.

Ogle.—There has been no sufficient allocatur. It does not shew upon the face of it that they were the costs of the reference. They were to be paid a week after they had been ascertained. Nothing shews that the week had expired.

WIGHTMAN, J.—The date of the rule. It was served with the allocatur on the 1st of October.

COLERIDGE, J.—What other taxation was there?

Rule absolute.

FINDON v. M'LAREN.

Carriages upon the premises of a commission agent for the sale of carriages are privileged from distress.

This was an action of trover.

Plea.—Justification under a distress.

Replication That one Bailey was a coachmaker and commission agent for the sale of carriages; that the plaintiff sent the cabriolet in question to him for sale in the way of his trade, and not otherwise; and whilst it was in and upon the said premises for the purpose of sale in the way of his trade, it was seized.

Special demurrer.

Lush, in support of demurrer.—The question is whether, under the circumstances, the cabriolet was privileged from distress. The cases shew that exceptions of privilege will not be extended. (Muspratt v. Gregory, 3 M. & W. 677; Jackson v. Joule, 7 M. & W. 450.) It is only where the party exercises a public trade, as factors and auctioneers. [WIGHTMAN, J.—Does not a commission agent for sale of carriages carry on a public trade?] He must hold himself out publicly. Public is defined in Musgrove v. Gregory. In Gilman v. Eaton (3 B. & B. 86), the goods in the hands of a factor were held to be privileged. Dallas, C.J. there said, "Goods delivered to any person exercising a public trade or employment, to be carried, wrought, or managed in the way of his trade or employ, are for that time under a legal protection and privileged from distress." Factors and brokers are both known to the law. Factors receive goods into their possession, brokers do not. Auctioneers carry on their trade in a known manner, and therefore goods on their premises are privileged. (Adams v. Grane, 1 Cr. & M. 380.) [Wightman, J.—Does not that apply to a commission agent?] No. Factors and auctioneers are known to have possession of goods not their own; brokers are not. If a broker took possession, the goods would be liable to be distrained. The law does not know what a commission agent is, and the replication, therefore, is deficient in not shewing that it was a known trade. It is quite consistent with the allegation that he had merely a counting-house on the premises to carry on this business, or that, as coachmaker, he exposed the carriages for sale for the convenience of his customers. This is the common habit of coachmakers. And as commission agent has no known meaning, the replication should have shewn it was the usual course of trade, or that he had been accustomed to receive carriages in this way. This might have been merely an exception.

(a) We have inserted this, although no judgment was given, as we may not have an opportunity of hearing whether the rule is granted or not, and we understand that many similar actions are pending.

Lord Denman, C. J.—This is within the auctioneer's case.

Patteson, J.—A commission agent is for all intents and purposes a person carrying on a public trade within the exception.

Wightman, J.—The goods were sent to him in the course of a trade within the rule. The exceptions must arise from the progress of trade.

Balls v. Pink.

Execution—Fi. fa.

The sheriff must continue either absolutely or constructively in possession, even if the goods seized be in the possession of a third party, whose right to hold them is questionable.

Trover, for an omnibus. Pleas—Not guilty: Not possessed.

On the trial before Patteson, J. it appeared that the plaintiff was executor of an execution creditor, who derived title under the usual bill of sale by the sheriff. The defendant was a wheelwright, to whom the omnibus was sent to have new wheels put to it. On the 1st of April it was delivered to the owner, Mr. Matthews, and being used and broken on that day, was again left in the evening at the defendant's shop for further repair. This second repair amounted only to nine shillings, which was afterwards tendered, but the defendant refused to receive this sum, or to redeliver the omnibus, unless he were paid for the new wheels as well. On the 9th of April the execution was put in, but the sheriff's officer merely claimed the omnibus, and left no one in possession. It was delivered by bill of sale to the plaintiff's attorney on the 16th. There was a verdict for the plaintiff. A rule nisi had been obtained to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside, and a nonsuit entered.

Edwin James shewed cause.—After the first delivery of the omnibus by the defendant, his lien was gone. As to the second repair, the money was tendered, and the defendant had no right to refuse delivery, he was a tortfeasor for so doing. (Hartley v. Hitchcock, 1 Starkie, 408.) There was sufficient possession by the sheriff as against a stranger. Here there was a third party, which distinguishes this case from Blades v. Arundel (1 M. & S. 711). There was a good original seizure here. The omnibus remained untouched by any third party, and in a few days the bill of sale by the sheriff was given, which would have been a good resumption had six years elapsed. [Lord Denman, C. J.—Not so, for that would be evidence of abandonment.] But here the defendant himself being a wrong doer, cannot set up possession as in him.

Kelly, Q.C. in support of the rule.—The sheriff having full means of putting in a person to maintain possession, failed to do so. Neither did he or could he have made the defendant his agent to hold. There must be a continuance of actual or constructive possession; even a short absence must be accounted for. (Ackland v. Paynter, 8 Price, 95.)

Lord Denman, C. J.—It appears that nothing was done here by the sheriff to override the possession by the defendant, and that nothing was done amounting to resumption.

Rule absolute for a nonsuit.

Duncan v. Louch.

Right of way.

In an action for disturbance of right of way, it is no variance to prove a larger easement than that alleged, neither need the declaration set forth a condition attaching to the easement unless it be a condition precedent.

Case for disturbance of right of way.

There were nine pleas. The main question was whether the plaintiff, who claimed under a right of way subject to a condition to keep in repair, was or was not bound to set out that condition with an averment of performance in the declaration. There was a verdict for the plaintiff, which a rule nisi had been obtained to set aside, and to enter a nonsuit.

Ogle now shewed cause.—The plaintiff put in a deed, by which the condition appeared, and it was contended that this was a variance. It is not so; the first issue of not guilty was found for the plaintiff, hence the defendant was a wrong-doer, and cannot make this objection; it is for him to plead the condition and its breach. (Pomfret v. Rycroft, 1 Saund. 320.) The grantee is of course bound to repair.

Peacock, in support of the rule.—The plaintiff should have set out the claim of the right he proved. It is not a right of way, but merely a right of using a terrace. He had the right of walking on the terrace, not a mere right of way. It would have been an answer to him to have said you had no occasion to use the terrace. [Denman, C. J.—I find no such words in the deed.] [Wightman, J.—It only comes to this, that his right of way is over every part of the terrace.] [Coleridge, J.—And thus your objection is, that his proof is larger than his allegation.] No, that which is alleged as an absolute is only in fact a conditional right, and that condition should have been averred. (Thomas v. Cadwallader, Willes, 496; Platt on Covenants, 75.) But this is a condition precedent, and must be alleged. It was a condition to pay repairs, which we shewed was refused.

Lord Denman, C. J.—Taking the facts of the case as Mr. Peacock puts them, the verdict is right. Suppose a padlock is put on the gate of a square, would it be an answer to say you have only a qualified right, to a complaint that the right was wholly obstructed? Here was a clear right of way over the whole terrace, and the declaration is sufficient.

Patteson, J.—I cannot comprehend the distinction Mr. Peacock takes about this right of way; what is a right of way but a right of going backwards and forwards? his distinction is too subtle a great deal. The non-payment of repair is not a forfeiture of the right.

Coleridge, J.—The chief question seems to turn on the objection that the easement is incorrectly described, because the declaration sets forth less than the proof. It is contended that the right, being clogged with a condition, it ought to have been set out. Had it been a condition precedent, it might have been so, but that is not so here; it is, in fact, not a condition of the enjoyment of the right at all.

Wightman, J. It is maintained that the proof is of a different easement to that alleged; but it appears to me to state merely a right of way over part of the close, whereas it was over the whole, laying less than the right: this is clearly no variance. This is no condition precedent. (Buller's Nisi Prius, 169.) There is also the case of Gray v. Fletcher, tried in 1827 at Nisi Prius, and noted in Starkie on Evidence, where these points arose. Rule discharged.

There was another rule, to enter a verdict for the plaintiff on the three first counts, which was made absolute.

Penny v. Gabriel and Others.

Demurrer to replication.

The plea alleged an agreement between the plaintiff and defendants, that if the defendants executed a certain deed of assignment, he, the plaintiff, would not sue them upon certain bills of exchange. It further alleged the execution of the agreement by the defendants, and the acceptance thereof by the plaintiff. The replication traversed that the plaintiff accepted this assignment as and for the assignment stipulated for.

Grounds of demurrer.—That the traverse taken was immaterial; that acceptance by the plaintiff was not necessary to be alleged; and that the defendants were not bound to prove such acceptance.

Joinder in demurrer. That the traverse was material and proper; that the plea without the concluding averment shewed no sufficient accord and satisfaction, or suspension of the action: and, further, that the assignment in the plea mentioned as executed did not appear to be the assignment stipulated for by the agreement, the assignment executed being a deed of trust, and not absolutely vesting the assignees with the legal and equitable estate according to the agreement.

P. M'Mahon, in support of the demurrer.

Before the whole work is finished, A authorizes B to pay a certain portion of the money, when it shall become due, to C, and B undertakes to do so. A sues for the whole price. Is this undertaking an answer, pro tanto, under non assumpsit?

The above question was sought to be raised in this case, on a motion for a new trial, but when the facts were sifted, it appeared that the undertakings alleged to have been given by the surveyor, as agent for the defendant, were in truth given by him as agent for the plaintiff. Consequently, the point was not decided.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

REGISTRATION APPEALS.

Thursday, Jan. 23.

BOROUGH OF TAUNTON.

ALLEN (Appellant) v. HOUSE (Respondent).

A notice of objection is not vitiated by the insertion of the words "as householders" after the words "entitled to vote."

Where a case is so clear that the Court does not call upon the other side, costs will be allowed of course.

This was an appeal from the decision of the Revising Barrister for the borough of Taunton.

The facts, as set out in the case, were as follow:—In the borough of Taunton there are two lists of voters, one, of persons entitled to vote under the franchise created by the Reform Act, the other, of persons entitled in respect of the ancient franchise. The appellant's name appeared upon the former list, upon which a notice of objection was served upon him by the respondent, in the following form:—

"To Mr. John Allen, of East Reach, South-side.

"I hereby give you notice that I object to your name being retained on the list of persons entitled to vote as householders in the election of members for the Borough of Taunton.

"Dated, &c. "Signed, &c."

It was objected that the words "as householders" vitiated the notice, as there was no such list. The Revising Barrister admitted the notice, and the appellant, being unable to prove his qualification, was struck off the list. The question for the Court was "whether the notice in the form aforesaid given by the objector to the appellant was, under the circumstances, sufficient."

Other appeals were consolidated with this.

Kinglake, Serjt. for the appellants, submitted that the Act had prescribed a form of objection, and it was remarkable that there was not given to this, as to the others, any latitude by the words "to the like effect." The reason for it might be that the Legislature would require an objector, who sought to limit a right, to be more precise than a claimant. But even if the Court should be of opinion that the notice need not so strictly follow the form prescribed, he contended that the variance in this case was such as would not be sanctioned. It was calculated to mislead. There was no such list as "householders," and if the term applied to anything, it was more applicable to the list of Potwallers, who in their origin were householders, that is, 10*l.* occupiers.

ERLE, J.—But suppose he had said "as a free and independent elector," would that have vitiated the notice? Would it not have been surplusage?

Kinglake, Serjt.—But I submit that the statement is not only surplusage, but a wrong statement, and the person objected to might fairly have said, "There is no such list as householders; I shall not attend to it."

CRESSWELL, J.—But he clearly did understand it, for he appeared.

Cockburn, Q. C. and Cox, for the respondent, were not called upon.

TINDAL, C. J.—This notice is substantially good. If anything had been omitted or inserted calculated to mislead, it would have been bad. But certainly the words "householders' list" must be sufficiently understood in the borough of Taunton. It is so termed in common parlance, and at the utmost it is surplusage, and might be rejected. The only complaint is that the objector was too anxious to inform the claimants of his objection. The decision must be affirmed.

The rest of the Court concurred.

Cockburn, Q. C. applied for costs.

TINDAL, C. J.—When the case is so clear that we do not think it necessary to call on the other side, we shall give costs of course.

Decision affirmed with costs.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Thursday, Jan. 30.

LACEY v. BUNN.

Pleading—Several pleas.

Ogle moved for a rule to add three special pleas to the general issue.

The action was in assumpsit on a contract, whereby, in consideration that the plaintiff would play at Drury-lane Theatre at a certain salary as principal light comedian, the defendant undertook to employ the plaintiff, and to pay him the said salary.

Breach—That the defendant would not employ the plaintiff or pay him his said salary. The defendant now proposed to plead in addition to the general issue—

1st. That by the said agreement it was conditioned that the plaintiff should not play elsewhere than at Drury-lane, and that if he did, the defendant should be at liberty to put an end to the contract.

2nd. That there was a similar condition empowering the defendant to put an end to the agreement if the plaintiff refused to play "light comedy" on request; and,

3rd. To play any character at all, at seven days' notice.

By the COURT.—The third plea is only a variety of the second. You can take a rule to plead the two first.

Rule nisi to shew cause at chambers.

WILLIAMS v. WYNNE and OTHERS.

Award.

E. V. Williams moved to set aside the award, under an order of reference, whereby the cause and all matters in difference were referred. The action was in trespass, for taking a cow, mare, colt, and yearling-colt of the plaintiff, to which the defendant pleaded not guilty, and that the goods were not the property of the plaintiff.

It was contended that the arbitrator had not finally disposed of the cause, as though he had found against two of the defendants, with 9*l.* 10*s.* damages, he had only awarded, as to the other defendant, that the evidence was not sufficient to satisfy him. Therefore he awarded a stay of proceedings, without costs.

The next objection to the award was that all the issues on the record had not been disposed of.

Rule nisi.

RIDDELL v. DAVISON.

Award—Irregularity—Want of finality.

M. Chambers moved to set aside an award.

The action was one of trespass to the reversionary interest of the plaintiffs, as trustees of a chapel, by stopping up a water-course.

Pleas—1st, Not guilty; 2nd, a denial that the reversion was in the plaintiffs; and, 3rd, a denial of right to the water-course.

The award was irregular, inasmuch as it had been made by one of the arbitrators and the umpire, in the absence of the arbitrator, and it was not final, as it did not find upon the two last issues. Rule nisi.

Ex parte WM. PARTINGTON.

Habeas corpus—Commissioners of Bankruptcy—Power to remand—Construction of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96.

A Commissioner of Bankruptcy has a right to remand to his former custody a party who had petitioned the Court, obtained his interim order, but whose petition was dismissed. The twelve months mentioned in the Act only control the duration of the imprisonment, after the refusal of the final order, but do not apply to the case of a party in custody before that refusal.

Peacock moved on behalf of Wm. Partington for a writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum. The affidavits shewed that the prisoner, having been detained in execution by the sheriff on three writs, for a sum total exceeding 300*l.* petitioned the Insolvent Court in 1842, since which no further steps have been taken by him. In August 1844, he petitioned the Court of Bankrupts, under the 6th section of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, when an interim order was made till the 23rd September, for the protection of his person from process. On the 23rd Sept. the Commissioner refused his final order, on the ground that as he had already petitioned another court, he could not move in that court till the proceedings in the other had been concluded; and he further remanded him to custody. This the Commissioner had no authority to do. The prisoner could only have been retaken by the sheriff, after he had obtained his interim order, though the final order was refused. The 24th section of the Act shews the cases under which the Commissioner may remand a prisoner, and this case is not within that section. If, however, he has that power, the prisoner is entitled to his discharge under the 28th section of the Act, as he has been in custody more than twelve months. These points have been before the Court of Queen's Bench, and they have been decided against the application; and such was the view entertained of the Act by the Chief Baron at chambers; but as the petitioner is entitled to take the opinion of all the judges, he now presses for the judgment of this Court. Peacock then handed to the Court this case (Re Partington, 4 Law T. 172), which, he said, was the only report that had appeared, and contained a verbatim copy of the judgment of the Queen's Bench. Their lordships, having read the report, said that the case was of importance, and they would consider it. Cur. adv. vult.

Afterwards, Friday, Jan. 31.

PARKE, B. delivered judgment.—We are all of opinion that the prisoner is not entitled to his discharge. The right of the Commissioner to remand does not depend on the 27th section, but is incident to his power. It is not confined to the cases mentioned in the Act. This being so, it is unnecessary to decide the second point. As to the third, it is clear that the twelve months mentioned in the Act are imposed as a limit on the discretionary power of the Commissioner. It is meant thereby to control the duration of imprisonment after the refusal of the final order, and cannot apply to the cases of those parties, who, like the petitioner, have been in custody for any period of time before that refusal. When he shall have been imprisoned twelve months under the Commissioner's remand, the question may arise, but it cannot now.

Rule refused.

POYLE v. ——.

A document bearing a 10l. receipt stamp, and purporting to be for 10l. and also for "favours and services," is not within the provisions of the Stamp Act, which refers only to "debts, claims, and demands."

This was a motion for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection and the misreception of certain evidence, in which the Court had taken time to consider. The action was for seduction, per quod servitium amisit, and it appeared at the trial that the illness of the plaintiff's daughter arose from the desertion of the defendant, and not from her proving enceinte. This Pollock, C.B. thought was too remote a cause of action, and so directed the jury, who found on the plea of not guilty for the defendant accordingly. On this point, Pollock, C.B. now said that the Court was of opinion that the question was proper for discussion, but suggested that the necessity for a new trial might be obviated by the defendant submitting to a verdict for the plaintiff on the general issue, as, under the view taken of the other point, the defendant would be entitled to retain the verdict of the jury on the plea of accord and satisfaction.

In support of that issue a document was put in bearing a receipt stamp to the amount of 10*l.* and purporting, moreover, to be a discharge for all "favours and services" rendered by the plaintiff or her daughter to the defendant. This, it was objected, ought to have borne a 10*s.* stamp, as being a "receipt in full;" but it appeared that the Act only referred to cases of "debts, claims, and demands," neither of which could be said to be embraced in this paper; on that point, therefore, there would be no rule.

Watson consented for defendant, and so

Judgment accordingly.

NORDONSTROM v. PITT.

The common count for interest, alleging that defendant was indebted to plaintiff for interest on money forborne to the defendant at his request, is good; and a writ of error assigning that it does not raise any implied promise, is frivolous.

Edwards shewed cause against a rule obtained by Jerris, Q. C. to shew cause why execution should not issue against the defendants, notwithstanding a writ of error sued out by them, upon the ground that the grounds of error assigned were frivolous. The declaration contained the common count for interest, alleging that the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff for interest upon divers sums of money, for divers long spaces of time forborne by the plaintiff to the defendant, at his request. The ground of error assigned was, that the count was founded upon a promise supposed to be implied by law, and that no such promise could be implied, and that there was no sufficient consideration alleged to support an express promise.

Edwards.—There can be no promise to pay interest implied from the mere forbearance of money, whether that forbearance was at the request of the defendant or not. It ought at least to be alleged that the money was forborne at interest, but the request to forbear does not at all raise an implied promise to pay interest.

POLLOCK, C. B.—Are you aware how long this form has been in use in Westminster Hall?

Jervis, Q. C. and Butt, contrà.

By the COURT.—The rule must be absolute. We must consider this a frivolous objection.

Rule absolute.

M'INTYRE v. MILLER.

A declaration by the secretary of a company, suing for the company under an Act of Parliament, need not shew that the plaintiff was secretary at the commencement of the suit, if it appear that he was so at the time of declaring. The defendant having pleaded a plea, to which plaintiff demurred, defendant entered a relictâ verificatione, and no further proceeding was taken upon the plea. The proceedings were entered upon the Nisi Prius record, and judgment was given for the plaintiff upon the other pleadings. Error having been brought by the defendant, assigning that the plea had not been properly disposed of, and that, being admitted by the demurrer, it was an answer to the action: Held, that the error assigned was not frivolous, and the Court would not permit execution to issue.

In this case, Edwards shewed cause against a similar rule to that in the last case. The first ground of error was the same as that in the last case. The second was that it did not appear from the declaration that the plaintiff, who sued as secretary to a company under an Act of Parliament, was such secretary at the commencement of the suit, but only at the date of the declaration. The third ground of error was that founded upon the following state of the pleadings. The defendant had pleaded among other pleas, one to which the plaintiff demurred. The defendant then entered upon the record a relictâ verificatione in the following form:—"And the defendant, inasmuch as he cannot deny that his said plea is not sufficient in law to answer the said declaration, freely here in court abandons and relinquishes his said plea and all verification thereof; wherefore let no further proceeding be had to the said plea." The plaintiff had, in consequence of this, taken no further notice of the plea, but in making up the Nisi Prius record, it was entered with the rest, and also with the demurrer and subsequent relictâ verificatione. The error assigned upon this was, that this proceeding was wrong; that the plaintiff ought to have ruled the defendant to join in demurrer, and so have disposed of the demurrer in a proper manner, and that the relictâ verificatione was a mere nullity.

Edwards shewed cause against the rule, and contended that the grounds of error were not frivolous. After the decision of the Court in the other case, the defendant cannot rely upon the error firstly assigned. The second, however, is a substantial objection to the declaration. The plaintiff sues as secretary to a company, pursuant to an Act of Parliament, and the declaration does not shew that he was such secretary at the commencement of the suit. He may have been appointed after the writ was issued, although before declaration. [PARKE, B.—Is it not analogous to the case of a common declaration, which need not shew that the cause of action arose before the writ issued, though it would be necessary to prove it at the trial?] At all events, the third error assigned is far from frivolous. There has never been a decision upon an entry of this sort. The plea is admitted to be true in fact by the demurrer, and the defendant, although he might, perhaps, have entered a retraxit, if issue had been taken upon it, and so admitted the facts, cannot be supposed to be a judge of the sufficiency of the plea in law. Supposing the Court should be of opinion that the plea is good, are they, finding it admitted on the record to be true in fact, still to give judgment against the defendant? The plaintiff ought to have ruled the defendant to join in demurrer, so as to procure the judgment of the Court in the proper way, upon the validity of the plea. Not having done so, he must be taken to have admitted it. It is not necessary for the defendant now to shew the Court that there is actually error. It is sufficient if he makes out that the point is new and admits of doubt.

Jervis, Q. C. and Butt, contrà.—This is, at all events, not a point upon which the Court will look with favour. The defendant comes now to the Court to take advantage of what he says is the informality of his own proceedings. He has, in fact, laid a trap, in which he hopes to catch the plaintiff. The form is taken from Rastall's Entries, and has been frequently used. It amounts to exactly the same thing as if the defendant had, with the consent of the plaintiff, withdrawn the plea after having pleaded it. The only difference is, that instead of his taking back the plea, and putting it in his pocket, he has chosen to put his withdrawal of it upon paper. To this the plaintiff has assented, and the effect of it is, that the plea is completely done away with. It need not have been upon the Nisi Prius record, and its being there is of no consequence whatever. It cannot be said, that when pleadings were made, ore tenus, in open court, a party might not, at any stage of a case, have withdrawn any defence which he had once set up.

Borill, as amicus curiæ, here mentioned to the Court a case of Cooper v. Painter, and another, Hutton v. Turk, reported only in the Law Times, vol. 2, p. 74, in which forms like this had been before the Court. The effect of those cases was, that a form like this might be used by a defendant, and that as there could be no judgment given upon the demurrer upon such an abandonment of the plea, the plaintiff could obtain no costs of the demurrer.

By the COURT.—If the only grounds of error in this case had been the first and second, we should probably have thought them frivolous; but we cannot consider ourselves justified in deciding that the third error assigned is entirely frivolous, and unless we could come to that conclusion, we have no power to make this rule absolute. We are far from deciding that the point is really good, but we cannot say that there is absolutely nothing in it.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

On Error from the Court of Queen's Bench.

Tuesday, February 4.

(Before TINDAL, C. J., PARKE, ALDERSON, ROLFE, and PLATT, Barons, and MAULE and CRESSWELL, Justices.)

NEWTON v. HOLFORD and OTHERS.

Held, that money may be paid into court under the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 21, on an action of trespass, for breaking into the plaintiff's dwelling house, and assaulting his son, per quod servitium amisit.

This was an action of trespass, and the declaration, in the first count, charged the defendants with breaking and entering the dwelling-house of the plaintiff, and, in the second count, with assaulting his son, whereby he was deprived of the services of such son; and, in the third count, with another breaking and entering into the dwelling-house of the plaintiff, and assaulting another of his sons, whereby, &c. The plea was one of payment into court of forty shillings.

The replication traversed that the plaintiff had sustained damage to a greater amount than the forty shillings.

The jury found that the plaintiff had not sustained damage to a greater amount than the forty shillings.

Error was assigned that the plea was insufficient in law to bar the action, and now

Newton, in person, appeared to maintain the writ of error. He stated that the question was whether, in this form of action, the defendant can have the advantage of paying money into court, and thereby satisfy the declaration. Money was never before allowed to be paid into court in an action of this nature, or one resembling it. No precedent could be found of any such payment. A broad distinction had been always taken between actions for injuries with force, and without force. It was incumbent on the other side to shew the change which had taken place in the law in this important respect. This was an action of trespass, and charged three distinct causes of action for general damage:—1st, that defendant had forcibly entered the plaintiff's dwelling house, with weapons, &c.; 2nd, had assaulted the plaintiff's son; and, 3rd, had assaulted another son of the plaintiff. Now, either of these would form a separate cause of action, and a plea of payment cannot be pleaded to part of a count; and even if it could be, it is not so pleaded. It applies to the whole count. It might be a question (which he should confidently contend would be decided in the negative) whether such a plea could be pleaded to a forcible entry into a dwelling-house, because the wrong was one of force, and in such cases the defendant not only was bound to compensate the plaintiff, but also to pay a fine to the King. This count, besides, charges an assault on the plaintiff's son. No greater violation of the peace could be charged than the facts stated in this count. The recent statute, 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 21, extends the power of paying money into court by leave of the judge; but it has never been held to extend to such an action as this. Why should the parties guilty of such acts as those charged in the declaration be at liberty to pay money into court, and throw upon the plaintiff the onus of trying the amount of damages at his own hazard? The 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 21, seems to guard against such actions, as it contemplates them in its exception, thus enacting, that "the defendant may, in all personal actions (except actions for assault and battery, false imprisonment, libel, slander, malicious arrest or prosecution, criminal conversation or debauching of the plaintiff's servant or daughter), pay money into court," &c. [ROLFE, B.—The question is whether this is an action for assault and battery?] Here decidedly the plaintiff claims damages for an assault and battery. [TINDAL, C. J.—Not on himself. ALDERSON, B.—The section clearly only applies to an assault upon himself. The case of the servant is nearer this. TINDAL, C. J.—The case put of debauching shews beating a servant is not within the section, as expressio unius est exclusio alterius.] Case would lie for that injury without the assault. [ALDERSON, B.—The exception was intended to apply to personal injuries. MAULE, J.—The son might bring an action, and money could not be paid into court. The injury to the father is only the loss of service, which may be compensated by money.] This action will lie without an allegation of loss of service, if the plaintiff's house has been entered. (Buller, J. in Bennett v. Allcott, 2 T. R. 166.) [TINDAL, C.J.—There the debauching was held merely aggravation. The plaintiff might have recovered damages without the debauching, merely for breaking the house. ALDERSON, B.—Suppose the defendant had used slanderous words. The question is, what is the cause of action? Here, entering the house is the cause. MAULE, J.—The cause of action is breaking into the house and the loss of service of the son; the injury to the son is a cause of action to him, which possibly he may sue upon.] Has the parent a right to damages irrespective of the loss of service? He would have a right of action for the breach of peace in entering the house: he would be justified in resisting in defence of his son. It is a breach of the peace to assault the son in the parent's house. [ALDERSON, B.—Paying money into court for breaking the plaintiff's house with aggravation, is not within the exception. PARKE, B.—The action could not be maintained for the injury to the son without the allegation of the loss of service. ALDERSON, B.—If you proved the assault, you might still fail, which shews that the assault is no cause of action.] Ditcham v. Bond (2 M. & S. 436) is a very material case for the plaintiff. There it was held, that "a count for beating the plaintiff's servant, per quod servitium amisit, might be joined with counts in trespass for breaking and entering his dwelling-house and assaulting himself. This is substantially the declaration adopted here. [ALDERSON, B.—Could you not pay damages into court—1st, for the breaking the house; and, 2nd, for the loss of service? then why not for both? because debauching a servant (and not beating a servant) is the only exception. PARKE, B.—The reason why you cannot in this case pay the money into court is, that if you only proved the assault, you would get no damages.] The Legislature in the exception had the distinction mentioned by Blackstone in view, of cases of breach of the peace and of cases not within that category. [ALDERSON, B.—No doubt, before the Act, the law was so; but the question is, whether this case is within the Act?] The exception in the Act was intended to include actions on the case.

TINDAL, C. J.—The Act says, that in all personal actions, except for assault and battery, &c. and debauching the plaintiff's servant, money may be paid into court. This is not an action for assault and battery, as the assault here charged is only matter of aggravation, and could not be made the foundation of an action; and the express enactment as to debauching a servant shews that beating him was not included. Judgment must be affirmed.

DOE dem. MAJOR and ANOTHER v. ROE.

Judgment against the casual ejector—Sufficiency of affidavit of service.

Prideaux moved in this case for judgment against the casual ejector. The affidavit of service stated that the deponent served the three tenants in possession, "by delivering such true copy to each of them, the said Thomas Williams, Thomas Alexander, and Ann Thomas," not stating that a true copy was delivered to each.

WILLIAMS, J. thought the statement sufficiently certain. Rule absolute.

HAWKINS v. BENTON.

Judgment.

WILLIAMS J. gave judgment in this case, declaring that, as the award was certainly not free from objection, and as the parties could enforce it by action, he did not feel himself called upon to interfere; and he directed the Rule to be discharged.

SPARDING and ANOTHER v. GREVILLE.

Judgment.

His lordship, after having referred to the facts of this case, and the arguments used (see 4 Law T. 319), declared his opinion to be, that the variations and abbreviations were wholly immaterial; that they were such as were uniformly resorted to, and were sufficiently intelligible to prevent any misunderstanding; he therefore directed the Rule to be discharged with costs.

(Before Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN.)

MILNER and ANOTHER v. HART.

Warrant of attorney—Setting same aside when given for a debt in respect of which the defendant has been discharged by the Insolvent Court.

Greenwood and Payne shewed cause against a rule obtained herein by Crowder, Q.C. calling upon the plaintiffs to shew cause why the warrant of attorney, and the defeazance, should not be set aside, and why a sum of money received thereon by the plaintiffs should not be refunded to the defendant, with costs. It appeared that the defendant had applied for his discharge under the Insolvent Debtors Act; that he was opposed by the plaintiffs; that he was thereupon ordered to be discharged at the expiration of seven months; that, with the view of detaining the defendant during this latter period, the plaintiffs caused a detainer to be lodged against him. A proposal was then made, that, in consideration of the defendant giving a warrant of attorney for 49*l.* payable by instalments (the original debt as inserted in the schedule being 82*l.* 1s. 9d.), they would release him from custody. The warrant of attorney was accordingly given, and several payments had been made under it. It was now objected, 1st, that this application was premature, inasmuch as no proceedings had been taken upon the security (Key v. Masters, 1 Dowl.); 2nd, that the warrant of attorney was not in violation, as it was asserted, of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 91, which renders void any new contract to pay a debt from which the insolvent has been discharged; inasmuch as the consideration for the warrant was the defendant's discharge from custody. (Collins v. Benton, 9 Dowl. 930; Ashley v. Killick, 5 M. & W.)

Crowder and Hoggins, contrà, cited Sweeney v. Sharp (4 Bing. 37), and were stopped by the Court, which thought the case clear from doubt, and directed the rule to be made Absolute without costs.

Friday, Jan. 31.

(Before Mr. Justice WILLIAMS.)

BILLING v. RAILTON.

Although a plaintiff may insert a return day in the jury process or the writ of trial at a distant period after the day of trial, the Court will, on the application of a defendant (if he is prejudiced by the length of the return), order the officer in whose custody the record is, to return it earlier into court.

James shewed cause against the rule obtained herein, calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why the officer of the judge of the Sheriff's Court should not return the record in this cause into this court. Issue in this case was joined on the 3rd of January last, and an order for trying the case before the judge of the Sheriff's Court having been obtained, the cause came on for trial on the following 7th. At the trial, the defendant succeeded on his sixth plea, which went to the whole action. The writ of trial was made returnable on the first day of next Easter Term (15th April). It was now contended, in opposition to this rule, that notwithstanding the plaintiff had made the return of the writ at so distant a period, he was justified in so doing; that the defendant could have applied to have had the issue amended; that since the trial, an application had been made to a judge at chambers to order the return of the writ, but that he had refused to make an order; that the Act 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 17, merely requires that the writ of trial shall be made returnable at a day certain in Term or vacation, to be named in such writ, without imposing any limitation as to the length of the return.

Hoggins, contrà, argued that as the uniform practice of the Court is to have these writs returnable sometime in the same Term as the trial, or if the trial be had in vacation, on the first day of the ensuing Term, that the Court would interfere to prevent the injustice of the defendant's being deprived of his costs until the next Term; that if the plaintiff was justified in postponing the return to so long a date, he could postpone it for years; and a plaintiff who expected to be defeated probably would avail himself of such a power.

WILLIAMS, J. thought that, notwithstanding the terms of the Act of Parliament left it open to the plaintiff to insert what day he chose for the return of the writ of trial, yet as the practice had always been to make these writs returnable the same Term as that of the trial, and as it would be a matter of indifference to the sheriff whether the writ is returned now or at a future period, he should make the Rule absolute.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF CHESHIRE.—Townsend moved for a certiorari to remove an order of bastardy into this court, with the view to quashing the same, on the grounds that it does not appear that the evidence was taken upon oath, and that her statement was not declared to have been corroborated in some material particular. Certiorari granted.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

IT will be seen that many of the promised measures of law change (we will not call them law reforms till we see them) are to be introduced. Lord STANLEY brings into the Lords a Bill for regulating Charities. Sir JAMES GRAHAM renews his Settlement Bill, with amendments. The Government has adopted a Criminal Appeal Bill, we presume a sort of compromise between the measures of Lord CAMPBELL and Mr. F. KELLY. The County Courts Bill is not to re-appear this Session; the Ecclesiastical Courts Bill is to be permitted to sleep in peace. The Magistrates' Clerks Bill is to be passed. There is to be an amendment of the Transfer of Property Act; but no prospect is held out of an alteration in the Debtors' Indemnity Act; its noble and learned parent declaring that it has but one defect (! !) and Sir JAMES GRAHAM asking for it a fair trial.

These measures are of themselves sufficient for the amusement of a less busy session than the present is like to be. With a promised revision of the taxation of the country, and the immense mass of private business impending, our Legislators will have enough to do without perplexing themselves with Law Reforms. It is therefore most probable that very few of the measures talked of will be converted into laws.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

LAW REFORMS.

TUESDAY, Feb. 4.—Lord CAMPBELL begged leave to give notice that, unless a bill similar to that brought in last year in reference to the criminal law (as was understood), were again brought forward, he should himself offer a measure to their lordships on the subject. It would be infinitely preferable that such a bill should be brought forward by the Government, and he did trust it would. Although the Queen's speech was silent respecting legal amendments, their lordships were aware that various measures of that nature were to be brought forward, and he hoped that means would be speedily taken for the purpose. Much had been done in that department, but much still remained to be done. He took it for granted that at an early period of the session an Ecclesiastical Courts Bill would be laid on the table. Their lordships had passed such a bill last session, and the journals of the other House told them that, after one division there, it was abandoned. The state of the ecclesiastical courts imperatively required that as speedily as possible some measure should be brought forward respecting them. The law of debtor and creditor, too, was now in a very confused and unsatisfactory state. Various questions had arisen upon it which could only be settled by legislation, and he trusted that either one or other of his noble and learned friends who now divided the woolsack (Lord Brougham was at the moment seated with the Lord Chancellor) would at some short period bring forward some satisfactory measure on the subject, and he would earnestly implore them to do so, because they must be aware that serious inconvenience arose from delay in such matters. There was another bill introduced by his noble and learned friend in the centre of the woolsack, respecting the conveyance of property. That bill was brought in early in the session. It slept month after month, and it was only awakened from that profound repose about ten days before the close, and several clauses were then introduced which had never been heard of before—of which the profession were utterly ignorant—and by one of which the Legislature tried to do that which was impossible—as impossible as it would be to enact that a square was a circle; for, to enact that a "contingent remainder" should be an "executory devise," was, as was known to all who were acquainted with the matter, utterly impossible. The statute remained a dead letter. It was considered by the profession as utterly unjust, and it was thought that the only safe way to deal with it would be to treat it pro non scripto. He trusted, therefore, that a measure would be speedily brought forward by the Government, for it was important that it should be laid early on the table in order that it might be duly considered, and thus made conducive to the improvement of the law.—The Lord

Chancellor said he rose for the purpose of explaining the course which he intended to pursue with respect to the first bill mentioned by his noble and learned friend. Their lordships were aware that a bill had been brought forward last session by a noble and learned friend of his, in consequence of the absence of another noble and learned lord, with respect to the jurisdiction in criminal cases. He begged to say that it was the intention of Her Majesty's Government to introduce during this session a bill of that description, and he begged also to say that the only ground upon which he objected to the further proceeding in the measure at that time was, that when he considered the history of the bill it did not appear to him that it had undergone that mature deliberation which it required at the hands of those who were most competent to judge of the expediency of its provisions. With respect to the last bill, relating to the transfer of property, upon which some observations had been made, he must be permitted to say that the bill had been on the table for the consideration of noble lords for a long time. The first conveyancers in the country had been consulted upon it; printed copies of it had been distributed, and no objections were made to it in its progress. To his noble and learned friend who had left the House he (the Lord Chancellor) had stated that the bill involved a variety of important transactions, and begged of him to have the kindness to go through it, and to point out any of the provisions which appeared doubtful, stating that he should be ready to strike out any which he thought ought not to be in it. His noble and learned friend objected to some provisions, and they were struck out, and the bill passed with those exceptions. He believed he had addressed the same observations to his noble and learned friend, who had referred to the bill. As it was a bill which contained many nice points and metaphysical distinctions, he was anxious that it should have the advantage of all the law learning in the House, and his noble and learned friend would do him the justice to admit, that he had desired him to criticise it in order that by his assistance it might be rendered as perfect as possible. He admitted that in some particular cases difficulties had arisen. He had now a bill in preparation for the purpose of removing those anomalies and inconveniences. He should have the pleasure of submitting it to his noble and learned friend, and in a few days he would lay it before the House. Lord Brougham said, with respect to the law of "Debtor and Creditor," after what had fallen from his noble and learned friend, he would not now go into that subject, but he should be ready to discuss it at the proper time; and he was only anxious to take the present opportunity to vindicate the measure brought in last year, and to shew to their lordships and to the country—that country, to mislead which incessant means were taken—that it was not the fault of the Bill, and that no enactments of that Bill would have prevented those misdecisions, as they appeared to him, which had taken place in some quarters; but that the great outcry which had arisen, was with respect to the 20*l.* clause; and he was charged with having upset trade by the introduction of it. Now, he was a great friend to the 20*l.* clause; but it was not his clause. It was added in committee after the examination of evidence; and instead of the Bill as brought in and supported by the Government and himself being answerable for the 20*l.* clause, that was the part of the Bill which was most particularly approved of and supported by the predecessor of his noble friend—he might name him as he was not present, Lord Cottenham, and that noble lord's measure went ten thousand times farther than the present, for it abolished imprisonment in all cases and for all sums, whereas this Bill only prevented it under 20*l.* There was, however, one great omission and defect in this bill. It did not enable a creditor to take hold of salaries. A clerk with 200*l.* a year, might contract a debt to the amount of 19*l.* and the creditor could not touch his salary; and if he lived in lodgings, he could not take the furniture, because it did not belong to him. A very slight alteration would rid that clause of this defect, and it was the only defect in the bill. The most blessed, the most happy effects had arisen from the clause, as would appear from the report of Captain Williams, the prison inspector. —Lord Campbell said the Bill had been drawn by Mr. Erle, now a judge of the Common Pleas, at the request of Mr. More O'Ferrall, a member of the House of Commons; and at the request of Mr. More O'Ferrall, he (Lord Campbell) laid it before their lordships. He claimed no merit from the Bill; but he must observe that it did not belong to any member of that House. He was, however, delighted that it was adopted by the Government.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SMALL DEBTS IN SCOTLAND.

Tuesday, Feb. 4.—Mr. Wallace gave notice of his intention to move for leave to bring in a bill to alter and amend certain portions of the Apellate Jurisdiction Act, relating to the recovery of small debts in Scotland.

COURT OF SESSION.

Mr. Wallace further gave notice that he would also call the attention of the house to the amount of business transacted in this court, and to the nature of the duties of the judges, with a view to the restriction of the number of the latter.

COUNTY COURTS.

Wednesday, Feb. 5.—Mr. Hume wished to know if it was the intention of the Government to proceed with the County Courts Bill?—Sir J. Graham replied, that, considering the immense changes that had taken place in the law of debtor and creditor during the past session—considering the power of imprisonment had been abolished—he was not prepared to say it was the present intention of the Government to bring forward a measure relating to county courts.

MAGISTRATES' CLERKS BILL.

Mr. Escott said an excellent Bill had been brought in last session for the abolition of certain extortionate practices in courts of justice, and he wished to ask the right hon. baronet whether that Bill would be proceeded with on some early day?—Sir J. Graham said his hon. friend referred to the Bill relating to magistrates' clerks and clerks of the peace being paid by salary instead of by fees. He proposed to ask for leave to re-introduce this measure to-morrow se'nnight. (Hear.)

CHARITIES IN ENGLAND.

Mr. Hume asked whether it was the intention of Her Majesty's Government to bring in any measure relating to charities in England?—Sir R. Peel had great satisfaction in telling the hon. gentleman and the House, that his noble colleague (Lord Stanley) would, in the course of next week, lay upon the table of the other House a bill on this subject. (Hear.)

LAW OF DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

Mr. Hume asked the right hon. baronet the Secretary for the Home Department, whether it was his intention to introduce any measure this session for the amendment of the law of debtor and creditor?—Sir J. Graham replied, that considering the immense change recently made in the law of debtor and creditor, and that the power of imprisonment for debts under 20*l.* was abolished, he could not undertake in the present session, to propose any new measure. (Hear.) It would be expedient, he thought, to give a certain time, during which the recent change in the law should be tested by experience.

LAW OF SETTLEMENT.

Sir G. Grey said, that in the course of last session the Government had brought in a Bill for an alteration in the law of settlement, and he wished to know whether it was intended to re-introduce that Bill, or one substantially the same?—Sir J. Graham replied, that he before expressed his full expectation to the House that this subject, being of immense importance, would be taken into the most serious consideration of the Government. In that hope he had not been disappointed. He had received from many quarters important suggestions, which had led him to propose important alterations in the Bill; and therefore he thought it right to say he should take an early opportunity of re introducing it, and of stating in detail the alterations he proposed to make. If the House gave him leave to introduce the Bill, he should allow some time to elapse between its introduction and any further stage, so that the opinion of the country might be taken with regard to the proposed alterations. (Hear.)

ALLOWANCE TO IRISH JUDGES.

Lord Clements inquired whether the Government contemplated increasing the lodging allowance to the judges of assize in Ireland?—Sir J. Graham said if the noble lord had given notice of his question he should have been able to reply; but in the absence of the Secretary for Ireland he could not inform himself on the subject.

POOR AND COUNTY RATES.

Thursday, Feb. 6.—Sir James Graham moved for the production of an account of the amounts levied for poor rates and county rates in England and Wales during the past year.—Ordered.

LAW OF SETTLEMENT.

Sir James Graham.—It is my intention to move for leave to bring in a bill for the alteration and consolidation of the law of settlement in England. If the House has no objection, it will be most convenient to take the earliest time for its introduction. I propose, therefore, to make the motion in question on Tuesday next. (Hear.)

MEDICAL REFORM.

Sir James Graham.—I stated last night that it is my intention to move, on Tuesday se'nnight, for leave to bring in a Bill for the better regulation of medical practice. There is also another Bill which it will be necessary for me to ask leave to introduce, and I wish to give notice that, on the same day, I shall move for leave to bring in a measure to enable her Majesty to grant new charters to certain colleges of physicians and surgeons.

MUSEUMS IN CORPORATE TOWNS.

Mr. Ewart gave notice that he would, at an early period, move for leave to bring in a Bill to enable town councils to establish museums of art in corporate towns.

PRIVILEGES OF COUNSEL.

Mr. Ewart also gave notice that he should shortly move for leave to bring in a bill enabling the defendant's counsel in civil, and the prisoner's counsel in criminal cases, to address the jury on the close of the evidence for the prisoner or defendant. (Hear, hear.)

ASSIZE EXPENSES IN IRELAND.

Lord Clements wished to know whether the expenses of the going judges of assizes in Ireland had been increased in consequence of any recent arrangement?—The Chancellor of the Exchequer said the noble lord was not present last session when the votes regarding law expenses in Ireland were under the consideration of the House. The grounds for seeking an additional allowance were simply these. By an Irish Act of Parliament the judges were allowed 20*l.* Irish to provide themselves with lodgings in the several assize towns in Ireland. The sum was found inadequate to obtain lodgings in which the judges could decently reside; and it appeared, therefore, to the Government that an estimate should be submitted to Parliament for an increased allowance. Accordingly an estimate was submitted in the course of last session; Parliament acquiesced in the amount fixed, namely, 669*l.* for the thirty-nine assize towns.

CONSOLIDATION CLAUSES BILL.

Lord G. Somerset explained the object of this Bill in a tone which rendered him almost inaudible in the gallery. He was understood to say, that its object was to consolidate the clauses generally inserted in a certain class of Bills. He did not intend they should be compulsory, but that parties applying might adopt them or not, as they chose. He proposed to read the Bill a second time on Monday, when he should state when the committee would take place, where, of course, any alterations might be made that were thought expedient. The noble lord then moved to bring in the first of the following Bills:—Companies Clauses Consolidation Bill, Land Clauses Consolidation Bill, Railway Clauses Consolidation Bill, Companies Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Bill, Lands Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Bill, Railway Clauses Consolidation (Scotland) Bill.

ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS.

Sir G. Grey.—May I ask the Right Hon. Secretary for the Home Department, whether he means to bring in any Bill this session for the reform of the ecclesiastical courts? (Much laughter from the Opposition). —Sir James Graham.—My colleagues and I have given notice already of a great number of important measures, which we hope to bring to a termination. My experience, however, of the two last sessions, leads me to despair that any legislation on this subject, for which I am responsible, can be brought to a satisfactory conclusion this session. (Renewed laughter.) I don't know what my right hon. friend may be disposed to do, but I am not prepared to take any step in the matter.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.

COLONIAL EXPENDITURE.

On Saturday a return procured by Mr. Hume was printed, shewing the total amount of revenue received by the colonies, and the expenditure for the same in the year 1842: as also a general abstract of the military and naval expenditure by Great Britain for the colonies in the year 1843. The return extends to 58 pages, and shews the revenue and expenditure of each of the colonies under separate heads, with the exception of that of New Zealand, which appeared in a Parliamentary document printed some months back. The revenue of Gibraltar was 31,454*l.* 7s. 4d. and the expenditure, 31,445*l.* 7s. 7½d.; shewing a surplus revenue of 8*l.* 19s. 8½. Of Malta, the revenue was 120,852*l.* 1s. 0¾d. and the expenditure 110,759*l.* 0s 6¾d.; surplus revenue, 10,093*l.* 0s. 6d. Of Canada, the expenditure was 476,304*l.* 11s. 11d. and the revenue, 465,141*l.* 4s. 2½d.; excess of expenditure 11,163*l.* 7s. 8½d. Of Nova Scotia, the expenditure was 95,899*l.* 16s. 7d. and the revenue, 84,869*l.* 2s. 8d. shewing an excess of expenditure of 11,030*l.* 13s. 11d. Of New Brunswick, the expenditure was 81,920*l.* 11s. 7d. and the revenue, 55,792*l.* 18s. 4d.; excess of expenditure, 26,127*l.* 13s. 3d. Of Prince Edward's Island, the expenditure was 19,626*l.* 7s. 2¼d. the revenue 13,411*l.* 18s. 11d.; excess of expenditure, 6,214*l.* 18s. 11d. Of Newfoundland, the revenue was 56,686*l.* 12s. 0½d. and the expenditure, 40,787*l.* 17s. 8d.; surplus revenue, 15,898*l.* 14s. 4½d. Of Bermuda, the revenue was 19,342*l.* 8s. 10d. and the expenditure, 17,435*l.* 8s. 8d.; surplus revenue, 1,907*l.* 0s. 2d. Of Honduras, the expenditure was 13,459*l.* 8s. 10 4-5d. and the revenue, 12,515*l.* 7s. 10 4-5d.; excess of expenditure, 944*l.* 1s. Of St. Helena, the expenditure was 17,756*l.* 13s. 1½d. and the revenue, 17,643*l.* 5s. 11½d.; excess of expenditure, 113*l.* 7s. 11¾d. Of Ceylon, it appears that the expenditure was 301,791*l.*; but, after the estimated expenditure of an agent in London, &c. the excess of expenditure would amount to 28,204*l.* Of the Cape of Good Hope, the revenue was 226,261*l.* 4s. 10⅝d. and the expenditure, 226,025*l.* 17s. 6½d.; surplus revenue, 235*l.* 7s. 4½d. Of Sierra Leone, the expenditure was 26,209*l.* 2s. 5½d. and the revenue, 24,165*l.* 7s.; shewing an excess of expenditure of 2,043*l.* 15s. 5½d. Of Bathurst and its dependencies (River Gambia), the revenue was 9,592*l.* 3s. 11d. and the expenditure, 7,472*l.* 18s. 10d.; surplus revenue, 2,119*l.* 5s. 1d. Of New South Wales, the revenue was 844,265*l.* 8s. 10d. and the expenditure, 804,982*l.* 19s. 8d.; surplus revenue, 39,282*l.* 9s. 2d. Of Van Diemen's Land, the expenditure was 182,622*l.* 11s. 1d. and the revenue, 160,003*l.* 13s. 10d.; excess of expenditure, 22,618*l.* 17s. 3d. Of Western Australia, the expenditure was 18,334*l.* 1s. 4d, and the revenue, 17,031*l.* 14s. 8d.; excess of expenditure, 1,302*l.* 6s. 8d. And of South Australia, the expenditure was 84,531*l.* 16s. 10d. and the revenue, 81,813*l.* 19s. 5d.; shewing an excess of expenditure of 2,717*l.* 17s. 5d.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

THE Settlement Bill is to be revived with amendments, and then time is to be given for the country to consider the alterations, so that there is no chance of its passing during the present session. Nothing has been said about an alteration in the Game Law.

We regret that the great demand at the beginning of the week prevented a supply of Mr. SYMONS's Bastardy Forms to all the orders. But the fact is, they were in such request, that for four days three presses were in constant work, and the Publisher was unable, even then, to keep pace with the orders. It is to be hoped that in future there will be no such difficulty, as the Publisher will have an abundant stock. It may be as well to state here that, in pursuance of the arrangement announced in the leading article, these, as well as all the other forms now in preparation, will be a part of the publications of the Verulam Society, and will be supplied to the members at the Society's lesser prices. To others, the charges will be as usual.

A.D. v. THE YEAR OF OUR LORD.

THE following letter has been addressed to the editor of the LAW TIMES:—

SIR,—The form of order in bastardy prepared by Mr. Symons, appears to have been settled with much care and skill, but from the manner in which it has been printed for sale (the printer probably not being accustomed to the getting up of magisterial forms), I am apprehensive that it is open to a very material objection. I allude to the date of the order, and all the other dates set forth therein, which are thus printed:- "A.D. 184 ." Such an abbreviation would not be allowed in an indictment (2 Hale, 170), nor in a conviction, which must have as much certainty in it as an indictment; and in the present day, when orders are construed with as much strictness as convictions, I think the abbreviation would be fatal to an order.

At all events, I trust you will excuse my calling your attention to the objection.

I remain, &c.

We are much obliged to our correspondent for his communication; and to others, who have also called our attention to the same point.

We feel perfect confidence in the validity of the order in the respect mentioned. We confess we should enjoy a sight of Lord DENMAN's expression of countenance when counsel moved before him to set aside an order in bastardy, because the date was only expressed as "A.D. 1845," instead of "in the year," &c. The pedantry of pleading never yet hazarded a special demurrer on so small a quibble. Not all the foppish and silly subtlety which the Courts have latterly shewn so strong and exemplary a desire to crush, has ever yet brought forth such an abortion of a cavil. But let us gravely answer the objection.

First, as to Indictments.—Hale lays down nothing which can be properly used as an authority for the opposite view. What he says is, that "Abbreviations that are usual are allowable in indictments." * * * "Figures," he goes on to say, "to express numbers are not allowable in indictments, though sometimes literal numbers be allowable in returns, but in indictments the numbers, whether cardinal or ordinal, must be expressed in Latin." Hale, then, is no authority for the English form contended for. Before the 4 Geo. 2, c. 26, convictions were always written in Latin, and orders in English. Hale is therefore clearly inapplicable to the existing state of things. If the words at length are required at all, even in convictions, which we incline to question, it is with reference to the 3 Geo. 4, c. 23, which imposes the adoption of a set form of conviction on justices, in which the date is set out at length; this, of course, has no reference whatever to orders. On this point under that statute we know of no decisions; but how stands the case with respect to convictions not within its pale? In the case of Rex v. Crisp, 7 East, 389, we find a conviction under the Malt Act thus worded:—"That this 29th of May, 1805, at Woodbridge, in the county," being the date of the offence, and ending thus—"we, the said justices, to this our record of conviction have set our hands and seals at W. aforesaid, this 4th of June, 1805." The whole order is set out. Here even the A.D. is omitted; and although the point turned on the statement of the time of the offence being committed, so that the judge's attention was called to the statement of date, the conviction was held good by Lord Ellenborough; and in every instance in which convictions have been quashed for informality, it has been for some defect which might mislead. See Rex v. Salomons (1 T. R. 249); Newman v. Bendshye (10 Ad. & Ell. 11), and many other cases. Now in stating a year as A.D. 1840, there is nothing which can mislead, and every thing which is usual and explicit. We firmly believe that even a conviction could not be quashed on such a ground alone.

But does the same degree of exactitude required in convictions extend to orders? By no means. "It is nevertheless certain (says Paley, on Convictions, 129, speaking of penal orders), that those proceedings have been not only deemed valid in the shape of orders, but upon that ground merely have been allowed to admit of informalities which would have been fatal to a conviction." Nor is this open to any doubt. Penal orders fall under the designation of orders so long as they are named as orders in a statute (Rex v. Lloyd, 1 Strange, 996), and it is so in this case.

Our friends may rest at ease, and spare themselves the trouble of such an unnecessary elongation of the order as to follow any other than the usual formula of date. They may dismiss all fear of appeal on that score.

We may take this opportunity of requesting that the forms may not be altered, except in respects which cannot be avoided. The phrases as well as the allocation of the averments, are all carefully adopted either with reference to the wording of the Act, or to some known objection. We are obliged by all hints of amendment, of which we have received one or two, and notwithstanding the marked confidence of the Profession, evinced by the best possible evidence, we earnestly desire to improve to the uttermost; at the same time, the Court of Queen's Bench is resolved not to sanction any frivolous ground of objection. A slight variance from the established forms would certainly not prove sufficient to set an order aside.

A very important question has arisen owing to the acknowledged invalidity of the LUMLEY forms. Where the father refuses to pay, can the magistrates safely issue their warrant to compel him? Where the adjudication has not proceeded on sufficient evidence, or if on the face of the proceedings there appear a want of jurisdiction, the magistrates granting a warrant on such void order, would be liable to an action of trespass. Mitchel v. Foster (12 Ad. & Ell. 72) is a recent and strong authority on this point, as well as the leading case of Cave v. Mountain (1 M. & Gr. 257).

It requires consideration, what is the best course to be pursued with regard to the orders defectively made. The question is, whether they can be treated as nullities, and an order be made on proceedings de novo. We must take time to consider this point.

JUSTICES' CLERKS' SOCIETY.

The committee of the Justices' Clerks' Society, consisting of Messrs. Shepperd, Blagg, Lowe, Clabon, Fletcher, Long, Finch, and Smith, introduced by the Solicitor-General, had an interview with Mr. Manners Sutton, at the Home Office, on Wednesday week last, on the subject of the proposed Justices' Clerks' Fees Bill, introduced into Parliament during the last session. The deputation was graciously received, and their representations were listened to by Mr. Sutton with great attention.

The main point which the committee endeavoured to urge was the mode of fixing the proposed salary, by substituting an average of years as the minimum, instead of leaving the amount entirely open, as in the Bill. Mr. Sutton did not appear disposed to admit that the fees of justices' clerks stood upon the same footing as those of the clerks of the peace. But the committee succeeded in satisfying him as to the Parliamentary foundation for the clerks' fees, under the 26th Geo. 2.

The wish expressed by the committee of being placed in communication with the gentleman who drew up the Bill was not acceded to, as being contrary to precedent; but Mr. Sutton stated his readiness to consider and take advantage of any practical suggestions from the society, when the Bill was again introduced.

He also said that most probably such a measure would be introduced in the present session, and that in its preparation the remarks and suggestions of the society, contained in their recent report, of which he had been supplied with a copy, would receive due attention.

The following building has been duly registered for the solemnization of marriages, pursuant to the Act of the 6th and 7th Wm. 4, c. 85. The Baptist Chapel, situated at the Sarn, in the parish of Kerry, in the county of Montgomery, in the district of Newtown and Llanidloes.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

VERY few of the suspended judgments have yet been given; but next week will probably yield an abundant harvest of them. The legal incidents of the week have been of trifling interest. Another series of Orders in Bankruptcy is about to be issued, and we shall lose no time in placing them in the hands of our readers.

The following correspondence on a subject to which we purpose to return, has appeared in the daily papers:—

THE BAR AND ITS CLIENTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

SIR,—It has long been a matter of serious complaint on the part of suitors, the great injury and expense to which they are exposed, as well as the inconvenience experienced by the Profession generally, from the absence of counsel when matters in which they hold briefs are to be heard. I respectfully submit that it is time some arrangement were made, in order to remove the injury, and to obviate the inconvenience complained of, so that the suitors and the Profession may rely on the assistance of their counsel in the court in which they accept briefs. It is a common practice on the part of counsel to hand their briefs over to other members of the Bar, when they are engaged in another court, and frequently but a very short time before the cause is called on, and who are, in consequence, merely able to give it an imperfect and hasty attention, to the great detriment of the interests of suitors. If some remedy could be adopted, with the general concurrence of the leading members of the Profession, it would be most desirable; and the remedy I would propose is, that each counsel elect his own court, and strictly confine his practice to it.

Counsel must be aware, that from the immediate intercourse between the suitor and the solicitors, the latter are exposed to all the complaints which the former may make respecting any delay or disappointment in the conduct of their business; and it therefore becomes the indispensable duty of the solicitors to remove those complaints, if practicable, or at least to shew that they have done every thing in their power to accomplish that object. If, however, the expectation of our branch of the Profession should be disappointed by the perseverance of the Bar in the system complained of, solicitors will have the satisfaction of having done all in their power to remove the just complaints of the suitors against the delay and expense to which they are frequently subjected.

I am, &c.

Harcourt-buildings, Jan. 24. A Solicitor.

This was succeeded by the following :—

THE BAR AND ITS CLIENTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—The remedy proposed by "A Solicitor," in his letter to you in this day's Times, has been often before suggested ; and it is the attorneys and solicitors themselves who are to blame for not compelling counsel to confine their practice to the one court they may each elect to act in.

If attorneys and solicitors consulted the interests of their clients by insisting on such an arrangement, which they have power enough to effect if they chose to exercise it, instead of pretending to complain of the present system, which all the world knows brings grist to their mill, the absurd practice of feeing a man for the chance of deriving assistance from him by his advocacy of your cause at the trial would soon be exploded.

There are many other evils attending the present law practice, but the interested views of practitioners are a barrier to its improvement.

I remain, Sir, yours very respectfully,

Trinity-square, Jan. 25. A. R.

Some others of minor interest have appeared, but one is worth reading for its good sense and good advice :—

THE BAR, SOLICITORS, AND SUITORS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—In your issue of to-day I find a remedy suggested by "Another Solicitor" for a very great evil existing in the course and conduct of legal business—namely, that "a large proportion of counsel persist in the practice of accepting briefs in causes about to be heard in different courts, at the risk of not being able to discharge the duties for which they are liberally paid ;" and the remedy suggested is, that each counsel should strictly confine himself to some particular court, and that the Lord Chancellor and the Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench should be requested to see to this; and that in the event of counsel persisting in going from court to court, and of their lordships countenancing and encouraging these vagrant habits, then the attorneys shall band themselves not to employ any counsel who will not attach himself to a particular court—that is, by the first part of the category supposed, they shall not employ any counsel at all.

With much deference to the acuteness of the remarks made, I submit that the remedy proposed cannot meet the evil, because, as it appears before, counsel cannot be employed who practise only in one court if they all persist in going into all the courts ; and, secondly, because counsel are so situate with respect to the public, that neither can the leaders refuse to give their assistance to clients in different courts where they may be able to attend, nor can the juniors refuse to oblige the leaders by holding their briefs at a pinch. But, Sir, an attorney is bound to see that his client's work is done, without regard to counter-agency or chance, or late hours, or Crown paper, or special paper, or registration appeal day, or excise cases, or the like ; and he is surrounded with all the legal circumstances of right to sue and be sued ; he stands in a very different position with respect to the client to a barrister ; and as his obligations are so great, I would suggest that he should rely on himself for his help—always the best reliance. The remedy is in his own hand. Let him not confine all his briefs to Mr. A or to Mr. B. Let the Incorporate Law Society (if they must have any thing to do with the matter) appoint a course of lectures to be read, informing the attorney mind that one man cannot be in two places at once ; that it is not necessary to employ the Attorney-General to conduct a suit on a bill of exchange, provided that the handwriting be admitted under a judge's order ; and that the infatuated love of one particular barrister is detrimental to the well-being of society, and the quick doing of business.

I know two cities, X and Y, about twelve miles apart (to be sure there is a rail), in which borough sessions are generally held at the same time. One gentleman is the favourite there, and so infatuated are all the "gentlemen of the Profession" with him, that the Y's think they would not be wise unless they sent their briefs to him though he is at X; and the X's will fill his bag with their briefs, though they know that as far as they are concerned he will be for that session an ex-barrister to them. What can the gentleman do? He pockets the fees from both places ; and if he can find any gipsy-like junior who loves wandering, he gets him to traverse between X and Y on his business ; if not, the prisoner goes undefended. Now, whom have the attorneys to blame for this? The barristers? No. Better blame themselves for the folly of thinking that only one man in the world is good enough for them. Let them remedy their bad habit of giving all their briefs to one counsel, and then the evil of which they so justly complain will remedy itself.

Yours, &c. O.

Another subject of considerable interest has also created some discussion in legal circles. It has been thus handled by two correspondents of the Times. The second of these gentlemen makes a somewhat startling proposition. The first letter states a just cause for complaint :—

BARRISTERS AND ATTORNEYS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—No one who cares for the respectability of the Legal Profession can have read your report of the judgment delivered by Lord Denman, on the application of a barrister, now under articles to an attorney, to be examined for admission as an attorney, without fully acquiescing in the truth of his lordship's remark, that "the fact of a particular individual being a barrister at the same time that he was serving under articles of clerkship to an attorney, opened the door to abuses the most obvious and considerable." Allow me to ask whether a door is not opened as wide for abuses as obvious and considerable, by a student for the Bar serving as managing clerk to an attorney up to the time when he is called to the Bar ; and whether the benchers of the inns of court have taken the proper steps to block up this door, by refusing to permit managing clerks to attorneys, while such, to keep terms for the Bar ?—Your obedient servant, B.

Temple, Jan. 30.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TIMES.

Sir,—The Court of Queen's Bench having yesterday decided in Mr. Bateman's case, that "a barrister thinks fit to article himself to an attorney, he will not be allowed "to avail himself of that service as an articled clerk to be admitted as an attorney," I would ask whether, to use the words of Lord Denman, the same "opportunity is not offered for malversation between the members of the Bar and the gentlemen of the other branch of the Profession," by allowing a man to be called to the Bar who has practised as, or been articled to, or working in the office of, an attorney or solicitor? Is not "the danger of such malversation manifest, if this is to be considered as an admissible practice?" Is it "possible to doubt that such a practice leads to conferring the most improper advantages?" It is notorious that several men have of late years come, and are still coming, from attorneys' or solicitors' offices to the Bar, backed by all the business and influence of their ci-devant partners, or masters. I do not mean to say that these men are not competent to the business thus secured, but I do say there are scores, or hundreds of "regular men" at least as competent, but who, not having had the "improper advantages" alluded to, are almost briefless. The success of the former, in most cases at least, is not to be attributed to superior talents or acquirements, but solely to "improper advantages." Apart from the unfairness of this course to the members of the Bar in general, it is undeniable that it has tended, in more ways than one, to degrade what was, and ought to be, a liberal profession, into a driving, if not in some cases a jobbing, trade. There is, I believe, an understanding that the inns of court, in the case of an attorney applying to be called, require a previous relinquishment of his business ; but what is there to prevent an articled or paid clerk from being called to the Bar direct from his employer's office? Even if the articles are previously cancelled, the man may, and often does, practically work in or for the office up to or within a short period of his call. I ask (in the words again of Lord Denman), whether "upon those general circumstances which involve principles of conduct as between members of the Bar and gentlemen of the other branch of the Profession," the having been an attorney or solicitor, or articled to, or at any time employed by, an attorney or solicitor, ought not to be held an absolute disqualification for the Bar?

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

Lincoln's-inn, Jan. 30. M.A., Oxford.

PROMOTIONS, APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

THE PRINCE OF WALES'S COUNCIL CHAMBERS.

Somerset-house, Feb. 5, 1845.—Francis Rodd, of Trebartha-hall, in the county of Cornwall, esq. has this day been appointed Sheriff for the county of Cornwall.

DOWNING-STREET, Jan. 29 —The Queen has been pleased to appoint Edmund Murray Dodd, Esq. to be her Majesty's Solicitor-General for the province of Nova Scotia.

FOREIGN-OFFICE, Jan. 29.—Her Majesty has been pleased to appoint Edmund Gabriel, jun. esq. in the room of Charles Francis Fynes Clinton, esq. deceased, to be Arbitrator, on the part of her Majesty, in the Mixed British and Portuguese Commission, established at the city of Loanda, in the province of Angola, under the treaty, concluded at Lisbon on the 3rd of July, 1842, between Great Britain and Portugal, for the suppression of the slave trade.

WHITEHALL, Jan. 28.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed Henry King, of Mayfield, in the county of Sussex, Gent. and David Archibald Dixon Rawlins, of Market Harborough, in the county of Leicester, Gent. to be Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

WHITEHALL, Feb. 3.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed H. Oldham, of the city of Dublin, Gent. to be a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

The Right Honourable Sir Nicolas Conyngham Tindal, Knt. Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas, has appointed Thomas Hulbert, of Corsham, in the county of Wilts, solicitor, to be one of the perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women, in and for the county of Wilts.

The Right Honourable Sir Nicolas Conyngham Tindal, Knt. Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas, has appointed Adolphus Frederick Millns, of Windsor, in the county of Berks, Gent. to be one of the perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women, in and for the county of Berks, also in and for the county of Bucks.

MR. BARON PLATT.—On Friday evening last, the learned baron gave the usual inauguration dinner on his elevation to the bench, to the judges and serjeants-at-law, at the Dining Hall, in Serjeants'-inn, Chancery-lane. The whole of the judges and serjeants honoured the learned baron with their attendance on the occasion.

MIDDLE TEMPLE.—ADMISSIONS TO THE BAR, Feb. 1.—The eight undermentioned gentlemen were admitted to the degree of barrister-at-law yesterday (the last day of term), and this evening the ordinary oaths were administered in the dining hall before several of the benchers, previous to their being sworn in at Westminster:—Mr. John Wood, the eldest son of William Cole Wood, gentleman; Mr. Charles Forbes, the eldest son of Mr. Michil Forbes; Mr. Alfred Wyatt, the third son of Robert Wyatt, gentleman; Mr. Edmund John Bridell, the only son of William John Bridell, gentleman; Mr. Charles Frere, the second son of James Hatley Frere, gentleman; Mr. Henry Winfield Crace, the eldest son of Henry Crace, gentleman; Mr. John Gregory, the eldest son of Jones Gregory, gentleman; Mr. Samuel Naylor, the only son of Thomas Naylor, gentleman.

NEW QUEEN'S COUNSEL.—Mr. Russell Gurney, one of the sons of Mr. Baron Gurney, we are informed, has received an intimation from the Lord Chancellor, in reply to his application, that he will be called within the bar as one of her Majesty's counsel. The effect of this appointment will be to place him over the heads of Mr. Serjeant Channell and Mr. Serjeant Shee, who are many years his seniors both in rank and standing at the bar, and to lead those eminent and talented men on the Home Circuit, unless the Lord Chancellor grants them patents of precedence. In fact, owing to the elevation of Mr. Platt to the bench of the Court of Exchequer, and the appointment of Sir F. Thesiger as Solicitor-General, both of whom belong to the Home Circuit, Mr. Russell Gurney will lead the entire bar on that circuit.

ARCHES' COURT, FRIDAY, JAN. 31.

ADMISSION OF THE NEW QUEEN'S PROCTOR.

Mr. F. H. Dyke appeared in costume in the place appropriated to the Queen's Proctor, and, addressing the Court, said:—"Sir, I have the honour to state that her Majesty has been pleased to appoint me her Proctor, and to request you will direct that her royal warrant be read and entered in the muniments of the court."

Sir H. JENNER FUST.—Let the warrant be read.

The warrant was read by the registrar, all standing; it reserved to her Majesty and her successors the power to make any alterations in the fees of the office during war.

Sir H. JENNER FUST.—Let the warrant be entered in the muniment book.

Mr. Dyke then took his seat.

THE PROPERTY LAWYER.

AN ACT TO SIMPLIFY THE TRANSFER OF PROPERTY.

7 & 8 VICT. c. 76.

No. IV.

As this Act is now in operation, and men are anxiously inquiring the opinions and intentions, and watching the practice of their professional brethren regarding it, probably a few observations, in addition to those which have already appeared in our columns and in numerous other channels, will not be considered by our readers altogether superfluous.

It is seldom that an Act containing so small a number of provisions calls forth so much comment and such general reprobation in so short a period, as it has been the lot of this unfortunate statute to elicit. To what is its condemnation attributable? Solely, we think, to a firm belief in its pernicious character; for, had it been otherwise, if its tendency had been improving, probably we might have heard some vague grumbling complaints from parties whose indolence or peculiarity of temperament indisposes them to all change, or whose constant occupations leave them little time for study; the croakers might have croaked, the fautores veterum might have sneered and ridiculed, and the busy might have shrugged their heavily-laden shoulders; but the tone, the deliberate opinion of calm, fair-judging men would have been favourable. If, again, it had attacked costs, no doubt a considerable outcry would have been raised against it, irrespective of its merits or demerits; but it does not. On the contrary, from the doubts and questions which it starts, its effect must, in a pecuniary sense, be beneficial to the Profession. Selfish considerations, then, being out of the question, we can refer the unfavourable verdict which, without exception so far as we are aware, has been pronounced by the Profession, to one cause only,—an entire coincidence in opinion that, looking at the measure fairly as an intended legal reform, it is a failure; and we ask, where could a stronger argument against any measure be found than such an unanimity amongst the class alone qualified to judge, and having no sordid interests to warp their judgment? Lawyers alone in this case are competent to decide, for the Act is peculiarly technical; no sweeping alteration in system is attempted; it calls for no wide and general consideration; it is essentially composed of "points," and therefore lies strictly within the province of the man of detail and practice.

At the present moment, however, it is of more consequence to consider the practical effect of the Act than to discuss its spirit and tendency. And the first question which suggests itself, one which is extensively canvassed, is, whether any and what alteration should be made in the form of deeds. That no alteration is rendered necessary is certain; and, as has been before pointed out, this circumstance constitutes one of the best recommendations of the Act. The matter, then, being left to discretion, is it expedient to adopt the changes which the Act allows? Now, under the present forms, there is security, and it is unquestionable, therefore, that any change in them unproductive of real benefit to the client, is not desirable; nay, it is the duty of the practitioner to abstain from making it, unless compelled, for he ought not unnecessarily to jeopardise to any extent his client's interests. On the other hand, if the alteration be unobjectionable and essentially beneficial to the client, it is equally incumbent on the lawyer to adopt it, whatever personal inconvenience or trouble it may occasion to himself; but safety must be his primary object. Now, it must never be forgotten, in estimating the desirableness of the proposed changes, that there is an amount of risk attaching to the clearest clauses which have not received judicial interpretation. Whoever has watched the course of decisions in a few Acts of Parliament must be painfully aware, that it is scarcely possible for any man, however skilful and sagacious, to predict, with absolute certainty, the operation of any provision; how often is it the case that the ultimate settled construction is widely different from the plain meaning of the language? In the first instance, special pleading subtlety, the auceps syllabarum refinement, or a peculiar, an unforeseen, or (the most likely of all) a hard case, induces the Courts to strain the words, and then, having once deviated from the plain path, as cases arise, further departure is necessary for consistency sake, and thus by degrees, here a little and there a little, they stray wider and wider, till at length, instead of the plain and obvious, a judicial, which usually means an artificial and unnatural, signification is established,—the adoption of which its propounders themselves sometimes, and more frequently their successors, regret and allow to be indefensible, but feel bound to support and continue. If this representation be correct, and we forbear to cite illustrations, solely because we believe them to be superfluous, it follows that a degree of danger must be considered to attend the alterations in question, and that he who ventures to make them incurs a gratuitous, and possibly a serious responsibility. Let us now see what changes may be made, and what benefit will flow from them. They consist in the omission of the reference to the 4 Vict. c. 21 of the trustees' receipt clause, and the limitation to trustees to preserve contingent remainders. (We assume for the present that as the Act proposes to authorize these changes, they may safely be made.) No privilege is annexed to the omission of any of these clauses, consequently the sole benefit derivable from leaving them out is the saving in expense from the curtailment of deeds. To what will this saving amount? In some few cases, in deeds of settlement, where all the clauses would otherwise be inserted, there will be an abridgment to the extent of about six folios; consequently a 25s. stamp may sometimes be saved, and a few shillings would be struck off the solicitor's bill; 2*l*. may be stated as the outside. But settlements are precisely the cases in which, comparatively speaking, expense is no serious object. The parties making them are usually in comfortable circumstances, and is it worth while, for the sake of 2*l*. at the utmost, to run the inevitable risk attendant upon the adoption of these untried clauses in any Act of Parliament, and particularly such an Act as that before us, which, as we have mentioned, has met with universal disapprobation? But we have fixed a very high amount. In many such cases there will be no saving of stamp, and therefore the client will only be benefited to the extent of a few shillings. In wills, of course, from the absence of stamp-duty, the amount saved cannot be greater. Surely in these cases, for the sake of a few shillings, to leave certainty for uncertainty, would be positive folly. It will be said, perhaps, these remarks may be very true as applied to settlements, &c. which are seldom made except by parties who can afford any little additional expense; but that in many cases of very small purchases, the saving of a stamp is a material consideration to the parties. The change in those cases is the omission of the reference to the Lease for a Year Act; that reference generally runs about a folio, but it may be made much shorter; e. g. "In pursuance of an Act for rendering a release as effectual for the conveyance of freehold estates as a lease and release by the same parties;" not more than half a folio; and how many deeds bear progressive duty for half a folio? and how many deeds are there in which words obviously superfluous cannot, to the extent of half a folio, be omitted? and is it not far better to reduce the draft by striking out those words, than to trust to the operation of a new clause? In small mortgages the omission of the receipt clause may be a consideration; but that clause may be, and frequently is, made very short. Although no advocates for "short cuts" in deeds,—a practice which we believe does not answer in the long run,—we are satisfied that it is more prudent to shorten the present forms, by paring down undoubted superfluities, than to have recourse to a novelty; and we are convinced that, without running the least danger, men may, if they choose, in nineteen out of twenty of those few cases in which a trifling expense is a very serious object, dispense with this new statute, without subjecting their clients to any further charge than an extra shilling or two added to their bill of costs. This, then, is the extent of the benefit: in some few cases of settlement, 2*l*.; in all wills, and in the large majority of deeds, a few shillings only.

But, independently of the general objection to new and untried clauses, is it clear that the changes in question may in all cases be adopted with propriety? Hitherto we have proceeded on the assumption that they may. We will now suggest one or two cases which may shew the contrary; and for that purpose we will take the provision which dispenses with the reference to the Lease for a Year Act. There were some interests which could not be conveyed by lease and release; but as it is a principle of law that a deed shall, if possible, take effect, an attempted conveyance in those cases by lease and release has been frequently held to operate as a grant at common law, or occasionally, if the relationship between the parties allowed, as a covenant to stand seised; and thus the main object was attained. Now suppose a party attempts to pass any of these interests by a deed under the clause in question; what will be the effect? Why a question will at once arise, whether his deed can have any operation. The clause says he may convey by deed what he can convey by lease and release; but he has attempted to convey by deed what he cannot convey by lease and release—ergo, his deed is bad, so far as that clause is concerned. Then will the deed take effect in any other way, as a grant or covenant to stand seised?—or will it be said, you have made use of a special statutory deed in a case to which the statute does not apply, and we can't help you? Another case that we would mention is this: the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 21, provided that progressive duty should not be payable in respect of the lease for a year; but the Act before us contains no such provision; it states merely that the same stamp shall be payable as if the conveyance were made by lease and release. If, therefore, from the length of the parcels, the lease for a year would have exceeded 30 folios, the progressive duty for the lease for a year must be paid upon a deed under this Act, though it would not be payable if the conveyance were made by a release referring to the Lease for a Year Act. Consequently, a burden, instead of a benefit, would be thrown on the client by the adoption of the new deed.

The foregoing illustrations are sufficient for our present purpose, as they tend to shew that the proposed alterations are not in all cases unobjectionable. But we put the question of "change or no change" broadly upon this ground. The Legislature has left it to the discretion of the practitioner to make the change or not; that discretion must be exercised for the benefit of the client alone, and his first duty to that client is, at all hazards, to make him secure. He has the means of doing so by continuing to travel in the beaten track; if he depart from it, he is running a risk, and exposing his client to unnecessary danger, for no solid or substantial reason. It is not enough for a man to feel satisfied that the deviation is safe; he must consider that his neighbour, more timid, if not more sagacious, may entertain a different opinion, or at all events a doubt, and require the decision of the Court, and thus not only is the client launched into a suit, but the solicitor is in the unenviable position of having to defend his own deeds, with the certainty of losing credit whether they are established or overthrown, and with the conviction on his mind that his presumptuous self-confidence is alone to blame. It is the object of the prudent draftsman, his duty and his interest, to make his drafts not only sound, but unquestionable; it is trying enough for him to guide his way by the uncertain light of a new statute when compelled to do so, but he will never court difficulties, or willingly leave the via tuta for an untrodden course.

The foregoing remarks were intended for insertion last week, but we could not find room for them. We will only in addition call our readers' attention to the announcement of the Lord Chancellor on the first evening of the session, that a Bill is to be introduced to remedy the defects of this most imperfect Act, and we suggest that this circumstance is a strong argument against the adoption of the changes referred to in the foregoing article. We had intended to make some further observations upon the present Act, but we think it better to suspend further notice of it till the promised measure appears.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

MR. BARON PLATT.

In modern times the first judicial office which a man accepts is usually the last; and, therefore, when an eminent barrister receives a seat on the Bench his professional struggles may be fairly considered at an end; and the objects of his legitimate ambition as fully attained as the circumstances of his position will allow. He can hope for no promotion; he can scarcely contemplate the possibility of any reverse; he is high above the hopes and fears of party politics, and at a blow relieved from all professional rivalry. No period in his life is so favourable as this for gratifying a rational curiosity respecting him who has put off the character of advocate and assumed the responsible office of judge. The father of Mr. Platt was an eminent solicitor, who for many years enjoyed the additional distinction of being "father of his profession," in which latter position he might fairly have been congratulated on the number of his children, for, as is well known, the attorneys and solicitors of England constitute by far the largest portion of the legal profession. The late Mr. Platt attained the venerable age of eighty-two, and at the time of his decease was a solicitor of exactly sixty-two years' standing. He was chamber clerk to the celebrated Lord Mansfield, and continued in that office with Lord Kenyon and Lord Ellenborough during the periods that they respectively presided in the Court of King's Bench. When the latter died in 1818, the late Mr. Platt withdrew from the office, being then nearly sixty years of age, and having held it upwards of thirty years.

Nothing was more natural than that an eminent solicitor should indulge the ambition of seeing his son at the bar; since in no profession can a parallel be found for the deep respect with which solicitors regard the character of a successful barrister; but, of course, superadded to this was the natural inducement arising from the possession of business; for the son of a solicitor, with even common diligence, cannot fail to make at least a competency at the bar.

The late Mr. Platt having been educated at the free school attached to Magdalen College, Oxford, was not unobservant of the advantages of a university education; this he conferred on his son, not merely for the saving of time which it effects in an early call to the Bar, but for the more important advantages which it confers.

It would have afforded him a well-deserved gratification had he survived two years and seen his son Thomas on the Bench.

Mr. Platt was called to the Bar by the Hon. Society of the Inner Temple (of which he is now a Bencher) on the 9th of February, 1816; and in the early portion of his career enjoyed all the facilities and advantages which evidently sprung from his father being a native and a resident of London, living on terms of friendship with three successive Chief Justices, a circumstance not very necessarily or even usually attendant on the office which the late Mr. Platt held. But the learned barrister, though thus favoured, was not personally calculated to win the hearts of unprofessional spectators or even to attract the briefs of the more sensitive members of his father's profession; and it is said that his unconciliating deportment materially diminished the probable amount of his business. In spite of these drawbacks, his indomitable perseverance, his self-possession in court, and even his rough, ready coolness in the production of any of the statements necessary for his client's success, won him many a verdict from juries, who would have been, perhaps, mystified by the delicacy or fastidiousness of a man of more pretension. With a personal appearance not very prepossessing, his voice is by no means in his favour. Nor was he at any time ignorant of the latter disadvantage, for he almost invariably commenced his address in as modified, subdued, and quiet a tone as he possibly could; but when his interest warmed, as his speech advanced, he lost the man in the advocate, and he generally concluded in a loud, somewhat triumphant, though most discordant burst of clamorous declamation. Having all these difficulties to surmount, the honour of his progress is so much the higher, and the attorneys never forgot his success with the jury while they criticized and perhaps resented his occasional incivility to themselves. One of the strongest elements of Mr. Platt's good fortune was, however, his faculty of making a case amusing, in which he was sometimes successful, even when the materials were of the most unpromising kind.

Mr. Platt's courage and perseverance in due course of time, received their reward; he despised the sneers of fastidious spectators, and consoled himself in the verdicts of his juries. He treated those who gave him briefs as if he returned them full value, and he had the satisfaction of seeing his business steadily increase, of receiving a silk gown in due time, and ultimately of leading the Home Circuit.

That he will support the dignity of the high office to which he has been elevated there can be little doubt, and although the process of sinking the advocate in the judge will have many observers, there is every reason to believe that his character will acquire renewed honour from the operation.

He will, of course, receive the distinction of knighthood in a few days.—Historical Register.

"Channel Island law," says the editor of the Jersey Times in his last paper, "is both cheap and simple." No Jersey lawyer will deny it! For proof we give the following:—The case of De Mirtre, at the suit of Messrs. Stevens, involves a disputed debt of only 46*l*. It is not pretended to be more than a simple contract. A more "simple" case for "simple law" cannot be imagined. Yet it has been off and on for more than twenty months! and during all that long period the poor defendant has been in actual custody in Jersey gaol! The costs amount to what? Only 170*l*. British sterling. The case is now in the hands of the Baillie's secretary to be prosecuted in formâ pauperis by appeal to her Majesty in Council. With such a dernier ressort for a defendant in custody on a simple contract account, how could the Jersey Times have ventured to assert that law in Jersey was either cheap or simple?—From a correspondent of the Jersey Gazette.

Lord Mountcashel lately prosecuted two officers of the Third Dragoon Guards stationed at Clogher Barracks, for shooting snipe on his grounds without leave, contrary to the 7th and 8th Victoria, cap. 9, sec. 69; but it was suggested that "snipe was not game," and therefore that the penalties were not incurred. Mr. Brewster and the Solicitor-General have since given their opinion, confirming this view of the case: "Snipe," they say, "is not game."

Special probate of the will, with three codicils, of Granville Penn, esq. was granted by the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, on the 16th January, 1845, to Granville John Penn, esq. the eldest son and one of the executors, so far as relates to the personal estate of the deceased in England and elsewhere, except in America, a power being reserved to Isabella Penn, the widow and relict, and other executors, to prove hereafter. The whole bearing of the will (which is of great length, dated 9th February, 1836) is in reference to the grant of an annuity by an Act passed in the 30th year of the reign of George III. intituled, "An Act for settling and securing an annuity on the heirs and descendants of William Penn, esq. the original proprietor of the Province of Pennsylvania, in consideration of the meritorious services of the said William Penn and the losses which his family have sustained in consequence of the unhappy dissensions in America." The annuity was originally 4,000*l*. in the nature of real property, payable out of the Consolidated Fund. From which annuity the deceased bequeaths the sum of 3,000*l*. per annum to his eldest son, Granville John Penn, for the term of 500 years (remainder over to other sons and descendants), subject to several annuities and legacies. He also bequeaths to him the premises at New street, Spring-gardens, Westminster; his estate at the Isle of Portland, in the county of Dorset; and a newly-purchased estate at West End, Stoke Poges, Bucks; and appoints him, the said Granville John Penn, residuary legatee of all the property (except in America.) Personal estate sworn under 14,000*l*. The deceased was late of Stoke-park, Stoke Poges, Buckinghamshire, and died on 28th September, 1844.—Historical Register.

The Will of the late Jacob Samuda, esq. engineer (whose distressing death took place on the 12th of November, by explosion of a steam-boiler), was proved in Doctors' Commons on the 21st ult. by the brother, Joseph d'Aguila Samuda, esq. one of the executors; a power to the sister, Miss Abigail Samuda, the other executor, to prove hereafter. The will is dated 28th of August, 1841, and is in the handwriting of the deceased. To his father and mother he leaves half the profits arising from a cloth manufactory in Portugal, and the like profits arising from the assignment of patents for valves and fabrics. He leaves also a share to his three sisters, and to an uncle and aunt; a few legacies to other persons; and appoints his brother residuary legatee.—Ibid.

Will of Sir William Heygate, Bart. late Chamberlain of the City of London, was lately proved in Doctors' Commons by his relict, Lady Isabella Heygate, and Sir W. Heygate, Bart. the son. The other executors are his son, William Unwin Heygate, a minor, to whom a power is reserved of proving will hereafter. The deceased died at his residence, Roecliffe, in the county of Leicester, on 28th August, 1844. A short time previous to his death, he desired his eldest son (who was in the habit of writing out documents for him) to prepare his will from his dictation, and accordingly on the day the same bears date, viz. the 19th July, 1844, he drew up instructions for a will. When it was completed the son proposed that it should be fairly drawn up for execution, but the deceased said, "No, no, I will sign this; there is no telling what may happen." The draft occupied the whole four sides of a sheet of letter paper, very closely written from beginning to end, and from side to side, the last side being more closely written than the others, and no room whatever was left at the end for signature; the deceased, however, called in two of his servants to witness the execution, and signed his name in a narrow space on the margin of the first side, and the two servants also subscribed their names in continuation. The opinion of the Queen's Advocate (Sir John Dodson) was taken and probate granted. By this document, an annuity is left to his wife, and the property under settlement; the rest of the property, real and personal, he bequeaths to his sons, with the exception of a few legacies and a gift to his servants. Personal estate sworn under 45,000*l*. He held the office of Chamberlain only eighteen months.—Ibid.

The Will of the late Sir Isaac Wilson, knt. M.D. and F.R.S. late of Fareham, in the county of Southampton, who died on the 2nd of December last, has just been proved in Doctors' Commons by the executors, Charles W. Hallett, Marmaduke Robinson, and Hartwell J. Maude, esqrs. who are each left a legacy of 100*l*.; the remainder of the property, after all expenses are paid, to be divided into seven parts, and given to his brothers and sisters and their children as named in the will. His nephew, Joseph M'Carogher, M.D. is left a seventh share. Effects sworn under 30,000*l*. The will is dated 1st June, 1839.—Ibid.

The Will of the Rev. G. W. Hall, D.D. late Master of Pembroke College, in the University of Oxford, has been proved in Doctors' Commons by his sons, the Rev. G. C. Hall, clerk, and the Rev. H. D. Hall, clerk, two of the executors; the relict, the other executor, has a power reserved to prove hereafter. The effects were sworn under 25,000*l*.—Ibid.

IRELAND.

Dublin, Feb. 5.

The February session of the Commission Court (similar to the Central Criminal Court) commenced to-day, when a rather unusual, but at the same time, very gratifying occurrence took place. The grand and petty jurors for the county and city of Dublin, after remaining in attendance for about half an hour, were discharged by the judges without having been sworn, their lordships informing them that happily there was no occasion for their services. The county calendar, it appeared, contained but one case of crime, which, however, was not prosecuted. In the city there are but seven prisoners to be tried, all of whom are charged with minor offences, with one exception, and that one, the case of a woman charged with having poisoned her husband, stands over from a former session.

Mr. Commissioner Macan, Q.C., Serjeant Stock, LL.D., and Mr. Gilmour, Q. C. who compose the committee of Benchers appointed to investigate and report on Mr. Hardy's case, met on Saturday and also on Tuesday, and continued for some time occupied in inquiring into the subject. The learned gentlemen, I believe, purpose sitting daily in the judges' council-chamber, until they find themselves in a situation to furnish their report to the Bench; but what progress they have made as yet cannot be ascertained, as the strictest privacy is observed in the conduct of the proceeding.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ATTORNEYS AND BARRISTERS.—Re BATEMAN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LAW TIMES.

Sir,—I beg to trouble you with some remarks upon an article which appeared in the Morning Chronicle of Monday last, respecting a subject which affects most nearly both branches of the Legal Profession, and is, particularly at the present moment, of the utmost interest and importance. Your columns, I am sure, will be, as they ever have been, open to any observations which are intended to vindicate the claims and uphold the rights of what is usually and correctly termed the lower branch of the Profession. The writer of the article in question alludes to the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench, re Bateman, reported in the last number of the Law Times, and makes some remarks upon the propriety of that decision with which I entirely concur; that case merely determined that no one who has been an articled clerk while he was a barrister can avail himself of that service as an articled clerk so as to be admitted an attorney. This, then, is the case of an individual passing from the profession of a barrister to that of an attorney. But the writer goes on to denounce what he terms the great abuse of parties "serving their terms for the Bar at the very time that they are managing clerks to attorneys, or paid or articled clerks, or actual attorneys admitted and practising." And he says that the mischief of this is, that persons who come under these circumstances to the Bar have an advantage over their competitors, inasmuch as their previous acquaintance with the subordinate branch of the Profession furnishes them with a set of clients who support them in their new capacity of barristers. But surely this accidental acquisition of business can never be considered so great an evil (if, indeed, it be an evil at all, which seems somewhat difficult to maintain) as to counterbalance the manifest justice and reasonableness of opening the avenues of the Bar to all who have abilities or industry enough to attempt its difficult and thorny paths. Besides, the argument would go to exclude all who had been at any time employed as attorneys' clerks, or had been engaged in actual practice, even though they discontinued all professional avocations during the time of keeping terms, a doctrine savouring of absurdity, and one which, if it had formerly prevailed, would have shorn the Bar of some of its most splendid ornaments. As to the argument, or rather the assertion, that the "fallen state of the Profession in an intellectual point of view," is to be attributed to the admission of attorneys, it is enough to say that it is a mere assertion, and one somewhat at variance with fact and experience. The very circumstance which the objector relies on, of such persons possessing great practice, is sufficient to shew that they are skilful and learned in their profession; for it is the great distinction of the Law from all other Professions, that you can infallibly predicate of a man who has risen in it, that he is able and meritorious. In conclusion, I would only state that those who denounce it as a thing so monstrous, that a man should keep terms at the time he is a clerk or in practice, seem to forget that this is the only way which is open to many of attaining the higher branch of the Profession at all. There are numbers to whom it would be inaccessible, were they not allowed to engage in some professional employment during the period of their probation, and the injustice and cruelty of for ever excluding such persons as these seem too gross and palpable to require exposition or comment.

I am, &c.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

E. K. S. (Southampton) offers the following suggestions for union:—

Had your journal done no more than it has done—proved the necessity, urged the formation, and announced the existence of law societies, it would have been enough for its fame—it might have rested its reputation upon the fact, that, in after-years, when the power and influence of unity shall be felt, professional men will trace the animating spirit to the energy, persuasion, and convincing arguments of the Law Times. This is enough for its reputation—enough to entitle it to the remembrance of all those who have at heart the purification of the Profession, and, ultimately, the welfare of society at large. You have already inserted one or two of my communications on this subject. Since then, the Metropolitan and Provincial Legal Association has been formed, and now, within the last month, the Northern Law Societies have confederated, forming themselves into a band powerful for good, and, if adhering to their rules, powerless for evil. All this says much; it tells us that there is a rustling amongst the "dry bones,"—that professional men are standing up as a class, and that now will shew their true characters as a body second to none in probity, and activity for all that is good. But there is more to be done yet. There must be union, in a more or less degree, between the legal societies, if any thing thorough is to be done; at present the exertions of each will be but partial, and its energies but restricted. There are three societies now; the Incorporated Law Society, the Metropolitan and Provincial Legal Association, and the Provincial Law Societies' Association; these ought to act in harmony—at least when any measure is projected which affects the Profession as a whole. What might they not do then? Read the last report of the first-named Society. They were not only consulted by the Criminal Law Commissioners on some proposed alteration in that branch of the law, but even by the judges themselves, and "they have to express their pride and gratification at the continued kindness with which this body is treated by the Bench, and the confidence which is reposed in its recommendations." Why should the other societies be debarred from suggesting or recommending? In the Parliament that is now open, of course numerous "amendments" will be started; let, then, all these societies intercommunicate; let committees from each meet; let them draw up queries, suggestions, or reports, and personally wait on the members of the House—then will their influence be felt, and we shall have fewer "whimsical" Acts, and less vituperation.

I hope, Sir, you will urge this gathering, as proposed; sure am I that, as a legal journalist, watching our interests, you could do nothing better.

COUNSEL.

The statement of the great inconvenience resulting from the acceptance of briefs by Counsel, with at least a strong probability that they will be unable to conduct them, to which we directed attention last week as one of the evils requiring early investigation and remedy, has, we hear, occasioned a great deal of discussion among both branches of the Profession, and our views have been defended and combated with considerable vehemence. We are not so uncandid as to deny that they who differ from us may adduce many and weighty reasons in favour of the existing practice, but nothing we have yet seen or heard has at all shaken our opinion that the practice is not in accordance with the principles of morality, and that there would be no serious difficulty in its abolition.

It is quite true that a power to correct the evil rests with the Attorneys; they might sweep it away if they pleased; but to do so effectually they must be unanimous. So great is the responsibility devolving upon an attorney in th conduct of a suit, that he will not deem himself justified in neglecting any chance, however small, which might conduce to success. Therefore, while there is a possibility that the ablest advocate may be brought into the field by his antagonist, he would not incur the remotest hazard by omitting to retain him, even though it be almost certain that his actual services will not be secured. The Attorney, therefore, is the victim of the system. Unless all the Attorneys would agree to give their briefs only where they will be certainly undertaken by the Counsel, it would be vain for a few to adopt such a rule; for it would be incurring a risk which no one would like to take upon his own responsibility. But is there any hope of such an agreement being made, or if made, adhered to? The grievance is admitted by all; but who will begin to apply the remedy? Sure we are that the reform, if it be desirable, can only be accomplished by some such interposition as was indicated last week.

A correspondent denies that it is, in fact, an evil. Surely he could have had but little experience in his Profession not to have felt it in his own affairs. Has he never found himself in this predicament? He has a heavy cause. He retains the best advocate to conduct it, the best case-lawyer as junior; he wants the one to speak for him, the other to work up the law for him, and for this purpose his arrangement is complete. The cause is called on. His leader is absent in another court. To his extreme dismay, the man whom he has selected because he cannot make a speech, is suddenly called upon to conduct the case, to address the jury, and to play a part for which he has not a single qualification—that of advocate. Defeat is the almost necessary consequence; and besides the loss of his verdict the attorney has the additional mortification of charging his client, who cannot comprehend how professional morality can differ from other morality, with the heavy fee paid to the absent advocate, who failed to fulfil his tacit engagement, yet keeps the gold as unconcernedly as if he had done the work for which it was paid to him, and won the cause which had, in fact, been lost through his absence.

That this is not an over-coloured picture we believe will be admitted by the greater portion of the attorneys, at least, and it cannot fail to be acknowledged by the experienced of the Bar, and the most readily by those who most profit by the system.

Let us not be misunderstood. We cast not the slightest reflection upon those who act in accordance with the existing practice. It is the rule, and they cannot and must not depart from it without something like general concurrence. We have noticed the system in hope that the evil, if such it be, will be pondered upon, talked about, and ultimately abandoned by common consent, as inconsistent with the high character of a Profession which should be above suspicion.

CERTIFICATE DUTY.

We learn from the Secretary to the Metropolitan and Provincial Legal Association, that an immense number of signatures have been appended to the petition praying for the repeal of this unjust and grievous tax upon the Profession. As it will be presented in the course of a few days, there should be no delay in the transmission of their names by those who may not yet have signed it. The suggestion has been thrown out, that some substitute for it might be found in an addition to the stamp duty on articles of clerkship, which would be a much more effective protection than an annual tax, which deters none whom it is desirable to exclude. We are inclined, at the first blush of it, to approve this suggestion; but the entire subject shall have early attention.

SHAM ATTORNEYS.

We have received another specimen of this noxious tribe. It will be best introduced by the letter that inclosed it:—

Cullompton, Devon, 27th Jan. 1845.

Sir,—As you are such a determined opponent to Sham Attorneys and Solicitors, inclosed you have a specimen, brought me by Bicknell, who is a poor man, and would have paid the debt and costs, but being unable to do so at once, wished me to say if he could not pay the amount by instalments. I insisted on his not paying the 3s. 6d. being an illegal demand. I consider the name a fictitious one, not appearing in the Law List. You can make what use you wish with the letter, for the benefit of the Profession,

And I remain, Sir, yours respectfully,

Albert Gribble.

Bridgwater, Jan. 20, 1845.

Mr. John Bicknell, I have to inform you that if the balance of your account due to Mr. Wm. Glencross & Co. is not paid when next called for, I have orders to commence an action at law for the recovery thereof, the expenses of which I trust you will avoid by settling the same forthwith.

I am, yours, &c.

B. Bonly, Solicitor.

VERULAM SOCIETY.

We have now to announce some arrangements which will add considerably to the interest and utility of this Society.

At the suggestion of many of the members, it has been resolved to prepare for the Society a complete series of Forms, for use in offices, embracing every branch of practice,—Common Law, Magistrates' Law, Conveyancing, Election Law. The Forms will be prepared with care by barristers conversant with the various subjects to which they belong. They will be printed on good paper, and adapted to the practical needs of the Profession. They will be supplied to the members at the reduced prices of the Society. It is proposed ultimately to embrace in the series every useful form; but as the work will be of necessity an extensive one, some time must elapse before all will be prepared. We shall take care from week to week to announce them as they are ready for delivery. The following have been sent to the press, and will be published in a few days:—Common Law.—Letter for Payment of Debts; Copy of Writ of Summons; Copy Subpœnas ad test. and duces tecum; Notice to Quit; Warrant of Distress; Appraisement. Magistrates' Law.—Forms in Bastardy; Poor Law Forms.

These will be immediately followed by others. A list of those completed will be regularly published, with the prices to the members, as well as the prices to the public.

Still so many of the circulars are not returned that we are unable to state the result, so as to announce what of the works proposed have been adopted by the members. But from a hasty calculation of those received, we expect that the Year-Book and the Statutes will be approved. The others are doubtful. So many of the members propose, instead of the suggested Practical Precedents, as a distinct publication, they should be appended to the Reports, that the amendment will be adopted, and, therefore, to each class of the Reports will be subjoined its appropriate precedents,—Common Law precedents to the Practice Cases—Conveyancing to the Real Property and Conveyancing Cases—Magistrates' Forms to the Magistrates' Cases—Forms of Indictments, &c. to the Criminal Law Cases. Thus the work will be made very complete and useful, and every member will obtain just the class of precedents he requires, without burdening himself with the entire set.

Some of the members have expressed surprise that no progress has yet been made with the expensive text-books. The reason is this. The cost of bringing out a text-book would not be repaid by a less sale than 500. The Society now numbers 754 members. If all would agree to take the same books, there would be no difficulty in proceeding with any number that might be required. But, unfortunately, they will not agree in this. Some want one class of books only, others another, and the consequence is, that no one work yet proposed has had more than 350 orders. Who, then, is to incur the risk of printing?

An author cannot be engaged to write a book without an undertaking from the publisher for payment of an agreed sum. The cost of writing and printing one of the text-books would be at least 400*l*. The publisher cannot be expected to hazard this, unless secured from loss by orders previously received from the members. The same difficulty does not occur in the case of works published in parts, like the Reports; for there the cost is limited, and the risk trifling; and if not approved they can be suspended at any moment.

We trust this explanation will suffice. The difficulty is one which will be removed as the Society increases in numbers; for then it may be expected that out of the whole body there will be sufficient demand for each class of books, to justify the necessary engagements with author and printer.

The Reports, which have somewhat fallen into arrear, are now in rapid progress. Nos. II. and III. of Practice Cases are out. No. VI. of Magistrates' Cases will be ready for delivery on Tuesday. No. III. of Criminal Law Cases on Saturday next. No. VII. of Magistrates' Cases, Nos. VII. and VIII. of Real Property and Conveyancing Cases, No. IV. of Criminal Law Cases, and No. IV. of Practice Cases, are ready for the press, and will be issued as fast as the printer can proceed with them.

We are anxious to complete a Part of each series. Each volume will probably consist of twenty numbers, or five parts, and it will contain at least three times as much matter as a volume of the old reports, at one-half the price of the latter.

The following new members have been added since our last report:—

Cooke, P. B. Gloucester.
Southee, Robt. 19, Ely-place.
Sawle, C. B. Gravis, esq. J. P., Penrice, St. Austell.
Chamberlain, Jas. Hardy, 42, Grafton-st. East.
Bond, Chas. Axminster.

THE CRITIC.

New Books.

Hints on the Study of the Law, for the Practical Guidance of Articled and Unarticled Clerks, seeking a competent knowledge of the Legal Profession. By EDWARD FRANCIS SLACK. London, Crockford.

THE title of this little volume exactly describes its contents. It is a collection of Hints—hints not merely as to what to study, but how to study; and not for study alone, but for general conduct both in and out of the profession. These exhibit a great deal of good sense and right feeling; and they are not the less likely to tell upon those to whom they are especially addressed because they are written in a familiar strain, more as if the author were talking than writing. The sketches of the opposite career of the industrious and of the idle clerk are graphic and truthful, and as the author speaks from experience, he can scarcely fail to be listened to with respect, and must carry silent conviction in quarters where advice in any other form is not readily admitted. The Hints as to the time for study, the books to be read, the studies of the office, how the student may test his learning and skill, are excellent, so far as they extend, and they are proffered so unaffectedly, so much more in the manner of a friend than in that of a master, that they can scarcely fail to be heard; and if heard they cannot but accomplish much good among the large circle to whom they are addressed.

The volume is so small, and its cost so trifling, that we will not anticipate the reader by extract.

The Law Magazine; or, Quarterly Review of Jurisprudence. No. LXVI. Old Series, No. 11. New Series. London, Benning and Co.

The Law Review, and Quarterly Journal of British and Foreign Jurisprudence. No. 11. London, O. Richards.

WE have already fully described the design of these periodicals. Our duty now is limited to a notice of the contents of the numbers just issued. The pressure of reports will compel us to brevity this week, but during the vacation we purpose to return to the varied and instructive pages before us, and to present to our readers some interesting specimens of their contents.

The Law Magazine has eight articles. The first, on "The Origin and Progress of Ecclesiastical Law in England," is an historical disquisition on a subject very imperfectly understood; though not strictly within the scope of a legal periodical, the present interest attaching to the system of ecclesiastical law is sufficient apology for its introduction, and the learning accumulated by the writer will repay the most busy lawyer for the half-hour devoted to its perusal. The "Joint Stock Companies Act" is the subject of the second article, and presents some novel views even upon a topic worn threadbare. "Chancery Practice" is a succinct account of that somewhat intricate branch of our law. The article on "Criminal Law Reform" is, perhaps, the best of the number, abounding in suggestions which might usefully be adopted when the much-desired consolidation of the criminal code shall be effected. A clever review of Mr. BROWN'S volume of Legal Maxims follows. Mr. F. KELLY'S Bill to provide an "Appeal in Criminal Cases" is advocated with irresistible force of argument in the sixth article; we trust that it will be read in quarters where the power to do an act of justice, as well as the honesty to acknowledge it, is to be found. A "Memoir of Lord ABINGER," containing a finely-drawn sketch of his intellectual character as an advocate and as a judge, concludes the more elaborate papers. To these are appended notes on leading cases in Equity and Common Law, short notices of new law books, and a digest of cases recently decided.

The Law Review contains twelve articles, on various and very interesting topics. The first is a "Life of Lord ELDON," which bears internal evidence of its authorship. Lord BROUGHAM'S pen is visible in every page. The next is a short practical essay "On enforcing the attendance of Witnesses at Common Law." The second of the series on the "Law of Fees and Costs" is a fearless attack on a bad system. A "Biographical Sketch of Mr Baron GARROW" is the theme of the fourth article. The "Recent State Trial in Ireland" affords an opportunity for considering the Defects in the Criminal Law, and proposes some amendments. The sixth article reverts to the subject of Legal Education, and suggests the propriety of a Law University. To this paper also we shall probably return. The anomalies and absurdities of our Law of Divorce are ably treated in the seventh article. "Conveyancing; its Early History and Present State," should be read by every lawyer. A Memoir of the late Sir JOHN BAYLEY follows; and to this also we shall have occasion to return. The tenth article is entitled "The Legal Budget," and treats of the inequality of taxation among suitors, and improvidence in its collection, and is a severe attack on the fee-taking system. From this article we shall quote largely in future comments upon a system whose abuses have been too much neglected by the Profession. "The Judicial System of France" contains some severe strictures on the administration of the law among our neighbours. "The Criminal Law Consolidation Bill" is recommended in the concluding essay, which seems also to be the production of Lord BROUGHAM. Some correspondence, and a selection of adjudged points, complete the number.

We reserve a variety of passages we had marked for extract until our columns shall be somewhat relieved from the matters of immediate importance that now press upon them.

NECROLOGY.

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE WILLIAM STURGES BOURNE.

The death of the Right Hon. William Sturges Bourne took place on Saturday last at Testwood-house, near Southampton, after an illness of several weeks. The deceased, William Sturges Bourne, was son of the Rev. John Sturges, Chancellor of Winchester. He was born in 1769, and married, 1808, Miss Bowles, daughter of Mr. Oldfield Bowles, of North Ashton, Oxfordshire. On the death of his maternal uncle he assumed the name of "Bourne" in addition to his patronymic. He was educated at Winchester College, and then graduated at Christ Church, Oxford. He was brought up to the bar, but retired from the profession on the death of his uncle. In 1798 he was elected representative for Hastings. He was joint Secretary to the Treasury from 1804 to 1806, under Mr. Pitt, but on Lord Grenville coming into office he retired. From 1807 to 1809 he was a lord of the Treasury, in the Duke of Portland's administration. In August 1814 he was appointed one of the commissioners for the affairs of India, and was made a privy councillor. He continued at the board till 1821. In 1827 he was for a short time Secretary of State for the Home Department; and in July, when Mr. Canning resigned, he succeeded the Earl of Carlisle as Lord Commissioner of Woods and Forests, which office he continued to hold until January 1828. He sat for a period of above thirty years in the House of Commons, having represented Hastings, Christchurch, Bandon, Ashburton, and Milbourne Port. On the passing of the Reform Bill he retired altogether from political affairs. A well-known bill for the regulation of parish vestries is called after him, "Sturges Bourne's Act." He was Lord Warden of the New Forest, a sort of honorary situation, which he had held ever since 1827. He was deservedly esteemed in the immediate neighbourhood of his seat for his benevolence to the poor.

SIR C. F. WILLIAMS.

The following additional particulars respecting the early career of the late Chief Commissioner of the Court of Bankruptcy have been sent to us by a correspondent:—

"He has always been known by the sobriquet of 'Minimus' Williams, on account of his little stature: he wanted exactly half an inch of being five feet high. Though a small figure, his proportions were perfect and well-formed; he was an excellent rider, and once took the part of jockey in a race. Before he entered the legal profession he was in the militia, and fought a duel, occasioned by some ball-room dispute; he was wounded in it, and the feat ever afterwards formed a topic for his after-dinner talk, and he would sometimes be pleased to display the garment which the ball had pierced. He was an excellent mimic, and especially happy in his imitation of countrymen, and of the late Baron Thompson, which was well known to all his legal contemporaries. He would have made a capital actor, having great command and self-assurance. In private conversation his utterance was very quick, voluble, and even indistinct; whereas in public, it was slow, measured, and very clear. He would say, "You never catch me talking quick in public." Though no vocalist, he used to write songs for Tom Welsh, the composer, to set to music, and had likewise an appreciation for painting. I believe he was called to the bar between the years 1806-8, and I do not think he was so old as seventy-five; I should say he was not more than seventy. He was always of Whig principles, and his success in his profession should be attributed more to his good humour in society, great activity, and general liveliness, than to his legal knowledge. Mr. Leader, the father of the present member for Westminster, was one of his earliest patrons. Together with Mr. Charles Phillips, he was counsel for Probert, one of Thurtell's associates in the murder of Mr. Weare, and I remember the air of triumph with which he told me he had saved his client's life by getting him made an approver for the Crown."—Historical Register.

THE MARQUIS OF SLIGO.

DUBLIN, JAN. 30.—Accounts were received in Dublin this evening of the death of the Marquis of Sligo, in the 57th year of his age.

Howe Peter Browne, Marquis of Sligo, Earl of Altamont, Viscount Westport, county Mayo, and Baron Monteagle, in the same county, K.P. and P.C. for England and Ireland, late captain-general and governor of the island of Jamaica; also a peer of the United Kingdom, by the title of Baron Monteagle, of Westport, county mayo, and custos rotulorum, county Mayo; born 18th May, 1788; succeeded his father, John Denis, the late Marquis, Jan. 2, 1809; married, March 4, 1816, Hesther Catherine de Burgh, eldest daughter of John Thomas, 13th Earl of Clanricarde, and had 14 children, most of whom still survive.

The deceased Marquis, though professedly a Whig, had not mixed up in party matters for many years past. In his domestic character and that of landlord he stood high. He effected great agricultural and social improvements upon his estates in the west of Ireland, and the linen trade of Westport owes its origin to the noble marquis's attention to the welfare of his tenantry.

The immediate cause of the noble marquis's death is not accurately known, but it is supposed to have been caused by apoplexy.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Ex parte Van Sandau, re Martin.

Nov. 6, 7, and 16, 1844.

Order of commitment by the Court of Review—Injunction—Contempt—Jurisdiction in bankruptcy.

Where a person, who had been committed by the Court of Review for a contempt, brought an action against the party at whose instance he had been committed, and the Court of Review granted an injunction to restrain that action, except by allowing the plaintiff to demur on the record at law in a particular form, in order to prevent the court of law trying the validity of the order of commitment:—Held, on appeal, that the order was bad, because it contained no distinct adjudication of the contempt, and that the injunction ought not to continue. Quære, whether the Court of Review has power to grant any such injunction.

This was a petition by Mr. Van Sandau, a solicitor, that several orders made by the Court of Review might be reversed or varied, and that the consequential orders might be made. The petition stated that a petition had been presented by Messrs. Turner and Hensman in the Court of Review, praying that Mr. Van Sandau might be committed for contempt, and that he might be struck off the roll of solicitors. That petition was heard before Sir George Rose, one of the judges of the Court of Review, who committed Mr. Van Sandau for contempt, and ordered him to pay Messrs. Turner and Hensman's costs, charges, and expenses. Mr. Van Sandau was afterwards released, on making a submission directed by the Court of Review, and payment of the costs of the petition. An action had been subsequently commenced by Van Sandau against Messrs. Turner and Hensman for damages in respect of such imprisonment. That action had been stayed by an injunction of the Court of Review. The proceedings arose out of a letter which Mr. Van Sandau had published reflecting upon the chief judge of the Court of Review, Knight Bruce, in respect of a judgment delivered by him upon a petition Re Martin, a bankrupt. It appeared that Messrs. Turner and Hensman, and Mr. Cummings, the partner of Mr. Van Sandau, had been the joint solicitors under the bankruptcy, and some errors occurred in the bills of costs, which had become the subject of acrimonious litigation between the solicitors. There were numerous orders which the petitioner sought to have discharged or varied, but the questions resolved themselves into three; first, whether the letter published by Mr. Van Sandau was in fact a contempt, or whether it was any thing more than a fair criticism on the judgment of the chief judge. Secondly, that the form of the order of commitment was inaccurate and insufficient; and thirdly, that the Court of Review had no power, by injunction, to restrain Mr. Van Sandau from proceeding with his action-at-law against Messrs. Turner and Hensman.

Bagshawe, for the petitioner Van Sandau.—The order of commitment directs that Van Sandau shall be committed for a contempt, in writing, printing, and publishing a certain letter set out in the schedule to the petition presented by Messrs. Turner and Hensman. That was not a sufficient averment of the contempt; nor was there any adjudication of the contempt in the commitment. In Re Elgie (8 Jur. 187), it was held, that a mere commitment for some contempt, without an express adjudication, was a fatal objection. Nor was the punishment awarded a proper one; for the Court of Review had no right to order a party in contempt to pay "charges and expenses," as well as costs. The Court of Review had no power to grant an injunction to restrain an action-at law; that power was confined solely to the Court of Chancery.

The Lord Chancellor.—The order seems to be in form like that in Elgie's case. The question is one affecting the liberty of the subject, and it is necessary that every order should be framed with the utmost precision. The objection to the form of the order which was sustained in Elgie's case exists in full force here.

Bagshawe.—The contempt must be founded on an attempt to pervert the course of justice, and this letter was published after the matter was virtually at an end. Then, even if the Court of Review had power to grant an injunction at all, the form of the injunction was such that it could not be sustained. The order restrained the petitioner from further proceeding in the action, except to amend his demurrer, and thereby to raise certain points only; and his counsel were expressly enjoined from arguing any other points in the case than those directed by the injunction to be raised.

He cited Ex parte Lund (6 Vesey, 781); Ex parte Glossop, re Kemp (2 Glynn & Jameson, 268); Ex parte Lee (ibid.).

The Lord Chancellor.—In Ex parte Dennett, in the same volume, Sir John Leach said the objection should be taken by petition, otherwise a bill might be filed in the Court of Exchequer, and the Bankruptcy might go there. If a contempt of the Court of Queen's Bench was committed in the course of the trial of a cause there, could that Court restrain an action in respect of that contempt in the Common Pleas?

Bagshawe, on the question of an appeal from the Court of Review upon a question of contempt, cited Ex parte Bushell, mentioned in Rex v. Burdett (14 East, 63, 122).

The Lord Chancellor.—If an inferior Court commits for a contempt without stating the facts, cannot the superior Court inquire into the question?

Bagshawe referred to Crossley's case (3 Wilson, 129, 200). Then, under the Bankruptcy Court Act of 3 & 4 Wm. 4, and the Act of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, one judge has no power to commit; and in this case the commitment was signed by a single judge.

The Lord Chancellor.—If to publish a libel on a court of justice is a contempt, then this letter is a contempt, for it is plainly a libel. There can be no justification for such conduct; an apology may go to diminution of punishment.

Rolt, on the same side.—Questions of contempt are not exempt from the appellate jurisdiction (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 29, s. 25).

The Lord Chancellor.—By the Act constituting the Court of Review, the judges of that Court and the commissioners have certain duties to perform when sitting alone; now does it not mean that a single judge shall not have power to commit, sitting alone in the performance of such duties? It could not apply to the Court of Review. The subsequent Act enables one judge only to act as the Court of Review, and as such to commit for contempt. The only question is, was not Sir George Rose, when he signed the warrant of commitment, sitting as the Court of Review?

Rolt.—If the object had been to obstruct the course of justice, or to influence the decision of the Court, then it was in contempt, but if the cause was actually concluded, the judge has only the ordinary remedy. Nothing remained to be done in the matter except the formal drawing up of the order, which was not a continuing proceeding. Sir Geo. Rose referred to Rex v. Oliver, from a judgment written, but not pronounced by Chief Justice Wilmot, which is published in Wilmot's Opinions and Judgments, 255, and in 4 Burrow's Reports. A blow given to a judge after the matter was ended would be no contempt, nor was a libel under similar circumstances.

The Lord Chancellor.—But what is done to a judge with reference to his judicial duties, is a contempt. Lord Hardwicke, in the case of the St. James's Evening Post (2 Atk. 469), said, "There are three different sorts of contempt. One kind of contempt is scandalizing the Court itself. There may likewise be a contempt of Court by abusing parties who are concerned in causes here; and there may be also a contempt of Court in prejudicing mankind against persons before the cause is heard." Nothing is more incumbent on a Court of Justice than to prevent its proceedings from being mis-represented. This was held by Lord Eldon in Ex parte Jones (13 Ves. 237), and by Lord Cottenham in Mr. L. Charlton's case, and in Faulkner's case (2 Myl. & Craig, 316; 2 Montague & Ayrton).

Rolt.—Criticism is not contempt, if the proceeding is concluded. If it were otherwise, when would it cease to be a contempt? The true rule is, whether the libel be an obstruction or not? Here the letter is no obstruction to justice, and though it may be libellous, it is no contempt. To say the effect of the judgment will be so and so, is legitimate criticism.

The Lord Chancellor.—You cannot do away with the libellous character of the paper.

Rolt.—The offensive expressions are withdrawn. The form of the order is bad for want of an express adjudication. (Ex parte Wilton, 1 Dowl. Rep. 808.) Charges and expenses are never given, except in the Court of Chancery, to trustees and others in fiduciary situations, or out of a fund. (Fearns v. Young, 10 Ves. 184.) The apology made by Mr. Van Sandau was no submission to the order. Irregularity may be waived, but not error; and this is substantial error. (Levi v. Ward, 1 Sim. & Stu. 334.) Then, as to the injunction, even if the Court of Review had power to restrain an action by injunction, it is not in the proper form.

The Lord Chancellor.—The order does not direct how the record is to be shaped, it only limits the argument. The demurrer at law cannot be so amended as to exclude a consideration of the validity of the order. If the injunction operates at all, it must be upon the Court; for there is no occasion to argue the case, but the Court would notice the objection appearing on the record, whether argued or not.

Rolt.—There is no jurisdiction to restrain by injunction, except in the Court of Chancery. (Aston v. Heron, 2 Myl. & K. 390; Froud v. Lawrence, 1 Jac. & Wal. 655; Ex parte Davidson, 1 Montagu & Ayrton, 287.) The Court of Review may make orders on parties within its jurisdiction, which may operate as an injunction; but Van Sandau was not the solicitor under the bankruptcy. He might be within that jurisdiction as to a contempt.

The Lord Chancellor.—If the Court of Review had adjudicated that he had committed a contempt, without specifying in what contempt consisted, that would be an answer to any action. No Court would unravel that matter. This shews no injunction is necessary.

Rolt.—The law leaves it to the Court complained to, to say whether the action should be brought. (Dicas v. Lord Brougham, 6 Carrington & Payne.)

Swanston and Simon, for the respondents, distinguished the order of committment for contempt from the injunction. Lord Ellenborough, in Burdett v. Abbott (14 East), laid down that if there be an order of commitment for contempt by one of the superior Courts, another Court would not inquire further.

The Lord Chancellor.—Was there any adjudication in that case? Where there is an adjudication of contempt, followed by a commitment, no other Court will interfere.

Swanston.—The objection of want of adjudication was not taken in that case.

The Lord Chancellor.—The objection I have is this: it is a question of law, and I should not wish to decide a question of law in bankruptcy. The case of Green v. Elgie seems in point; it is exactly similar to this. First, there was no adjudication; secondly, the contempt complained of was stated by way of reference.

Swanston.—The paper is set out in the schedule. It is a mere form of words to say there was not an adjudication. The paper was before the Court, and he was committed for circulating it. As to the injunction, the Act establishing the Court of Review declares that it shall be a court of equity. Nothing is more common than an injunction to restrain an action by assignees, or by a bankrupt. Lord Eldon said that the power of the Lord Chancellor was wanted to effect objects in bankruptcy. (Ex parte Lund, 6 Ves. 781.)

The Lord Chancellor.—He had all the authority of the Great Seal, through sitting in bankruptcy. That further power is not transferred by the statute to the Court of Review.

Swanston.—The case of Ex parte Glossop, suprà, mentioned on the other side, proceeded on its peculiar circumstances. (Ex parte Pease, 1 Rose; Ex parte Hornby, re Tarleton, 1 Mon. & Bl. 1; Ex parte Davy, 4 Dea. & Chit.; Ex parte Fletcher, 1 Ves. & Bea. 350; Ex parte White, 4 Dea. & Chit. 279; Ex parte Figes, 2 Glyn & Jam.; Frowd v. Laurence, suprà.)

The Lord Chancellor.—It appears to me that the injunction was quite ineffectual for the purpose intended, for the question of the validity of the warrant was to be withdrawn from the consideration of the court of law; but the warrant was set out in the plea, and the Court would take notice of it. It is not necessary to assign cause of demurrer. Therefore if the party is allowed to demur at all, the objections being apparent upon the record, will be taken by the Court itself.

Bagshawe, in reply, read the judgment of Sir George Rose. There were no other powers than those of the Lord Chancellor, in bankruptcy, transferred to the Court of Review. (King v. Harris, 7 Term Rep.; Sheriff of Middlesex's case, 11 Ad. & E.)

Swanston referred to Seton's Decr. es, 435.

The Lord Chancellor. — I do not think this case is very distinguishable from Green v. Elgie, in both cases it refers to the petition for the contempt.

Saturday, Nov. 16.

JUDGMENT.

The Lord Chancellor.—The facts of this case may be stated in a very few words. A petition and a motion were depending in the Court of Review in the bankruptcy of a person of the name of Martin. Mr. Van Sandau was the solicitor on one side, and Messrs. Turner and Hensman on the other. An order was made upon the petition and motion; Mr. Van Sandau was dissatisfied with the decision, and he wrote, printed, and published a libel upon the Court of Review, upon the eminent judge of that court, and upon Messrs. Turner and Hensman, with respect to this matter. Messrs. Turner and Hensman complained by petition to the Court of Review, and the Court, after considering the subject, made an order directing that Mr. Van Sandau, for his contempt in publishing the libel set forth in the schedule to the petition, should be committed to the custody of the marshal of the Queen's Bench Prison. He was committed accordingly, and afterwards apologised, and was discharged. For the part which Messrs. Turner and Hensman took in this transaction Mr. Van Sandau commenced an action against them in the Court of Queen's Bench. He filed his declaration. They pleaded in justification the order of the Court of Review and the warrant, both of which were set out at length in the plea. To this plea Mr. Van Sandau demurred, and the case now stands for argument in the Court of Queen's Bench. An application was made to the Court of Review to restrain Mr. Van Sandau from proceeding in the action, and the Court made a qualified order on this application, restraining him from proceeding, except for the purpose of raising certain questions. The Court of Review gave him permission on the argument upon the demurrer to object to the proceedings of the Court on three distinct grounds, but restrained him, his counsel, &c. from raising any other questions upon the demurrer except those pointed out by the Court of Review.

This is the state of things, and from this and some consequential orders Mr. Van Sandau has appealed to this Court, and the question is, what course should be taken with respect to these matters? It was, in the first place, contended that no contempt had been committed. Now any person who reads the publication, which is admitted to have been written, printed, and circulated by Mr. Van Sandau, must be satisfied that it is a gross and impudent libel upon the Court and the learned judge, imputing to him the most unworthy motives in pronouncing the judgment of which Mr. Van Sandau complains; a more gross and scandalous libel upon the administration of justice never was published. It was circulated while the matter was still pending, and before the minutes of the order were finally settled. It further appears that it was not only extensively circulated, but that it was even distributed by Mr. Van Sandau in the court itself, and in the presence of the learned judge, to solicitors who were attending the business of the court. That such conduct was a contempt—a gross contempt—of the Court, no reasonable man can for an instant doubt. Lord Hardwicke, in the case of the St. James's Evening Post (reported in 2 Atk. 469), in enumerating the different kinds of contempt, states as one distinct head of contempt the scandalizing of the Court itself. I might further refer upon this point, if it were necessary, to the elaborate judgment of Chief Justice Wilmot, written, but not delivered, in the case of Rex v. Oliver, in which the subject is learnedly and elaborately considered. The next point urged was, that the Court of Review possessed no authority to commit for contempt; but by the Act 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 29, s. 25, it is declared that the Court of Review shall be a Court of Record, and may have, use, and exercise all the powers, rights, and privileges of a Court of Record, as fully, to all intents and purposes, as the same are used by any of his Majesty's courts of law at Westminster; and the Court is in terms authorized to commit for contempt. But a distinction was taken; it was said that under this clause a judge sitting alone cannot commit for contempt. This requires some explanation. The Court originally consisted of four judges; the number was afterwards reduced to three, and certain powers were given to them sitting as the Court of Review, but the judges might also sit alone in performing the other duties prescribed by the Act. When, therefore, the Act says that a judge or commissioner sitting alone shall not commit for a contempt, it obviously means a judge sitting, not as the Court of Review, but acting as a judge in the exercise of the other duties prescribed by the statute. By a subsequent Act, power is given to a single judge to constitute the Court of Review; but the judge so sitting as the Court of Review does not come within the exception as to commitments for contempt, which relates only to a single judge sitting in his individual character for the purpose already stated, and not as the Court of Review. The objection originates in a misapprehension of the meaning of the Act of Parliament, and is obviously unfounded.

The next question relates to the form of the order. It is said that the order is vicious, as it contains no adjudication of a contempt having been committed. The order is in this form: it recites the petition and the libel, the latter being annexed to the petition as a schedule; and then it goes on in these words—"for his contempt in publishing the libel in the schedule to the said petition mentioned, this Court doth order him to be committed to the custody of the warden of the Queen's Prison until further order." It is said that this does not amount to an adjudication that Mr. Van Sandau had been guilty of a contempt, but merely assumes his guilt, and upon that assumption the order directs that he be committed to prison. Different precedents were referred to; first, Mr. Long Wellesley's case, before Lord Brougham. In that case there was a distinct adjudication that a contempt had been committed. The order recites the facts, and contains the decision of the Court on those facts, declaring "that the conduct of Mr. Long Wellesley was a gross and aggravated contempt of Court, and that as Mr. Wellesley, not withstanding admonition, persisted in such his contempt, the Court ordered him to be committed to the Fleet Prison." In that case, therefore, there was a precise and distinct adjudication. The next case was that of Mr. Lechmere Charlton before Lord Cottenham. In that case also there was an adjudication. The facts are stated, and the order runs thus—"The Lord Chancellor, upon taking the said matter into consideration, and deeming the conduct of the said Lechmere Charlton therein a contempt of this Court, doth think fit and so order," &c. The order in the case of Mr. Lechmere Charlton was founded on that made by Lord Hardwicke in the case of Martin, and which is in precisely the same terms, and there is no doubt that Lord Cottenham framed his order upon that precedent, which has, therefore, the sanction of those two distinguished and learned judges. The case of Green v. Elgie, in the Court of Queen's Bench, was also cited. The order in that case was made by the Court of Review, committing Green for contempt. He brought an action against Elgie for the part which he had taken in the proceeding. The order was set out in the plea of justification, but the Court of Queen's Bench thought it defective, as it did not adjudge that any contempt had been committed. The order stated "that Elgie had preferred his petition, praying that Green might be committed for his contempt of the order in the petition mentioned or referred to, and that on reading the petition, the affidavits, and the former order of the Court, the Court ordered that Green should be committed for his contempt in the said petition mentioned or referred to." In all criminal cases it is necessary that there should be a charge, a finding, and a conviction, as a foundation for the sentence. Every thing should be strictly and accurately pursued; and if in any one of these three points a substantial defect should appear, it would be a ground for reversing the proceeding. The question, therefore, will be, whether there is in this case a sufficient adjudication; the words are, "for his contempt in writing, printing, and publishing the paper set out in the schedule to the petition." Does this amount to a sufficient averment that Mr. Van Sandau published the paper in question, and to an adjudication that in so doing he had committed a contempt? Now, considering that I am sitting here in bankruptcy, and that, from the form in which this question has come before me, doubts may be entertained whether there could be an appeal from my decision, and adverting to the authorities which have been referred to, I think I ought not to give an opinion in affirmance of the sufficiency of the order, and at the same time follow it up by an injunction to restrain the party from taking the opinion of a court of law upon the subject. It was contended that the Court of Review had no power to grant an injunction, at least not an injunction of this sort; and the particular form of the injunction has been made the subject of comment. I think it unnecessary to decide the former of these questions; for, assuming that the Court of Review had authority to grant the injunction, the question would still remain to be considered, whether I ought, under the circumstances to which I have adverted, to sanction the injunction in such a case as the present. Then, as to the form of the injunction; when the injunction was issued, the record in the Court of Queen's Bench was complete; there was a declaration, a plea, and a demurrer. The plaintiff is permitted upon the demurrer to argue certain questions, and not others. Three objections are mentioned in the order, upon which alone he is permitted to insist. If the order of commitment is defective in substance, the injunction would be ineffectual. But the defect relied upon, if it is a defect, is one of substance, and not of form. It must appear on the record, and the Court of Queen's Bench would, in the proper discharge of its duty, and whether the objection was made by counsel or not, take notice of it, and give judgment accordingly. I think, therefore, the order for the injunction should be discharged. I confine myself to discharging the injunction. After the demurrer has been argued, the parties may again apply to the Court if they think proper.

Practice in bankruptcy—Special case—Adjudication.

The demurrer of Mr. Van Sandau to the defendants' plea in the action at law having been allowed by the Court of Queen's Bench, this petition again stood in the paper, both the petitioner and the respondents having applications to make; Messrs. Turner and Hensman had presented a distinct petition in order to bring all the questions before the Court.

Bagshawe and Rolt, for Van Sandau.

Swanston and Simon, for Turner and Hensman.

The Lord Chancellor.—The point upon which this case was decided in the Queen's Bench was, that there was no distinct averment in the plea that the warrant on which Mr. Van Sandau was committed was the warrant of the Court of Review. Was the argument of that point within the restriction imposed by the order of V. C. Knight Bruce?

Bagshawe.—It was.

The Lord Chancellor.—This Court interposes by injunction where the business of this court is concerned; but it is an admitted inconvenience in such cases that damages must be assessed by the Master. That inconvenience will not be incurred, unless where there are some circumstances which render it less inconvenient than to allow the case to proceed at law. There is nothing in this case to render it inconvenient, therefore why withdraw it from the proper tribunal? This Court is not the constitutional tribunal for questions of damages. If it had come before me upon a special case the questions might have gone to the House of Lords. By the Act for establishing the Court of Bankruptcy (1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 56, s. 37) it is enacted, "that in case the Lord Chancellor shall deem any matter of law or equity brought before him by way of appeal from the Court of Review, to be of sufficient difficulty or importance to require the decision of the House of Lords, or in case both parties in any proceedings before the Court of Review shall desire that any such matter may be determined in the first instance by the House of Lords, and not by the Lord Chancellor, then in such case the Lord Chancellor or the Court of Review may direct the whole facts, whereupon such question of law or equity shall arise, to be stated in the form of a petition of appeal to the House of Lords, and the party appealing may carry such appeal to the House of Lords in like manner as other appeals are preferred to that House; provided that the cases to be lodged by the parties in the House of Lords shall be confined in matter of fact, in cases of appeal from the Lord Chancellor, to setting forth the special case brought up to the Lord Chancellor from the Court of Review, and in cases of appeal from the said Court of Review, to setting forth a special case, to be approved and certified in manner hereinbefore provided touching appeals to the Lord Chancellor." Now as this has come before me upon petition, I must send it back to the Court of Review to be turned into a special case, in order that there may be an appeal to the House of Lords. It is unfortunate, too, that this case has been decided in the Queen's Bench on the form of pleading. It should have been averred in the plea that Sir George Rose was sitting as the Court of Review. It is a mere technical point. A single judge of the Court of Review sitting as the Court of Review is competent to make the order of commitment which forms the subject of the action. The error in the warrant is the fault of the officer, as it should have been sealed with the seal of the Court. On the hearing of the petition of Turner and Hensman, the Court will have to consider the whole question of the jurisdiction of the Lord Chancellor sitting in Bankruptcy to grant an injunction to restrain proceedings in the ordinary courts, and whether that question can properly come before me on a general petition.

The hearing of the matter fixed for Friday, the 14th inst.

CALVERT v. GANDY.

Practice—Orders under Act 4 & 5 Vict. c. 52—Parties—Discretion.

The Court has no discretion to exercise with respect to the orders made under the authority of the Acts of 4 Vict. c. 94, and the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 52, for facilitating the administration of justice in the Court of Chancery. Such orders are as imperative upon the Court as if they had been contained in a schedule to the Act itself.

The bill in this case had been filed for an account of the affairs of a joint-stock bank in the Isle of Man, the shareholders of which consisted of 120 persons, and the answer of the principal defendants suggested that all those shareholders ought to have been made parties. The answer, which was very long, extending to 327 folios, was put in on the 6th of November last, but was not laid before the plaintiff's counsel until the 20th of November. Then such counsel advised that the question as to whether all the shareholders ought or ought not to have been made parties was one which ought to be argued.

By the 39th order of August 1841, it is provided that if the defendant shall, by his answer, suggest that the bill is defective for want of parties, the plaintiff shall be at liberty, within fourteen days after answer filed, to set down the cause for argument on that objection only, and that where the plaintiff shall not so set down his cause, but shall proceed to a hearing, notwithstanding an objection for want of parties taken by the answer, he shall not, at the hearing of the cause, if the defendant's objection shall then be allowed, be entitled, as of course, to an order to amend.

In this case, the fourteen days having elapsed, the plaintiff applied to the defendants to consent that the cause should, nevertheless, be set down and argued as to the objection of want of parties. The defendants having refused, on the 4th of December to consent, on the 9th of December last, the plaintiff applied to the Vice-Chancellor of England for leave to set down the cause for argument, on the question of parties. That application was refused, and the plaintiff applied here by way of appeal.

Bagshawe, for the plaintiff, contended that the Court had a discretionary power to relax the general orders when justice to the suitors required it; and he cited Kershaw v. Clegg (1 Phillips, 120), where a similar application had been granted.

Lloyd, for the defendant, insisted that the plaintiff in this case had not used due diligence, and had not made out a case to entitle him to the indulgence of the Court; and that in fact the Court had no power to relax the 39th order of August 1841. That order was made under the authority of Acts of Parliament, which enacted that the orders, when made and presented for a certain time, were to have the force and authority of an Act of Parliament.

Bagshawe, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR (after looking at the Act).—I am sorry to say I have no discretion to exercise. The orders are expressly binding on the Court, and are the same as if they formed a schedule to the Act itself. If the orders had formed part of the Act of Parliament, I could have no power to alter them, and the effect here is the same, for the orders are declared to be absolutely binding on the Court unless altered within five years by the conjoint order of the Lord Chancellor, the Master of the Rolls, and the Vice-Chancellor. It turns out that the order in the case of Kershaw v. Clegg was made by consent, and, therefore, it is no authority one way or the other.

VICE-CHANCELLOR OF ENGLAND'S COURT.

Saturday, Dec. 21.

GORDON AND CO. v. THE GOVERNOR AND CO. OF THE BANK OF ENGLAND.

Practice—Pleading—16th order of 26th August, 1841.

G. and Co. carried on business in London, in the course of which they had several money transactions with W. and Co. and a mutual account had, previous to May 1837, subsisted between these two firms. In June, 1837, W. and Co. stopped payment, having, in April, 1837, pledged and deposited with the Governor and Company of the Bank of England a bill of exchange for 2,000l. as a security for a loan which had been drawn by M. and Co. in the United States, and accepted by G. and Co. In August, 1838, W. and Co. brought an action (the Bank of England being the actual plaintiffs), in the Superior Court of New York, against G. and Co. and M. and Co. upon the said bill of exchange. Under these circumstances, G. and Co. commenced the present suit against W. and Co., the Bank of England, and M. and Co. upon the grounds that, in April, 1837, and at the time when the bankruptcy of W. and Co. took place, there were larger sums due to them from W. and Co. than 2,000l. and that the Bank of England had notice of the claims of the plaintiffs, G. and Co. before the bill of exchange was deposited as aforesaid, and that G. and Co. were entitled to set-off against such bill of exchange, which, upon taking the account between them and W. and Co. should be found due from W and Co. to them. The bill then prayed for such account, and that the defendants W. and Co. and the Governor and Co. of the Bank of England, might also be restrained from proceeding in their names in the above action.

The defendants, the Bank of England, put in their plea to all the relief sought by the bill, and all the discovery (except that part which related to no tice of the plaintiffs' equities), as purchasers for valuable consideration without notice. Held, that the plea was good, notwithstanding the action was in the name of W. and Co.

The 16th Order of 26th August, 1841, directs that a defendant shall not be bound to answer any statement or charge in the bill unless specially interrogated thereto, and that he shall not be bound to answer any interrogatory in the bill, except those interrogatories which such defendant is required to answer, &c.

The plea was accompanied by an answer to the excepted interrogatory relating to notice, denying notice in the terms of the interrogatory which were general. Held, that since the above-named orders, the interrogatory being in general terms, the answer sufficiently supported the plea, and was good in point of form.

The bill of complaint stated that previous and up to 1837 the plaintiffs carried on business in co-partnership as merchants in London; that previous and up to the month of May, 1837, the defendants, Wilson and Co., also carried on business as merchants in co-partnership; that for some years previous to May, 1837, the plaintiffs and defendants had various pecuniary dealings and transactions, in the course of which a mutual account arose and subsisted between the two firms, and no settlement of accounts had ever been had between them; that in the month of June, 1837, Wilson and Co. suspended payment, at which time there was a considerable sum due to the plaintiffs from them, arising out of such transactions; that since then the firm of Wilson and Co. had paid the plaintiffs various sums on account of such debt, but that there still remained due to the plaintiffs a sum exceeding the amount sought to be recovered in the action hereafter mentioned. The bill then stated that the defendants pretended that they had a claim against the plaintiffs in respect of a bill of Exchange for 2,000l. reporting to have been drawn by Messrs Mackenzie and Brogden, of Mobile, in the United States, upon the plaintiffs, and accepted by them: but the plaintiffs charged that the bill of exchange had been drawn without the authority of them, the plaintiffs, and that they had refused to accept it; that it had subsequently been dishonoured, and that neither in law nor in fact had it been accepted by them. And the bill further suggested that the said bill of exchange was indorsed by Messrs. Mackenzie and Brogden to Wilson and Co. for some consideration, but that they refused to disclose and set forth what consideration was given. The bill then charged that in August 1838, Wilson and Co. commenced their action in the Superior Court of New York, in the United States of America, against the plaintiffs and Messrs. Mackenzie and Brogden upon the said bill of exchange for 2,000l. but they had lately discovered that Wilson and Co. had deposited the said bill with or made it over to the defendants, the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, as a security for some considerable sum of money due or claimed to be due to the bank from the said firm of Wilson and Co. and that the action is, in fact, the suit of and brought for the benefit of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England. That before the said bill of exchange was made over to or deposited with the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, the last named defendants had full notice of the several circumstances in the bill stated, and particularly of the right of the plaintiffs to set off in equity against the amount of the said bill of exchange if they be chargeable therewith, the amount due from the said firm of Wilson and Co. as aforesaid, and that such claim as the defendants the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, may have upon the said bill of exchange, is subject to the equity of the plaintiffs as against the firm of Wilson and Co., and if the plaintiffs were liable upon the said bill of exchange, they would be entitled to set-off in equity against the same the amount so due to plaintiffs from the defendants, Wilson and Co., which considerably exceeds the amount sought to be recovered from the plaintiffs. They further charged that Wilson and Co. ought to be restrained from proceeding at law upon the said bill, or in respect of any item of the accounts between that firm and the plaintiffs, and that the Governor and Company of the Bank of England ought, in like manner, to be restrained from proceeding in the names of the said defendants, Wilson and Co. The bill then prayed for an account of all the transactions between the plaintiffs and the defendants, Wilson and Co., and that the defendants, Wilson and Co. might be restrained from proceeding in the action upon the bill of exchange, and that the other defendants, the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, might also be restrained from proceeding in the names of the said defendants, Wilson and Co., in the action. To this bill the Governor and Company of the Bank of England put in a plea of purchase for valuable consideration, without notice, to all the relief asked by the bill, and to all the discovery sought by it, except so much as required these defendants to set forth "Whether, before the said bill of exchange was made over to or deposited with them, they had not full, and what, or some, and what notice of the several circumstances in the said bill of complaint stated; and whether or not, particularly of the right of the plaintiff to set-off in equity against the amount thereof, if they be chargeable therewith, the amount due from Messrs. Wilson and Co.; and whether such claim as the said defendants may have upon such bill of exchange is not subject to the equities of the plaintiffs as against the said defendants and Wilson and Co." and except as to the interrogatory relating to books, papers, &c. The defendants answered both these interrogatories by a denial, traversing the words of the interrogatories, and stating that "the said Messrs. Wilson and Co. did, on the 25th of April, 1837, indorse and deliver, make over to, and pledge and deposit with them the defendants the bill of exchange for 2,000l. by way of security (together with certain other securities) for 80,000l. which they then advanced upon the faith of such securities. That the said bill of exchange bore date March 6, 1837, payable 60 days after sight, which became due on the 17th June, and that there has ever since been a much larger sum than 2,000l. due to the said defendants upon such advances." The defendants then averred, that they "had not at or before the time when the said bill of exchange for 2,000l. was so indorsed and made over to, and pledged and deposited with them as aforesaid, or at or before the time when such advances as hereinbefore mentioned, or any of them, or any part thereof, were or was made to them by the said firm of Wilson and Co. any notice whatever that any debt was owing, or was claimed to be owing from the said firm of Wilson and Co. to the said plaintiffs, or that the said plaintiffs had, or claimed to have, any right to set off in equity against the amount of the same bill, if they were chargeable therewith the amount due, if any thing was then due from the said firm of Wilson and Co. to the plaintiffs, or that the said firm of Wilson and Co. did not in fact give a valuable consideration for the said bill of exchange, or that the plaintiffs had any other equities against the said firm of Wilson and Co. in respect thereof, and that they the said defendants are bonâ fide purchasers of the said bill of exchange for a good and valuable consideration, and without any notice of the said alleged right of set off, or any other the equities or equity claimed by the plaintiffs.

Jas. Parker and R. Palmer, in support of the plea, contended that the plaintiff could have no equity against a party who holds a bill of exchange for valuable consideration before it becomes due; and if any such equity did exist between the plaintiffs and Wilson and Co. there was a complete denial of any notice being had by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England. That the latter had become purchasers of the bill for valuable consideration in April 1837, which bearing date 6th March previous, and made payable sixty days after sight, did not become due until 17th June. The plaintiffs allege that the Bank of England were, in fact, the plaintiffs in the action upon the bill at New York, whilst their debtors, Wilson and Co., were nominally so; but that, supposing that to be true, the plaintiffs did not in their bill allege any claim of set-off against the Bank of England, and that the mere fact of the plaintiffs' debtors being trustees for their clients (the Bank of England) gave the plaintiff no equitable right against the latter, who, under the circumstances, had shewn a clear, legal, and equitable title.

Bethel and Heathfield, for the plaintiffs, argued, that it was one of the first principles of pleading that where a defendant pleads a purchase for valuable consideration, without notice, he must at any rate shew a legal title, and at the same time deny any matter which would tend to defeat it in a court of equity. That the proceedings in America were instituted in the names of Wilson and Co. the original payees of the bill, and that the Bank of England was in this suit assumed not to have the legal title. They were, therefore, not legal, but merely equitable owners of the bill of exchange, and their action can only be in respect of such rights as the payees had at the time when they commenced their action. That the statement in the plea was, that Wilson and Co. indorsed, delivered, made over to, pledged, and deposited with the Bank of England, the bill of exchange; but that the character of pledgee of a bill, who has only a right of lien upon it, is very different to an indorsee, who is the absolute owner of the bill; and that, therefore, the plea is of an equitable title only. That as to the purport of the bill, and the nature of the relief prayed, it is perfectly clear. The plaintiffs shew that for some time the firm of Wilson and Co. are parties between whom and the plaintiffs there is a long unsettled account, the bill in question forming one item in that account; that the Bank of England cannot claim any lien upon the bill before the account is taken, and it can then only claim such an equity as the payees may have after such account is actually taken, consequently, if it should appear, after the winding up of their accounts, that the bill has been satisfied, the plaintiffs, as acceptors, would have an equity against Wilson and Co. the indorsees, to have the bill through their means delivered up to them by the Bank. They submitted also, in the second place, that the plea was defective in point of form, that the charge contained in the bill was, "that before the said bill of exchange was made over to or deposited with the said Governor and Company of the Bank of England, the said last-named defendants had full notice of the several circumstances herein stated," which must be taken to mean all the allegations stated in the bill; that the plea was to all the discovery sought, "except so much as required the defendants, &c." (traversing the terms of the interrogatory to that charge); that the plea was a plea to the whole discovery, excepting the whole, for it went to the whole, excepting the particular charge which in itself was co-extensive with the bill, and that even this excepted part not covered by the plea was not sufficiently answered by the denial which accompanied the plea; the plea was consequently bad.

Parker, in reply, urged that his clients being purchasers for valuable consideration without notice, all that was necessary for them to except from the plea was so much of the allegations in the bill as would destroy the effect of the plea; that the charge of notice, which was all that was necessary to be excepted, had been fully denied.

The Vice-Chancellor.—I will not trouble you as to the substance of the plea, my doubt at first being only in reference to the form of it; as to the substance of the plea, my opinion fully coincides with your own. With regard to the form, I cannot help thinking that if the 16th Order of August 1841 had never come into operation, the answer not undertaking to meet all those parts of the bill not covered by the plea would have been insufficient. The allegation in the bill is, "that before the said bill of exchange was made over or deposited with the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, the said last-named defendants had full notice of the several circumstances herein stated, and particularly," &c. The interrogatory is founded upon that charge. Now, it is easy to conceive that before the issuing of the orders of Aug. 1841, when a defendant undertook to support his plea by answer, such answer must have fully met every part contained in the bill not covered by the plea, but then the 16th Order of August 1841 declares that a defendant shall not be bound to answer any statement or charge in the bill, unless specially and particularly interrogated thereto. So that, if he be specially interrogated thereto, and he does answer the interrogatory, his answer is sufficient; and it follows that where the interrogatory is general, as in the present instance, the answer, couched in the words of the interrogatory, is sufficient. With regard to the main facts of the case, they are simply these. In the month of April 1837, the defendants Wilson and Co. indorsed and made over to, pledged and deposited the bill of exchange and other securities with the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, by way of security to them for 8,000*l*. The bill thus became the absolute property of the Bank of England, subject to the following equities:—That if the said bill, and the other securities, should be proved to exceed the amount of the loan, the Bank of England might be forced to surrender the bill of exchange, and it would be equally bound to do so, provided the firm of Wilson and Co. had paid to the Bank sums of money equal to the amount borrowed. But, subject to this, the Bank of England had obtained, by the deposit, an absolute property in the bill of exchange against Wilson and Co. and against all other persons who had rendered themselves liable to them as indorsees of the same. Wilson and Co., it seems, stopped payment in the month of June 1837, and then it is stated in the bill, that a balance was due to the plaintiffs from that firm, in respect of certain other transactions, prior to the time when the bill of exchange was pledged to the Bank of England. But, be that as it may, my opinion is, that when the bill was delivered over to the Bank of England the Bank took it absolutely, without being affected by any other equity than that which existed between the Bank of England and Wilson and Co. in respect of their mutual private transactions.

The plea must be allowed, with leave to amend the bill.

ROLLS COURT.

Friday, Jan. 31.

Roschetti v. Power.

If defendants admit in their answer generally that a considerable, but not any specific sum of money, is in their possession, they will not, without more, be ordered to pay it into court; but if they move to extend the time for answering, after exceptions taken to their original answer and submitted to, such payment into court may be made the terms on which they will obtain that indulgence.

Turner (with him Rogers) moved on behalf of two of the defendants, to extend the time for answering. Their answer had been excepted to for insufficiency, and upon consideration of the case, they were advised to submit to those exceptions, and put in a fresh answer. The time was now near expiring, and they moved to have it extended.

Lowndes (with him Torriano), contrà.—The same course has been taken by these defendants as by the other defendant, Power, previously. The same exceptions have also been taken and allowed as in the other answer. Power's answer gave no information; neither did theirs. Applications were several times made to extend the time, and the answer was filed after the exceptions were taken and allowed to Power's answer, and yet the very same grounds of exception for insufficiency existed in theirs as did in his. They now seek for time, and if they get it, it must be on terms. There being a distinct acknowledgment by Power, though not by them, that a specific sum is in their possession, let them now bring the money into court before their motion is granted.

Turner, in reply.—It is useless to press for an answer till the accounts arrive from Gibraltar. [The Master of the Rolls.—Why not consent to pay the money into court? The only difficulty I have is, that the exact sum is not stated before me as being in their possession.] Lowndes.—The precise sum is mentioned in their affidavits.

The Master of the Rolls.—If there is an affidavit that there is a precise sum standing in their names, I will refuse this motion; if there is no affidavit, I will give the time required. I can make the payment into court the terms on which to grant this motion, though I could not order it on the former occasion when moved for, as a precise sum was not admitted in the answer. If, Mr. Turner, you pay in today the sum so admitted in the affidavit, you shall have your order; if not, I shall dismiss your motion, with costs. You are both wrong.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Saturday, Jan. 25.

Whitmarsh v. Robertson.

Appointment—Married woman—Assignment of life interest.

Where a settlement of a woman's interest was made upon her marriage upon trust for herself for life, and after her death for her children by the marriage, equally, with a power for the trustees with her consent to advance the children to the extent of one-half of their presumptive shares, and she married a second time, and she and her second husband for valuable consideration assigned her life interest, it was held that this power of advancement might still be exercised with her consent in favour of the children.

In 1820, on the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Finlayson, a sum of 1,757*l*. stock, the property of the wife, was assigned to trustees upon trusts for the separate use of the wife during the joint lives of the husband and wife, and after the death of either, for the survivor for life, and after the death of the survivor, for the children equally, the shares to vest in the sons on their attaining twenty-one, and in the daughters on their attaining twenty-one or marrying. Power was by the settlement given to the trustees at any time or times after the decease of the survivor of the husband and wife, or in the lifetime of the husband and wife, or the survivor of them, with their, his, or her consent in writing, to raise any part or parts (not exceeding one moiety) of the expectant portions of the children, notwithstanding the same should not have become vested or payable, and apply the same for the preferment or advancement of such children. There were seven children of the marriage. In January, 1837, the husband died, and in the same year the widow married William Milebam; but no settlement was executed upon the second marriage. By indenture dated the 4th of April, 1837, William Milebam and his wife, for valuable consideration, assigned the life interest of Mrs. Milcham in the fund to the plaintiff, and notice of the assignment was given to the trustees. Upon this assignment disputes had arisen, and the points which were discussed are reported in 4 Bea. 26, and 1 Y. & C. C. C. 715. The assignment was established, but the decree was stated to be made without prejudice to any question as to the power of advancement before mentioned. A deed having been afterwards executed by Mrs. Mileham to enable the trustees to raise 480*l*. to advance four of her children, this petition was presented, praying that the trustees might be empowered to raise that sum.

Shapter and Hanson, for the petition, cited Stiffe v. Everitt (1 Myl. & Cr. 37); Thompson v. Butler (Moore 592); Ray v. Pung (5 B. & Ald.); Doe v. Jones (10 B. & Cr.); Tunstall v. Trappes (3 Sim.); Skeales v. Shearley (10 Sim. 153; 3 M. & Cr. 112); Daniel v. Upley (W. Jones, 137); Noel v. Henley (M'Cl. & Yo.); Burnett v. Mann (1 Ves. 156); 1 Sugden on Powers, 184 et seq.; Hornsby v. Lee (2 Mad. 16); Purdew v. Jackson (1 Russ. 1); Honner v. Morton (3 Russ. 65); and Elwin v. Williams (12 Law Journal, 440).

Russell and Stinton, for the plaintiff, opposed the petition citing Badham v. Mee (7 Bing.) and other cases.

The Vice-Chancellor (without hearing a reply).—I understand that in this case there was no instrument of assignment by Mrs. Mileham, between the marriage settlement on her first marriage, and her second marriage; and, as under her first marriage settlement she would not take this property for her separate use after her first husband's death, when she married a second time, her interest became liable to all the incidents to which a woman's property, not being separate estate, is liable in the hands of her husband. The interest in the present case being derived under a particular instrument, became liable to all the incidents to which the property may be considered liable under that instrument. What would have been the effect if Mrs. Milcham, when a widow, had sold or incumbered her life interest, I give no opinion or intimation of opinion. In point of fact, the sale was made by her second husband and by herself, so far as she could, after her marriage. The first question is, whether, if a sale had not been made, and the second husband claimed, she could execute this power without, or against the consent of her second husband. I think she could; and that, immediately after her second marriage, she was at full liberty to exercise this power, and that the trustees were authorized to act upon such exercise without and against the consent of the husband. The second question is, whether the assignment of the husband makes any difference? I think not; and that a purchaser from him can stand in no better position than he did. The next question is, whether her concurrence was of any avail? Generally speaking, a married woman can execute no deed. A power may be given to her, and in the exercise of the power she is enabled to act under the power, but not to act not conformably with the power. This sale to Whitmarsh was not under any power, or in conformity with her marriage settlement; and it was, therefore, a mere nullity. I am of opinion that her consent is not effectual, and it is as if she had never married, and no sale had ever taken place. As matters stand, however, it is difficult to give effect to this opinion. The suit is by the purchaser of the life interest, but it is not in his option whether the suit shall be confined to the life interest. The decree, however, is not exhausted; for by the decree of the 5th July, 1842, it is ordered, that the hearing of this cause, in all other respects than those disposed of, shall stand over, with liberty to the parties to apply as they may be advised. Therefore, let the cause be set down to be further heard, and with the consent of the trustees and the children, for the purpose of administering this trust generally. It is the duty of the Court, upon a consent of Mrs. Mileham being produced, to give effect to that consent. This, however, cannot be done till the number of the children be ascertained. With this expression of my opinion, let this petition stand over to a day to be named, and let the cause be further heard at the same time; and let an affidavit of the number of the children be then produced.

Common Law Courts.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

Saturday, Feb. 8.

Holloway v. Turner and Rope.

In this case the plaintiff had recovered a verdict for 96*l*. in an action against the defendants for having entered his premises, and removed his furniture for sale to an auction-room. The pretence and colour for the seizure of the plaintiff's goods were a judgment entered up under a warrant of attorney, which, at the instance of the plaintiff, and for the purpose of preventing the sale, was set aside. At the conclusion of the trial leave was given to the defendant to move that the damages should be reduced by 26*l*. the sum at which the jury had estimated the reasonable costs of setting aside the warrant of attorney. (a)

Jervis, having obtained a rule accordingly, cause was now shewn against it by

Lush.—After the statement of the general damage, the declaration sets out special damages, enumerating as one cause thereof, the cost and charges "in and about preventing the sale of, and in and about setting aside the judgment, &c." [Lord Denman, C. J.—Can you make out those costs to be consequences of the trespass?] So long as the judgment stood,

(a) A question was raised at the trial whether the expenses of the plaintiff's attorney in going to Chelmsford to consult a gentleman then there attending the assizes, could properly be charged, and Lord Denman, C. J. ruled that they were properly charged.

the trespasses were justified, and the sheriff would have been justified in selling. (Sandbach v. Thomas, 1 St. 316.)

Jervis, Q. C. contrà.—That case is not in point. The plaintiff should have got his costs of setting aside the judgment from the judge who set it aside. The practice is for the judge to give the costs of setting aside the judgment, imposing the terms that an action shall not be brought. The judge has an entire discretion in the manner. This is a case of personal trespass, which was not the case in Sandbach v. Thomas.

By the COURT.—We have no doubt about this case. These costs are not consequences of the trespass, for which the plaintiff brought his action; and he, if entitled to them, should have got them from the proper authority.

Rule absolute for reducing the damages by 26l. No costs of this rule on either side.

BAYNTUN v. SEALE and COXE.

Trespass for breaking and entering the dwelling-house of the plaintiff, and taking his goods.

Plea—Justifying under a sheriff's warrant to Seale for executing a writ of fi. fa.

Replication—Admitting the writ and the delivery of the warrant to Seale, and putting in issue the residue.

At the trial, the plaintiff began, and called a person named Kelsey, who proved that he had entered under the authority of Coxe, who was a follower of Seale; that he did not know where Seale was at the time, neither had he seen him that morning. Mr. Roberts, the plaintiff's solicitor, was then called, and he said that when, on the day after the trespass, he pointed out to Coxe the irregularity of the proceeding to execute the writ when Seale was not present, Coxe replied, that Seale had been in the neighbourhood.

Lord DENMAN, C. J. left it to the jury to say whether there was evidence to shew that Seale had been at the time of the entering sufficiently near to be in fact authorizing the proceeding; for if he had been, that was sufficient.

The jury found for the plaintiff.

Afterwards, a rule nisi for a new trial was obtained, on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence; against which cause was now shewn by Channell, Serjt.

H. Wilde, contrà.

Authorities cited: Black v. Archer (Cowp. 265); Fentum's case (Lofft, 524); A. v. Whalley (7 C. & P. 245); R. v. Patience (7 C. & P. 775).

By the COURT.—The case is peculiar. The plaintiff need not have called Mr. Roberts, for Kelsey proved his case; but he did call Mr. Roberts, and though, if that gentleman had been called on the other side, the matter of his testimony would have been inadmissible, yet against the plaintiff it was admissible. Then there was some evidence in support of the justification, which is sufficient.

Rule discharged.

Thursday, Feb 13.

Re CARUS WILSON.

Return to the writ of habeas corpus.

The Solicitor-General presented the body of Mr. Carus Wilson in obedience to the writ of habeas corpus. The return was then read.

Roebuck, Q. C. then stated to the Court that Mr. Kelly and Mr. Peacock having been unable to hold their briefs, he and Mr. Pearson had been instructed for Mr. Wilson on the preceding evening, and being wholly unprepared to argue on so short a notice, prayed for a postponement of the hearing.

An arrangement was then suggested for a postponement until next Term, Mr. Wilson being released on certain conditions, and on bail.

Roebuck, Q. C.—Mr. Wilson will enter into no compromise, and requires to be sent to the Queen's Prison

The Solicitor-General.—Yes, he knows he can there live at the expense of the country.

Roebuck, Q. C.—Mr. Wilson denies that he has ever done, or intends to do so.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—We should be perfectly justified in remanding this person back to the gaol he has left. Both my learned brothers and myself are here at great sacrifice of time, which I by no means know that we are justified in having thus bestowed. This conduct is an abuse of the anxiety, and trouble, and time which the Court has bestowed in doing justice in this case. There has been ample time to instruct counsel properly, and the counsel who have already appeared for him having done every thing that could be done in his behalf, it is alone the question of injustice being done to any individual which renders us cautious of doing what may prevent this matter from being brought to a proper termination. That termination must, however, be promptly arrived at, and we suggest to-morrow we may be disposed once more so to arrange as to hear this case.

The Solicitor-General.—It is utterly impossible for me to attend here to-morrow, my lords.

Roebuck, Q. C.—Mr. Wilson is willing to postpone the case until next Term, if he is at large on his sole recognizance till then.

The Solicitor-General assented.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—If the Solicitor-General assents, we have no objection.

Roebuck, Q. C.—My lord, I trust that I am exonerated from blame in this matter.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—Not a shadow of imputation rests upon you, Mr. Roebuck.

The hearing of the case was then postponed until Tuesday, April 22.

Tuesday, Jan. 21.

VAN SANDAU v. TURNER.

(Argued in Michaelmas Term.)

A judge of the Court of Review has not power as a single judge to commit for contempt of Court in the publication of a libel. An averment that every thing was done according "to the practice of the Court" is insufficient. The Superior Courts not will take judicial notice of the practice of a Court recently established, like the Court of Review.

In this case, the declaration was for an assault and false imprisonment of the plaintiff.

Pleas—1st, Not guilty; 2nd, A justification, under a certain warrant, to imprison the defendant, issued by Sir George Rose, one of the judges of the Court of Review, for a contempt of that Court, in publishing a certain alleged libel in a handbill.

Demurrer to second plea, assigning various causes of demurrer, only two of which were relied on in argument; one of which was, that the plea was bad, as not shewing that Sir George Rose was a judge of the Court of Review at the time he made the order on which his warrant issued; the statement on the plea being—" Sir George Rose, one of the judges of the Court of Review," without going on to allege that he was a judge of the Court of Review at the time he issued the warrant. The other point relied on was, that Sir George Rose had no power to adjudge a party guilty of a contempt, or to issue his warrant for a contempt, but that it must be the act of the Court, and not of a single judge.

Kelly, Q.C. (Creasby with him), in support of the demurrer.—First, the plea is clearly bad, in not shewing any jurisdiction in Sir George Rose to issue his warrant. The statement in the plea—" Sir George Rose, one of the judges of the Court" of Review, may be only his present addition, but does not at all shew that he was a judge at the time he made the order. But even if this be held a sufficient allegation, still he has no power, as a single judge, to commit for a contempt, but only as the Court. [COLERIDGE, J.—But, Mr. Kelly, the plea says, " made and issued out of the court, according to the practice of the Court;" must we not take judicial notice of the practice of the Court?] True, my lord; but it is not so in the warrant, and it is on that they act. A single judge has only power to act as the Court. 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 29, s. 5, and 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 61, are the Acts of Parliament which give him the power to act and constitute the Court; there is no immemorial custom in the court that this Court can take cognizance of; it is so recently constituted, that we must look to the Acts themselves. Now these Acts only give power to a single judge of the Court of Review to act as the Court. Then there is no distinct adjudication.

Stopped by the Court.

Lord DENMAN, C. J.—These are quite distinct matters. We should like to hear the other side on these two points first.

The Solicitor-General in support of the plea.—The warrant is alleged to be issued according to the practice of the Court, and this Court will not inquire as to that practice. Then, as to the power to commit for a contempt, I apprehend that every Court of Record has a power incidental to it to commit. [PATTESON, J.—Is it not consistent with every thing stated in the plea, that Sir George Rose was appointed after the order was made?] Certainly to a common intent is all which is sufficient (Com. Dig. Pleader, f. 17); and it is sufficiently implied here that he was a judge of the court at the time he made the order.

Cur. adv. vult.

Tuesday, Feb. 3.

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN, C.J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—To a declaration in trespass for an assault and false imprisonment, the defendant pleaded a justification under a warrant of Sir Geo. Rose, one of the judges of the Court of Review, founded on an order of the same Court, that the plaintiff should stand committed for a contempt of that Court, charged upon him in a petition presented to that Court, and that a warrant should thereupon issue for his arrest. The contempt alleged was the publication, in the face of the Court, and elsewhere, of a scandalous hand-bill, or circular; to which plea a special demurrer was taken of enormous magnitude, with no other statement of the points intended to be raised, than that which appeared in the grounds of demurrer. We have heard the case argued upon two of these points which we selected; we hold both of these objections good. Supposing a judge of the Court of Review to possess the power of committing for the offence charged, it ought to appear he was such a judge at the time he issued such warrant. As a general proposition, this is too clear to require any proof; but we are also of opinion, a single judge, on his individual responsibility, has no power to cause any one to be arrested for the offence here stated. Such contempts are to be punished by the Court itself; the sentence to proceed from a sense of the necessity of inflicting it at the time of its infliction; and, therefore, it can be delegated to no other hand. For curing both these defects, the same allegation in the plea is relied upon. The learned judge on whose warrant the defendant acted, is said to have proceeded according to the practice of the court; and it is said this would not be true unless the practice were for one judge of the Court of Review to issue his warrant for the apprehension of one against whom the Court has made an order that he be arrested for a contempt; and, further, that the said averment cannot be true unless Sir Geo. Rose was a judge of that court. We are by no means sure these words can be so applied. Their meaning would be fully satisfied by confining them to the mode of issuing the warrant, which may then take place according to the practice of the court, although all the circumstances attending it were inconsistent with that practice. But supposing the fair meaning of the plea to be that the execution of Sir Geo. Rose's warrant was conformable to the practice of the court, we must next inquire whether this is a good justification in point of law. The statute which creates the Court of Review confers upon it all the powers and privileges of the courts at Westminster. Supposing it to be well established that we are bound to take notice of the practice of all the courts which have existed for centuries, can it follow we are bound to know all the rules and regulations of a new tribunal, created for purposes entirely different from our own? The constituent Act of Parliament has conferred no special power in a case of contempt, and if that Court has laid down any rule for its own guidance, this is a matter of fact which we have no means of knowing without its being communicated to us. Such communication has never been made, and if it had been we should still have to consider whether the course of procedure so described in the plea is legal. If, on the other hand, the justification is rested, in this respect, on the Act of Parliament, as conferring the power of the superior courts on the Court of Review, and so, impliedly, the same power of committing for contempt as that which this Court exercises, then, far from deducing the right to do what has been done for that power which has been pleaded as a justification of this arrest, we must take judicial notice that this was not in conformity with any power practised or claimed by the superior courts. The demurrer is said to admit that the warrant was issued in all respects conformably to the practice of the Court of Review. The demurrer to the plea admits no more than what is well pleaded, and the defence now set up did not appear to be good or to be well pleaded. The defendant's allegation should have been distinct as to the practice by which he sought to justify the arrest of the plaintiff. Such an allegation distinctly made might have been traversed, as the present argument supposes, or it might have been demurred to, and then the fact of its existence would have been admitted. We do not accede to the proposition that we are bound to take notice of the fact that Sir George Rose was a judge of the Court of Review, but if we did, our judgment must be distinctly for the plaintiff, inasmuch as we are of opinion an individual member of that Court is not at liberty to issue his warrant in that manner.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Thursday, Jan. 30.

MUMMERY v. PAUL.

In an action on the case for a deceitful representation on the sale of the goodwill of a trade, lease, and fixtures, the plea of not guilty puts in issue the sale as well as the deceitful representation.

Where, at the trial, leave is reserved to the defendant to move to enter a nonsuit, he is at liberty to avail himself thereof after a verdict has been found for him, and, in answer to an application by the plaintiff for a new trial, on the ground of the verdict being against evidence.

Case.—The declaration alleged that before and at the time of committing the grievances thereinafter mentioned, the defendant carried on the trade and business of a potato-salesman at a messuage and premises situate and being No. 31, James-street, Covent-garden, in the county of Middlesex, and was possessed of a lease of the said messuage and premises for a certain term of years, to wit, twenty-one years, from the 25th day of March, A.D. 1827, and was also possessed of certain fixtures then fixed and being in and upon the said messuage and premises, and of a horse, cart, van, utensils in trade, goods, and chattels; and thereupon heretofore, to wit, on the 27th day of May, A.D. 1842, the plaintiff, at the request of the defendant, bargained with the defendant to buy of him his interest in the said lease, and the said fixtures, horse, cart, van, utensils in trade, goods, and chattels, as also the goodwill of the said trade and business, at and for a certain price and sum of money, to wit, 700*l.*; and the defendant, by then falsely, fraudulently, and deceitfully pretending and representing to the plaintiff that the amounts received for commission in the course of the said business had been and were at the rate of 900*l.* a year, and that the net profits of the said business had been and were at the rate of 500*l.* a year, then bargained for and sold to the plaintiff the said lease, fixtures, horse, cart, van, utensils in trade, goods, and chattels, and the said goodwill, at and for the said sum of 700*l.* The declaration then averred payment to the defendant of the said sum of 700*l.* and then alleged that whereas, in truth and in fact, the amounts received for commission in the course of the said business had not been, nor were, at the rate of 900*l.* a year, but had been, and were, much less, to wit, 400*l.* a year; and whereas, in truth and in fact, the net profits of the said business had not been, nor were, at the rate of 500*l.* a year, but had been, and were, much less, to wit, 50*l.* a year, as the defendant at the time of the making the said false and deceitful representations well knew; and the defendant by means of the premises, on the day and year aforesaid, falsely and fraudulently deceived the plaintiff on the said sale, and thereby the said lease, fixtures, horse, van, cart, utensils in trade, goods and chattels, trade and business, have become and are of no use or value to the plaintiff. To the plaintiff's damage, &c.

Plea—Not guilty; whereupon issue was joined.

The cause came on for trial before Tindal, C. J. at the sittings after Trinity Term last, when it appeared from the evidence that there had been a written agreement between the parties for the sale of the lease, goodwill, fixtures, and utensils for 700*l.* and that a deed of assignment of the lease and goodwill for 500*l.* (part of the purchase-money of 700*l.*) had been executed. This deed was produced, but not the agreement, and it was therefore objected, on the part of the defendant, that there was no evidence of the sale of the fixtures and utensils, the agreement being in writing, and not produced. The learned judge, however, allowed the cause to go to the jury, leave being reserved to the defendant to move to enter a nonsuit, if it should be held necessary that the agreement should have been produced. The jury having returned a verdict for the defendant, Shee, Serjt. afterwards obtained a rule to shew cause why there should not be a new trial, on the ground of the verdict being against evidence.

Talfourd, Serjt. in now shewing cause, relied on the ground of nonsuit for which leave to move had been reserved at the trial, and submitted that it was not enough to prove a representation, and that it was false, but that it was also requisite to prove a sale as alleged in the declaration. The wrongful act was the selling, and therefore the sale was put in issue by the plea of not guilty, and it appearing that there was an agreement in writing, which was not produced, the plaintiff had failed in establishing such a sale as alleged, and ought to have been nonsuited. Cotton v. Browne (3 A. & E. 312) was referred to.

Shee and Dowling, Serjts. contrà, contended that the defendant's counsel was not entitled to insist now on the plaintiff being nonsuited; that when consent was given to reserve leave to the defendant to move for a nonsuit, the understanding always was, that it was to be conditional on the verdict being found for the plaintiff, and that as the verdict here was for the defendant, the defendant was not in a situation to avail himself of the leave to move. [Cresswell, J.—I think the understanding always is, that the party is to have the leave of moving, whenever the necessity for so doing shall arise. Tindal, C. J.—If the objection which was taken at the trial by the defendant's counsel was a valid one, then I ought to have directed the jury to have found a verdict for the defendant.] It was then urged that it was not necessary to have proved a sale of the fixtures, the action being for deceit, and not on contract. [Cresswell, J.—It is deceit on a sale.] The sale is admitted on the pleadings (Dobell v. Stevens, 3 B. & C. 62*); but assuming a sale must be proved, it was sufficient to prove a sale of the business, as the representation was only as to that, and no fraud was charged in the declaration except in respect of the representation as to such business.

Tindal, C. J.—The first question is, whether the defendant is now in a situation to take advantage of the leave that was given at the trial to move for a nonsuit; and I think he may. When the objection was taken at the trial, if the plaintiff's counsel had not consented to leave being reserved, I ought to have directed the jury to have found for the defendant. No doubt, on my direction, the plaintiff might, if he had thought proper, have tendered a bill of exceptions; he, however, in the present case accepted the offer, but it would be singular if the defendant should be in a worse situation because the offer was so accepted. Now, the next question is, whether the objection which was taken by the defendant was a proper one. I think it was; the declaration states that the plaintiff bargained with the defendant to buy of him his interest in the lease, and the fixtures, goods, and chattels, as also the goodwill of the trade, and then distinctly states that the defendant, by then falsely representing to the plaintiff that the amounts received for commission and the net profits of the business were so much, then bargained for and sold to the plaintiff the said lease, fixtures, and utensils. The only evidence at the trial on this was a deed of assignment, but that deed did not comprehend the fixtures; it was not such an agreement as is alleged in the declaration. It was clearly proved that such an agreement was existing in writing, but the same was not produced. It is now said that under the form of these pleadings it was not necessary that this agreement should be proved, inasmuch as the plea of not guilty does not put the same in issue. But this is a sale by a false representation, and it is as necessary that the sale should be proved, as under the old form of action of deceit for a warranty on a sale; where it would have been a singular thing if the plaintiff might have proved a warranty and not a sale. The case of Cotton v. Brown does not appear to me to be distinguishable from this in principle.

Maule, J.—I am of the same opinion. [His lordship having read the pleadings said:] The plea of not guilty denies every thing which the defendant is here alleged to have done, that is to say, that he sold fraudulently the goodwill, fixtures, and utensils. The plea of not guilty puts here in issue the fact of the subject of the sale; the plaintiff must, therefore, prove that the particular matter alleged in the declaration to have been sold was so sold. Now here the evidence was for the sale of a lease and goodwill for 500*l.*, and there also appeared to have been an agreement for the sale of certain fixtures, but the witness as to this said that the agreement was in writing. It is clear that where there is a sale to be proved by an agreement, which is in writing, that writing must be produced. It is said that it was here unnecessary to prove it, and my brother Dowling urges that inasmuch as the representation was made in respect of different portions of the subject of the sale, it was sufficient to prove so much of the agreement as applied to any such portion. I do not think so. The defendant by his false representation induced the plaintiff to buy the whole subject-matter of the sale; the whole of the sale, therefore, is material, and ought to be proved. As to the question of nonsuit, what we have now to do is to dispose of this rule. It appears that at the trial there was a failure of proof of a material allegation, and that unless the plaintiff had consented to being nonsuited, and the rigorous course had been pursued, the judge must have directed the verdict to have been found for the defendant. There has been here a verdict for the defendant, which, as the evidence now stands, was right, and the present rule must therefore be discharged.

HUNTER v. HUNT.

A lessee underleases different portions of the demised premises to two tenants at separate and apportioned rents, one of the tenants is compelled under threat of distress to pay the superior landlord the rent of the entire premises. Held, that such tenant cannot, in an action for money paid, recover from the other tenant contribution.

Manning, Serjt. (Corrie with him) shewed cause against a rule obtained by the defendant for setting aside the verdict which had been found for the plaintiff, and entering a nonsuit.

The action, which was for money paid for the use of the defendant, was tried before the under-sheriff for Middlesex, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff for 14*l.* 10s. It appeared that one Jefferys demised certain lands to a person of the name of Short at an entire rent of 20*l.* 10s. Short afterwards underlet a portion to the plaintiff at a rent of 4*l.* 17s. 6d. and another portion to the defendant at a rent of 8*l.* 15s. 6d. and the remaining portion was unoccupied. Short having suffered the rent reserved by his lease to be in arrear, the assignee of Jefferys's reversion compelled the plaintiff under a threat of distress to pay it.

The plaintiff now sought by this action a contribution from the defendant for having relieved his land from a distress, and the question was, whether he could do so at law, without resorting to a court of equity.

In behalf of the plaintiff, the following authorities were cited:—Fitz. N. B. 162, Contributione Faciendâ; Viner's Abr. 561, title Contribution; Cowell v. Edwards (2 Bos. & P. 268); Bac. Abr. title Obligation, D. 5; Schlencker v. Moxsy (3 B. & C. 789); Spencer v. Parry (3 A. & E. 331).

Channell, Serjt. in support of the rule, was not called on.

The Court said the action was a novel one, and not maintainable, there being no privity or community of interest between the parties; that it did not appear what benefit the defendant had derived from the payment, as non constat but that there was nothing on his portion of the land to be distrained. Supposing there was some property there not belonging to the defendant, but to some other person, could it be said that, because such property had been saved from a distress by this payment by the plaintiff, an action would lie against such person for money paid to his use? Neither here could the Court see how this was money paid to the defendant's use.

BENAZECH v. BESSETT.

A party who has been made defendant by an order under the Interpleader Act, is entitled, like any other defendant, to security for costs from a plaintiff who is resident abroad.

Channell, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Byles, Serjt. for staying proceedings in this action until security for costs should be given by the plaintiff to the satisfaction of the Master. The plaintiff was a foreigner resident at Baden, and the action had been originally brought against the London Dock Company for the recovery of a quantity of wines in their possession, which had been shipped by the plaintiff to this country. The defendant Bessett having also claimed the wines of the Dock Company, an order was made by a judge at chambers, under the Interpleader Act, by which Bessett was substituted defendant for the London Dock Company. It was now contended, in opposition to the rule, that as the defendant had been made defendant by an order of the judge, and not by the will of the plaintiff, it was not such an action against a party, in which a plaintiff resident abroad could be compelled to give security for costs. The action brought by the plaintiff was against the London Dock Company, and they had made no application for such security.

Byles, Serjt. in support of the rule, submitted that there was nothing to take this out of the ordinary rule by which a defendant was entitled to have security. The effect of the order was to place the defendant in the same situation he would have been in if the action had been originally brought against him. Edinburgh and Leith Railway Company v. Dawson (7 Dowl. 573) was cited.

The Court said that they thought the defendant stood in the same position as any other defendant, and was, therefore, entitled to relief. Rule absolute.

WALTON v. CHANDLER.

The attesting witness to a warrant of attorney was the brother of the plaintiff's attorney, who had requested him to attend, in order that the defendant might, if he thought proper, name him as his attorney to witness the execution. The defendant was informed of this, and did name him as such attorney, by repeating after the plaintiff's attorney words to that effect, taken from the body of the warrant, in which they had been previously inserted, but the defendant did not otherwise adopt him as his attorney:—Held, in the absence of fraud, to be a sufficient express naming of an attorney to make a good attesting witness under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 9.

Talfourd, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Channell, Serjt. calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the warrant of attorney given by the defendant, and the judgment and execution thereon, should not be set aside, on the ground that the warrant of attorney had not been properly attested within the meaning of the statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 9. It appeared from the affidavits that the warrant of attorney was prepared by Mr. Edward Meymott, who was the attorney for the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff and defendant went together in company to Mr. Meymott's office, for the purpose of executing the same. Mr. Edward Meymott, knowing the defendant had not any attorney of his own, got his brother, Mr. William Joseph Meymott, who was also an attorney, but not connected with him in business, to be present; and when the plaintiff and defendant called at the office, Mr. Edward Meymott explained to the defendant the necessity there was for an attorney to be present, on his part, to witness the signing, and informed him that he had therefore requested his brother, Mr. William Joseph Meymott, to be present, in order that the defendant might, if he thought proper, appoint him his attorney for that purpose. The defendant did not object nor assent to this, except by executing the warrant of attorney in the manner hereinafter mentioned. In the body of the warrant, as prepared before the meeting, there was the following:—"And I, the said Thomas Chandler, have expressly named William Joseph Meymott, of 86, Blackfriars-road, in the county of Surrey, gentleman, an attorney of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, and requested him to attend on my behalf, to inform me of the nature and effect hereof before the same is executed, and to witness the due execution hereof by me; and do acknowledge that the said Wm. Joseph Meymott has accordingly informed me of the nature and effect hereof before such execution." At the time of the execution of the warrant, the defendant repeated after Mr. Edward Meymott, the plaintiff's attorney, the following words, taken from the above-mentioned part of the warrant:—"I name William Joseph Meymott, an attorney of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, and request him to attend on my behalf, to inform me of the nature and effect hereof before I execute the same, and to witness my execution hereof." The warrant was then executed and attested, the attestation clause being in the proper form. It appeared also, that the defendant was about to pay Mr. Wm. Meymott's charges for attesting the warrant; but, holding some silver in his hand, he said that he had not enough for that purpose, and requested, therefore, Mr. Edward Meymott to pay his brother, and that he would repay him, which was accordingly agreed to. On the 26th November last, judgment was signed on the warrant of attorney, and execution was issued thereon. On the 19th December last, a fiat in bankruptcy was sued out against the defendant; and the present rule was obtained on the 18th January, on behalf of the assignees under the bankruptcy. The cases of Taylor v. Nicholls (6 M. & W. 91, and 8 Dowl. 242) and Hale v. Dale (8 Dowl. 599) were referred to; and it was submitted, that although an implied naming of an attorney might not do, yet that here there had been such an express naming as was sufficient in the absence of fraud.

Channell, Serjt. in support of the rule, contended that, admitting there was no fraud, the repeating the words after the plaintiff's attorney was not a naming within the meaning of the Act; and that where there had not been a naming of the attorney originating from the party himself, the adoption should be made out otherwise than had been done here, which was at the instance of the plaintiff's attorney. (Barnes v. Pendrey, 7 Dowl. 747; Gripper v. Bristow, 8 Dowl. 797.)

TINDAL, C. J.—It appears to me that there has been an execution of the warrant of attorney in conformity with the directions of the Act. In the more early cases it was held that the warrant was not properly executed after the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, unless there had been an express nomination of an attorney to witness by the party executing the instrument; but the later cases have altered this, and have established that though the witness be not originally named by the party, yet if the latter freely adopts him as his attorney, it is sufficient. Now, that is what appears to have been done in the present case. On the part of the defendant, it is said that as the words naming the attorney were previously inserted in the body of the warrant, and afterwards read over to him, there has not therefore been a free adoption of the witness. It is quite clear why these words were introduced in the warrant; in consequence of the objections which have been frequently taken to the execution of these instruments, the creditor, in order to make himself more safe, has had put in the body of the warrant an express nomination, and I cannot but think that when it is read over to the party executing, it is sufficient in the absence of fraud, and that the circumstance of its being found in the document itself ought not to make any difference. There has been here, I think, a strict compliance with the words of the Act, and the present rule must therefore be discharged.

MAULE, J.—I am of the same opinion. The statute requires that there should be some attorney on behalf of the person executing, expressly named by him and attending at his request. It is contended, on the part of the defendant, that Mr. William Meymott was not expressly named by the defendant. Now, I think that the saying, "I name William Joseph Meymott, an attorney, &c. is an express naming of William Joseph Meymott. The Courts have required such extreme nicety as to the execution of warrants of attorney, that nobody can be safe unless there has been a literal compliance with the terms of the Act. This accounts for a formal proceeding like the present being gone through in a case which is bonâ fide. I do not see any objection to a person naming by repeating the words which were read to him; such person may quite as well understand what he utters after it is read to him as he can the oaths of supremacy which are taken in this court. Some proof of fraud is required to shew that what was a literal was not a substantial compliance with the Act; but where, as here, there is no fraud, it is very material that the warrant of attorney should be sustained.

CRESSWELL, J. and ERLE, J. concurred.

Rule discharged with costs.

HART v. TOMLIN.

Practice—Affidavit in support of rule wrongly entitled.

Channell, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule calling on the assignees of the defendant to shew cause why they should not pay to the plaintiff or his attorney his costs, incident to certain goods which had been the subject of proceedings under the Interpleader Act. A preliminary objection was taken, that though the rule was entitled in a cause of "Hart v. Tomlin," the affidavit on which it had been obtained was in a cause of "Hart v. John Tomlin," whereas the defendant's Christian name was James, as appeared by his own affidavit, by which it also appeared judgment had been signed against him in the name of James. The effect of the objection therefore was, that the rule was unsupported by affidavit.

Byles, Serjt. contrà, said he thought he could do without his affidavit, by using the affidavit of the defendant, together with the order of Mr. Justice Maule, on reading which the rule had been drawn up. [CRESSWELL, J.—Where is the order? MAULE, J.—The order is not with the Court; it is supposed to have been handed up to the Court, on granting the rule, and then to have been returned. The defendant has a right to say that that which was handed up was not the order.] It was attempted to read the copy order annexed to the affidavit, but as it could not appear to be a copy without reference to the affidavit, which, as already said, was entitled in a different cause to that in which the rule had been served, the attempt was unsuccessful.

Rule discharged without costs.

WEST v. COOK.

Before issue joined, the defendant is not bound to apply for security for costs as soon as he discovers the plaintiff is resident abroad.

Talfourd, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule obtained for compelling the plaintiff to give security for costs. The declaration was delivered on the 15th Jan. last, and an order had been made for time to plead, but without prejudice to the present application for security for costs. The demand for the security was made on the 21st January, but the defendant knew that the plaintiff was residing at Dublin before the action was brought. It was submitted that the defendant was not now in a situation to ask for such security.

Cases cited: Montellano v. Garcias (1 Bing. 67), and Muller v. Gernon (3 Taunt. 272).

Channell, Serjt. contrà.—No issue has been joined in this action, and there is a difference where the application is made before and after issue has been joined; in the latter case the application must be made immediately on discovery of the plaintiff being resident abroad.

TINDAL, C. J.—There does seem to be that distinction between applying before and after issue joined. Rule absolute.

Re BANKS.

Semble, this Court has jurisdiction to commit for contempt a person, though not a party to any cause, who serves another with a fictitious writ of summons purporting to issue from this court.

Byles, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule calling on a person of the name of Robert Lucas to shew cause why an attachment should not issue against him for causing Mr. Banks to be served with a paper purporting to be a copy of a writ of summons sued out in this court, whereas, in fact, no such writ had ever been issued. It appeared from the affidavit of Lucas, that the paper had been served on Banks by way of a joke; but it was said that it was done without any intention of committing a contempt of this court. It was now prayed that the Court would not, under the circumstances, make absolute the rule, if it had the jurisdiction to do so, but this it was submitted it had not, the person offending not being a party to any cause before the Court.

Channell, Serjt. in support of the rule, stated that the joke had been carried too far to be allowed to pass without notice, as Mr. Banks had been put to the expense of consulting an attorney, and had been kept in ignorance of the truth for a considerable length of time. Reference was made in the course of the argument to Chitty's Archb. 1266, 7th ed.; 2 Hawk. c. 22, s. 43; Finnerty v Smith (1 Bing. N. C. 649), and Re Elsam (3 B. & C. 597).

In consequence of a strong recommendation from the Court, Byles, Serjt. ultimately consented to the rule being discharged on payment of costs.

Rule discharged accordingly.

PETTY v. DREW.—Dowling, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Chadwicke Jones, Serjt. for a new trial for want of evidence. Rule absolute.

STYLES v. MEEK.—C. Jones, Serjt. moved to have an award referred back to the arbitrator, on the ground of a mistake in a sum of money which he had allowed in the accounts. Refused.

NEWTON v. HOLFORD.—Newton, in person, moved to have the Master's taxation reviewed, in consequence of his allowing the defendant, Healy, his costs of some of the pleadings, which related to the special plea. The COURT, after consulting the Master on the following day, granted a rule absolute.

Friday.

SHARPE, Public Officer, v. ASHBY.—Sir Thomas Wilde shewed cause against a rule obtained by Channell, Serjt. in this cause, and reported 4 Law T. 293. Channell, Serjt. in support. The Court allowed the defendant to retain the fourth plea, on his pleading the fifth plea as an ordinary plea of payment by the drawer of the bill. The costs to be costs in the cause.

GIBB v. KING.—Byles, Serjt. appeared to oppose the defendant being charged in execution, on the ground that the judgment, which had been signed on the 9th of November, 1843, had not been revived, and also, that the writ of habeas had been sued out of the Queen's Bench returnable in this court.

Adjourned to next Term, that the plaintiff's counsel may be heard.

HAMMOND, Executor, v. CLARKE.—Chadwicke Jones, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why the assessment of damages on a writ of inquiry should not be set aside, or the damages be reduced, on the ground that a paper writing had been received in evidence as a promissory note, which was not, in fact, a note. Rule nisi.

THOMAS v. STANDISH.—Channell, Serjt. shewed cause against a rule obtained by Dowling, Serjt. for setting aside an order to plead several pleas. Dowling, Serjt. in support of the rule. The COURT allowed all the pleas to stand but the 7th, 8th, and 9th, and gave leave to plead these in a different form.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Friday, Jan. 31.

KILBURN v. KILBURN.

Sufficiency of award.

A case having been referred to an arbitrator, the costs to abide the event of his award, it appeared that the declaration contained several counts. The defendant pleaded—non assumpsit, payment, and a set-off. The award was in substance merely this, "that the defendant ought to pay a certain amount, and that judgment should be entered for the plaintiff for that amount."

Held, that such finding by the arbitrator sufficiently disposed of the two last issues, the substance of which was, that the defendant had paid the full amount of the plaintiff's claim, and that he had a set-off equal to the full amount, and therefore those two pleas were negatived by the finding.

Held, further, that the finding did not sufficiently dispose of the issue upon non assumpsit, which was divisible, and applied to all the counts in the declaration, whereas the finding did not shew upon how many of them the plaintiff had succeeded, or upon which of them either party was entitled to costs.

In this case, which was argued some time ago, judgment was now delivered as follows. The facts appear fully from the judgment.

POLLOCK, C.B.—In the case of Kilburn v. Kilburn, which was an application to set aside an award, the objection to the award was, that it had not disposed of all the issues. The costs of the cause were to abide the event. There were three pleas—non assumpsit, payment, and set-off. Upon looking at the declaration, there were several counts; there were three counts, and never indebted pleaded to all. And the objection was, that it did not appear upon the face of the award that the arbitrator had disposed of all the issues. Now the cases have certainly laid it down, and we accede to the law so laid down, that where the costs in a cause are to abide the event of an award, the award must either dispose specifically of such issues as are raised upon the record, or it must be clearly inferred from it in what way such issues are found, so as to enable the officer to tax the costs for the party in whose favour such issues have been found. The award was in substance wholly this, that the defendant ought to pay a certain amount, and that judgment should be entered for the plaintiff for that amount. Now it is clear that this determines both the issues of payment and set off. The plea of payment means that the defendant has paid the whole of the plaintiff's demand, and the plea of set-off that he has a set-off equal to the full amount. The finding of the arbitrator clearly disposes of two of the issues—the plea of payment and the plea of set-off; but the difficulty is as to the plea of non assumpsit, where the declaration consists of several counts. The plea of non assumpsit is a denial of the liability of the defendant, upon which there are several counts. Now the award does no more than determine that on some one or more counts in the declaration the defendant is liable. It does not necessarily or reasonably determine that he is liable for all, nor does it determine it in such a way so as to be equivalent to an express determination of all the counts on non assumpsit in the plaintiff's favour. We think, therefore, upon the decided cases, the objection to the award ought to prevail. We have taken time to consider, for the purpose of ascertaining whether there are any special circumstances on this reference and on the award which will distinguish it from the cases already cited. We cannot find any sufficient grounds to justify us in distinguishing it from these cases, and we therefore think that the rule for setting aside the award must be made absolute. Rule absolute.

BOYLE v. BRANDON.

In an action for seduction, the defendant had paid the plaintiff the sum of 10l. in addition to other sums, and the defendant pleaded payment of money in accord and satisfaction.

Held, that the following receipt, not being for "debts, claims, or demands," was not within the statute 55

Geo. 3, c. 184, and was admissible in evidence without any other receipt stamp than one for the sum of 10l.:—"Received of A B, by the hand of his friend, the sum of 10l. in addition to the various amounts received of him at different times in consideration of any favours conferred, or services rendered to him by either of us at any time during our acquaintance, and which sum we hereby acknowledge to be ample remuneration, and we beg to return him our best thanks for the same."

Watson, Q. C. shewed cause against a rule for a new trial which had been obtained by Kennedy on the part of the plaintiff, on the ground of misdirection and the reception of improper evidence. The question depended entirely upon the construction of the Stamp Act, 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, and the point decided appears fully from the judgment, which was now delivered by

Pollock, C.B.—This was an application for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, and further, upon the ground of the receipt of improper evidence; that is, a document without a proper stamp. It was an action for seduction, and there were three pleas: first, Not guilty; secondly, Leave and license; and, thirdly, Payment of money in accord and satisfaction. The jury found a verdict for the defendant upon all the issues. The motion was made for a new trial, on the ground that there was a misdirection as to the liability of the defendant, when it appeared at the trial that her illness manifestly resulted not from his misconduct, but from his not continuing that misconduct. With respect to the plea of accord and satisfaction, the objection was, that the receipt required a higher stamp than that for the sum of 10l.; and that it required a ten-shilling stamp, being either a receipt in full of all demands, or a similar receipt for a sum in satisfaction, together with other sums not mentioned. Upon looking at the Act of Parliament it is quite clear that it refers to "debts, claims, and demands." The receipt in question is in this form—I have it before me—"Received" (of the defendant), "by the hand of his friend, the sum of ten pounds, in addition to the various amounts received of him at different times, in consideration of any favours conferred or services rendered to him by either of us at any time during our acquaintance; and which sum we hereby acknowledge to be ample remuneration, and we beg to return him our best thanks for the same." It appears to us that this document, called a receipt, has nothing to do with any claim, debt, or demand. It appears that certain favours are represented as having been conferred, and certain services rendered. The claim is in no respect treated as a debt, claim, or demand, within the meaning of the Act of Parliament, and the various amounts received from time to time do not appear to have been payments made on account of a sum due, but would rather lead to the belief that they were gifts or gratuities not at all in the nature of an amount claimed as due; and whether an instrument of this description requires a stamp or not, is to be judged from the face of the document, and upon this it appears that the stamp for the receipt for 10l. is all that is required to render this receipt admissible in evidence. Upon that point we are clearly of opinion that there ought to be no new trial. Upon the other point, as there were three pleas, every one of which was found for the defendant, if the defendant will consent to enter the verdict for the plaintiff on the plea of not guilty, there will be no new trial; otherwise we entertain sufficient doubt to think that that question ought to be further discussed.

Watson, on the part of the defendant, as his counsel.—My Lord, I will consent to adopt your lordship's suggestion—the verdict will then be on the general issue for the plaintiff, and on the other pleas for the defendant.

Pollock, C.B.—Then the defendant consenting that the verdict on the plea of not guilty shall be entered for the plaintiff, there will be no rule.

Rule discharged.

Monday, Feb. 10.

M'Intyre v. Miller.

The defendant having pleaded a plea, to which the plaintiff demurred, defendant entered a relictâ verificatione, and no further proceedings were taken upon the plea. The proceedings were entered upon the nisi prius record, and the plaintiff obtained judgment upon the other issues. The defendants brought their writ of error, assigning for error, among other things, that the plea had not been properly disposed of; and that, being admitted by the demurrer, it was an answer to the action, and that the relictâ verificatione was a mere nullity. The plaintiff, upon a former day, had obtained a rule to shew cause why execution should not issue, notwithstanding the writ of error, upon the ground that it was frivolous. That rule was discharged after argument the Court holding it not to be frivolous. The plaintiff then took out a summons, to strike out the plea, demurrer, and relictâ verificatione.

Held, that they should never have been on the nisi prius record, and that they ought to be struck out, even after error brought.

Where a summons is taken out in vacation, upon a matter too important to be decided at chambers, the judge may adjourn it to the Court then holding sittings after term, and the other judges will in such a case sit as his assessors.

In this case a summons had been taken out at chambers to shew cause why one of the pleas, with the demurrer thereto, and a relictâ verificatione, which the defendant had entered thereupon, should not be struck out of the record. The plaintiff having obtained judgment on the whole record, the defendant had sued out a writ of error, of which one of the grounds was that a relictâ verificatione was an entire nullity, and that the plea having been once pleaded and admitted by the demurrer, ought to have been disposed of by some proper judgment of the Court. The plaintiff had obtained a rule to shew cause why execution should not issue, notwithstanding the writ of error, and that rule was discharged, after argument, on the last day of last Term, the Court being of opinion that the ground of error above mentioned was not entirely frivolous. (See 4 Law T. antè, p. 358.) The plaintiff then, in pursuance of a suggestion thrown out by some of the Court upon the argument of the previous rule, took out a summons at chambers to shew cause why the plea and proceedings thereupon should not be struck out of the record. Alderson B. before whom it came on to be heard, thinking it too important a matter to be decided at chambers, and not wishing to throw it over till next Term, said he would hear it this morning in court, when the other barons would sit as his assessors.

C. Edwards now appeared to oppose the summons.—This is on the record a solemn judicial act, which the parties have a right to retain there. (3 Blac. Com. Record; Termes de la Ley, Record.)

Bull.—There is no judgment signed, and therefore no record. As long as the proceedings are in paper the Court has control over them, and they wi' interfere to set them right even after error brought. This entry amounts to the same thing as an abandonment of the plea and demurrer by consent.

C. Edwards.—Since the new rules the first entry on record is the Nisi Prius record, but that being made up, the parties are in the same position as if the old practice had prevailed. The plaintiff's proper course was to have demanded a joinder in demurrer and brought the defendant into default and made an entry accordingly. The consent of parties cannot change the rules of law or of pleading. (Kavanagh v. Gudge and Another, 1 Dowl. & Lownd. 928.) Whether the defendant is bound by this entry is the very point to be raised in error. If this entry is good and binding, it ought to be on the record, and the defendant is entitled to his writ of error upon it. A retraxit is on the record, and error may be brought on it. (Fitzherbert, Natura Brevium, Writ of Error.) So it may on judgment by confession. Here the application is to expunge.

By the Court.—This ought never to have been on the Nisi Prius record. The pleadings are in paper till final judgment, and till then the Court has power to amend the record if they see fit. This order will be made; but as the defendant had a right to bring his writ of error, it must be upon payment by the plaintiff of the costs of this application, and of the writ of error if abandoned within three days.

Wednesday, Feb. 12.

Clarke v. Royston.

Where an agreement in writing has been entered into between landlord and tenant which is at variance with the custom of the country, the written agreement must prevail, although where the two are not absolutely inconsistent, the custom may be proved to qualify and explain the agreement.

Baines and Hoggins shewed cause against a rule obtained by Hugh Hill to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff and enter the same for the defendant.

The declaration set out a contract with respect to the treatment of a farm, which was in consistency with the custom of the country.

It appeared, however, upon the trial, that the tenancy was under a written agreement, which contained stipulations differing materially from the contract declared upon, and also from the custom.

It was now contended, that the contract must be taken to be made subject to the custom of the country, and to be qualified by it.

By the Court.—Where a written contract for the occupation of a farm differs from the custom of the country, then the writing must prevail, although where they are not absolutely inconsistent, the custom may be proved to qualify the contract.

Rule absolute.

Cook v. Redillian.

In an action to recover the price of goods sold according to sample, if it turn out that some of them were not equal to sample when delivered, the plaintiff may prove a custom of trade that if the quantity inferior to sample did not exceed one-half of the goods, the contract should only be rescinded as to the inferior part.

Assumpsit for goods sold and delivered.

Plea—Non assumpsit.

Case tried before Cresswell, J. at Liverpool.

Martin, Q. C. and Crompton now shewed cause against a rule obtained by Watson, Q. C. for a new trial. The defendant had bought from the plaintiff 600 pieces of goods by sample. The defence set up was, that when the goods arrived, part of them did not accord with the samples. Plaintiff then gave evidence of a custom at Manchester, that if goods were bought according to sample, then if more than half of them differed from the sample, the buyer had a right to throw up the contract; but if less than half, he had only a right to call upon the seller to replace the improper pieces, or to make an allowance for them in the price. It appeared that, in this case, less than half differed from sample. This evidence was objected to by the defendant, but received by the learned judge, and upon that ground this rule had been obtained.

Martin, Q. C. and Crompton now shewed cause, citing Street v. Blay (4 B. & Ad. 456). They were stopped by the Court.

Watson, Q. C. and Atherton, contrà.—The evidence was given of a custom of trade, with a view to contradict the real contract between the parties, and which was set up by the plaintiff's own evidence. This custom of trade would go to deprive the defendant of certain legal rights which he has if the contract alone is to be looked to. It is not denied on the other side that a sale by sample is the same thing as a warranty. (Hibbert v. Shee, 1 Camp. 113.)

By the Court.—The rule must be discharged.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Richards v. Macey. Rule nisi.

Monday.

Collinson v. Newcastle and Darlington Junction Railway Company.—Wortley and Addison shewed cause against a rule obtained by Knowles to set aside the verdict for the defendants, and for a new trial. The question turned on the construction of some of the clauses in the defendants' Act. Rule absolute.

Pitts v. Becket.—Martin, Q. C. and Atherton shewed cause against a rule obtained by Knowles for a new trial, or to enter verdict for the plaintiff.

Rule discharged.

Doe dem. Oulton v. Oulton.—(Part heard.)

Wednesday.

Crellin v. Calvert.—Crellin v. Brook.—These two cases stand over till next Term.

Redman v. Wilson.—Redman v. Hay.—These two cases were part heard, and stood over in consequence of Parke, B. being obliged to go elsewhere.

Stables v. Tuting. Arranged.

Chapman v. Arnott.—Knowles shewed cause against a rule for a new trial obtained by Watson, Q. C. Rule absolute on payment of costs.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

Tuesday, Feb. 4.

On errors from the Court of Queen's Bench.

(Before Tindal, C.J. Parke, Alderson, Rolfe, and Platt, Barons, and Maule and Cresswell, Justices.)

Fullarton v. Mittleholzer.

Debt upon a contract of September 1834, whereby the plaintiff, in consideration of 7,800l. did sell, assign, transfer, and set over all his right, &c. in and to the services and labour of 153 apprenticed labourers in favour of the defendant, to the use of his plantations, with a warranty of the quiet possession of the services of such labourers according to law; and the defendant engaged to pay the plaintiff the aforesaid sum of 7,800l. in six instalments, and that in case of failure in any of such instalments, the plaintiff might reclaim, and the services of the labourers should revert to the plaintiff, the defendant remaining liable for such sums as should be then due for the hire of such labour during such period as he should have received the services.

Breach assigned—Non-payment of the two last instalments.

Plea 2nd—That the agreement was made in Berbice, in the colony of British Guiana, for the transfer of the services of 153 apprenticed labourers in that colony; and that, before the making of the agreement, an ordinance for the government of apprenticed labourers was duly made by the governor of the said colony, according to the provisions of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 73, enacting that after the 1st August, 1834, no instrument transferring or affecting the services of apprenticed labourers therein should be valid in law to convey or affect such services, unless a memorandum should be recorded in a book within one month after the execution of the instrument. The plea then alleged that no such memorandum had been recorded.

Held, that it was incumbent on the defendant, as vendee, to secure the transfer of the services of such apprenticed labourers by recording the memorandum, and that having omitted to do so, he could not set up the failure of that transfer, or the invalidity of the contract, as a defence to the action for the remaining instalments, which he had absolutely bound himself to pay.

Plea 3rd—That before the expiration of the period of service, and before the instalment was due, the plaintiff removed the labourers out of the plantations of the defendant to his own premises, and the defendant ceased to receive their services, and he declined to pay the instalment, and therefore the services reverted to the plaintiff.

Held, that the plea set out what might have given the defendant a cross remedy against the plaintiff for a trespass, but was no defence in this action.

Plea 4th—That while the said apprenticed labourers were in the service of the defendant under the agreement, an ordinance was duly made by the governor, according to the provisions of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 73, whereby it was enacted that all the persons who, on the 1st August, 1838, should be held in British Guiana as prædial apprenticed labourers should after that day be discharged from the remaining term of their apprenticeship, and that during the time that their services could by law be had, defendant duly paid all instalments.

Held, that there was an absolute sale of the services of the apprenticed labourers, and that the loss of such services must fall upon the defendant.

This was an action of debt, and the declaration consisted of two counts. The first stated, that, in September 1834, by a certain agreement, made between the plaintiff and Johann Ludenig Barnstedt, deceased, of the one part, and the defendant, of the other part, it was agreed that, in consideration of 7,800*l.* sterling, payable as therein expressed, the parties of the one part had bargained and sold, and they did sell, assign, transfer, and make over, all their right and interest in the services and labour of 153 apprenticed labourers, formerly slaves, belonging to the parties of the one part, classified in the schedule, for the term of their apprenticeship, in favour of the party on the other part, to the use of his plantations; the parties on the one part engaging to warrant and defend the party on the other part from all claims and demands on, and otherwise, as far as was in their power, to guarantee the quiet possession of, the services of such apprenticed labourers, according to law; that the party of the other part engaged to pay to the parties on the one part the sum of 7,800*l.* in six instalments, as specified; that it was mutually agreed that, in case of failure in the regular and prompt payment of any of the instalments, the parties of the one part should be entitled to reclaim, and the services of such apprenticed labourers during the then remaining term of apprenticeship should revert to the parties of the one part, the party of the other part, and his property, remaining nevertheless bound for the payment of such sums as should be then due for the value or hire of the labour during such period as they should have received the services of the said apprenticed labourers, at the rate of 1,300*l.* per annum, and to be moreover bound to make good any losses which might be sustained. The declaration then averred, that, after the making of the said agreement, the services and labour of the said apprenticed labourers were, in pursuance of the said agreement, used and enjoyed by the defendant from the time of making the said agreement, during the term of their apprenticeship; and the plaintiff and Barnstedt, before his death, and the plaintiff since, were at all times ready and willing to warrant and defend, and so did warant, &c. the defendant, against all claims on him in respect of the said apprenticed labourers, and did otherwise guarantee the quiet possession of the services of such labourers according to law; and that the defendant, in fact, had such quiet possession during the term aforesaid. Breach was then assigned, that, although the defendant, in part performance on his part, paid the plaintiff and Barnstedt four of the said instalments, and although the times for payment of the remaining instalments had severally elapsed before the suit, yet the defendant had not paid the remaining instalments, but the same, amounting to 2,600*l.* were wholly due to the plaintiff.

The second count was upon an account stated.

The pleas were, to the first count, 1st, That, before the remaining instalments became due, the agreement was, with the consent of the plaintiff and Barnstedt, and of the defendant, wholly annulled and rescinded. 2nd, That the said agreement was made in writing, and by a certain instrument, executed in September 1834; and that the said instrument was executed in parts beyond the seas, to wit, in the colony of British Guiana, to wit, in the district of Berbice; and that the said instrument was made and executed for the purpose of transferring and affecting the services of 153 apprenticed labourers in the said colony. That before the making of the said instrument of sale, to wit, on the 8th day of March, 1834, to wit, in the said colony of British Guiana, a certain ordinance for the government and regulation of apprenticed labourers was duly made by his Excellency Sir James Carmichael Smyth, bart. lieutenant-governor of the said colony, with the advice and consent of the Hon. Court of Policy of the said colony, in compliance with the provisions of an Act of the Imperial Parliament, passed in the 3rd and 4th years of the reign of King William the Fourth, intituled "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies," &c. and according to the laws and usages in force in the said colony, which said ordinance was duly published on a certain day, to wit the 22nd of July, 1834, and it was enacted by the said ordinance that, after the 1st day of August, 1834, no deed or instrument whereby the services of any apprenticed labourer in the said colony should be transferred or affected, should be valid in law to pass or convey or affect the services of any such apprenticed labourer unless an annotation or memorandum of such instrument should be recorded in a book to be kept for that purpose in the Colonial Registrar's office of each of the respective districts of the colony, within one month after the making thereof, if made in such colony; that although before, and at, and after the making of the said instrument, to wit, on the 1st of August, 1834, and from thence hitherto, a book had been duly kept for the purpose in the Colonial Registrar's office, to wit, of the district of Berbice, in the said colony, in which district the said instrument was made, and within which the services of the said apprenticed labourers were intended to be transferred; yet that no annotation or memorandum of the said instrument of sale was recorded, according to the provisions of the said ordinance, in the Colonial Registrar's office, in the district of Berbice, in the said colony, within which district the said instrument was made, and within which the services of the said apprenticed labourers were intended to be assigned, nor elsewhere in the said colony, within one month after the making such instrument, or at any other time before the action, &c.

3rd. That after the making of the agreement, the said apprenticed labourers remained in the service of the defendant, to wit, on 1st Oct. 1834, and from thence till 1st August, 1838, and on that day, without the consent, and against the will of the defendant, and before the expiration of the time for which their services were originally transferred, and before either of the remaining instalments became payable, the plaintiff removed the labourers in certain boats belonging to the plaintiff, out of the plantations of the defendant, where the labourers were, up to that time, usually employed, and removed them to the premises of the plaintiff, and there retained them in his service, and the defendant ceased to receive the services of the said labourers, and has at no time since received them; and the said labourers wholly quitted the service of the defendant; and the defendant says he declined to pay the two last instalments, and thereupon the services of the labourers reverted to the plaintiff, according to the terms of the agreement, and all such sums as were then due for the hire of the labourers during such period as the defendant received the services, at the rate of 1,300*l.* per annum, were duly paid according to the agreement.

4th. That the agreement was made in writing, in parts beyond the seas, viz. in the colony of British Guiana, and that both the parties were British subjects, and the agreement was made for the purpose of transferring the services of 153 prædial apprenticed labourers, during the term of their apprenticeship, to wit, from Sept. 1834, to that of August 1840, to which time the term then extended, according to the provisions of an Act of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, "for the abolition of slavery," &c. That after the making of such agreement, the defendant received such services till the 1st August, 1838. That while the said labourers were in the service of the defendant under such agreement, to wit, in July 1838, a certain ordinance was duly made by his Excellency Henry Light, esq. lieutenant-governor of the colony of British Guiana, with the advice of the Honourable Court of Policy of the colony, enacting that all persons who, on the 1st of August 1838, should be holden in British Guiana as prædial apprenticed labourers, should after that day become free to all intents and purposes whatever—absolutely freed and discharged of and from the then remaining term of their apprenticeship, and of and from all the obligations imposed by the recited Act. And thereupon afterwards, and before any breach of the said agreement, viz. on the 1st August, 1838, the said apprenticed labourers were freed and discharged from their apprenticeship, and the defendant was wholly deprived of their services; and the parties to the said agreement were prohibited by the authority aforesaid from further performing the agreement, or from carrying the said sale of the services of the said labourers into further operation for the remainder of the intended term of apprenticeship, according to the intent of the agreement, to wit, from the 1st August, 1838, to the 1st August, 1840. And the defendant says, that during all such time as the said apprenticed labourers remained in his service, and during all the time that their services could by law be had and retained by him according to the terms of the said agreement, the defendant duly paid all instalments as they became due, according to the said agreement, and before the commencement of the action, to wit, the three first instalments, and afterwards, and after the 1st August, 1838, and after the apprenticed labourers were freed by the said ordinance, and the defendant had been deprived of their services, the defendant also paid the 4th instalment.

5th. To the last count, nunquam indebitatus.

The replication to the 1st plea denied that the agreement was annulled or rescinded modo et formâ.

To the 2nd plea, denied that there was or had been any book kept for the purpose in the plea mentioned in the Colonial Registrar's office, modo et formâ.

To the 3rd plea the plaintiff demurred, as the first allegation was an argumentative traverse of the averment that the defendant had engaged the services of the labourers during their apprenticeship; that the allegation set up the default of the defendant himself as defeating the right of the plaintiff; that the matter alleged amounted to a denial that the debt ever accrued, and ought to have been so pleaded.

To the 4th plea, denied that the parties were prohibited by the authority of the said ordinance from further performing the said agreement modo et formâ.

On these pleadings, judgment was given for the plaintiff on the demurrer to the 3rd plea; and on the 1st and 4th issues the finding was for the plaintiff, and on the 2nd for the defendant; but on this 2nd issue the Court had entered up judgment for the plaintiff non obstante veredicto.

Jervis (and Greenwood) appeared in support of the writ of error.

Martin (and Dasent), contrà.

Jervis, in support of the writ, now contended, 1st. that the declaration was bad; 2nd, that the defendant was entitled to judgment on the 2nd plea and replication thereto, and the finding thereon; and, thirdly, on the 3rd plea; and lastly, also on the 1st and 4th pleas. 1st, He maintained the declaration to be bad, as the contract set out professes to be a sale of apprentices—and such a contract cannot be made by the law of this country; and it must be assumed, from the statement in this declaration, that the contract was made here. But even if it were made abroad, it would be necessary in the declaration to shew a compliance with the statute which justified such a contract there, but only with certain conditions and under certain formalities. The right of apprenticeship was created by the statute 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 73, and could only be transferred according to its provisions. Although the declaration states that these apprentices were formerly slaves, it does not follow that they were emancipated slaves. A contract for the transfer of the services of indentured parish apprentices is void at law. (1 Nolan, P. L. 567.) "An assignment, however formal, is good by way of covenant, but not as an assignment to pass the master's interest without a local custom to support it, and the defect is not cured by the apprentice's consent, because the person of a man is not strictly and legally assignable." Upon these pleadings it must be assumed that the contract was made in this country, and if so, it was illegal and void. [PARKE, B.—We are not to suppose a contract illegal, if an intendment can be made to support it. It may be made here, to operate in the West Indies.] In the absence of averment, it is to be taken as made here, and the declaration must shew affirmatively that all has been done which is necessary to make it operate abroad. The 10th sec. of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 73, enacts that "the right or interest of any employer or employers to and in the services of any such indentured labourers as aforesaid shall pass and be transferable by bargain and sale, contract, deed, conveyance, will or descent, according to such rules and in such manner as shall for the purpose be provided by any such acts of assembly, ordinances, or orders in council as hereafter mentioned." Now it is incumbent on the plaintiff to aver that the contract was made according to such rules and ordinances as had been promulgated on the subject. But, secondly, the second plea, which raises the question on the ordinances, is an answer to the action. The plea states that "a book had been duly kept in the Colonial Registrar's office in the colony, within the district where the instrument was made and executed, yet that no annotation or memorandum of the said instrument of sale, transfer, and agreement was made and recorded according to the provisions of the said ordinance in the said colony, within one month after the making or executing such instrument, or at any other time before the commencement of such action." The replication to the plea denied that there was or had been any book kept for the purpose in the plea mentioned, and upon this issue the finding was for the defendant. On this finding, however, the Court of Queen's Bench had given judgment for the plaintiff non obstante veredicto. (a) The grounds of that judgment appear to have been—first, that the ordinance affected the services only of the apprentices, and not the consideration of the contract; and, secondly, that it was the duty of the vendee, and not of the vendor, to make the annotation. Both these grounds, he respectfully submitted, were insufficient. The object of the statute was to protect apprentices, and, therefore, it must be construed strictly, to give full effect to it. [PARKE, B.—It was an absolute contract.] It was a foreign contract, and could not be enforced according to the law of the place where it was to operate. There it was illegal. The ordinance was violated by the omission to make the annotation; and such an ordinance is not merely directory. It was intended to protect the slaves, and public policy demands that it should be held compulsory. But even supposing the sale absolute, whose duty was it to act on the ordinance? Surely his who sought to enforce the contract. Even if the obligation was mutual, it must be shewn to have been fulfilled by the party who sought to take advantage of the contract under which it was imposed. Whose duty is it to enroll a bargain and sale? Suppose the vendor brings an action to recover the consideration-money can he do so without previously enrolling the deed? [PARKE, B.—During the intermediate month, the property passed.] Even admitting that to be so, it does not follow that it continued to pass. The ordinance says that such a contract as this shall "not pass, convey, or affect the services of any such apprenticed labourers;" and suppose, at the end of the month, the apprentices were to say they would be no longer bound? If they had made that protest, the contract would have been absolutely void. The ordinance here must be considered as incorporated in the statute, and if the contract was illegal by the lex loci, it could not be a meritorious cause of action, according to the well-known cases of Booth v. Hodgson (6 T. R. 405), and Law v. Hodgson (11 East, 300). Such an ordinance must be construed most strictly, as it was made for the protection of the weak, and was demanded by public policy. In Reg. v. Inhabitants of Spreyton (3 B. & Ad. 818), it was held that a non-compliance with the regulations of the 32 Geo. 3, c. 57, s. 7, for the assignment of parish apprentices, made the deed of assignment absolutely void. In Rex v. Inhabitants of Hipswell (8 B. & C. 466), it was held, that all indentures of children under eight years of age, bound apprentices to chimney-sweeps, must be held absolutely void, under the stat. 28 Geo. 3, c. 48, s. 4, and not voidable only, as that statute was "introduced for public purposes, and to protect those who are incapable of protecting themselves,"—per Bayley, J. So in Pearse v. Morrice (2 Ad. & Ell. 84), where by a local statute, prior to the General Turnpike Act, 3 Geo. 3, c. 126, trustees of a turnpike-road were empowered to let the tolls, by writing under their hands and seals, the rent to be made payable to their treasurer, in default of which, every such lease should be "null and void to all intents and purposes," it was held that a lease making the rent payable to the trustees or their treasurer, was not conformable to the Act, and that the words "null and void" could not be construed as "voidable;" but the lessee or his surety might treat the lease as void, although the lessee had taken the tolls four years under the lease. Jervis also referred to the observations of Coleridge, J. in Reg. v. Fordham, 11 Ad. & Ell. 85. The contract, therefore, was clearly void as regards the services, and, if so, no action could be founded on it to recover the purchase-money. [TINDAL, C. J.—How could the vendor make the annotation? He delivers up the deed.] Whose duty would it be to enroll a memorial of an annuity? [CRESSWELL, J.—The grantee.] Because it would clearly be his interest, after the consideration-money had been paid. [TINDAL, C. J.—And here one would have supposed the vendee would do it, as it was clearly his interest. PARKE, B.—Every thing has been done by one party; the rest was to be done by the other. You seek to import terms into the contract. TINDAL, C. J.—The ordinance does not say the contract shall be void, but that it shall not pass the services of the apprentices, which shews the folly of the purchaser. MAULE, J.—A man may bind himself to pay absolutely for an option. Here the vendee has the power of annotating within a month. It would not be a bad consideration that he should, for an absolute promise of payment, have the option of annotating.] It might be a very good contract, but it is not the contract set out in these pleadings.

(a) See the report in the Jurist, vol. 8, p. 1025.

TINDAL, C. J.—The Court has no doubt whatever on the second plea. It is analogous to a bargain and sale, with a covenant that the bargainee shall pay on a future day. Even if the deed was not enrolled, though the land would not pass, the covenant would bind the bargainee.

Jervis, then on the 3rd plea.—The contract provides that in case of failure in the payment of any of the instalments, the plaintiff may reclaim, and the services of the labourers should revert to him. The vendor here has done the act of reclaiming wrongfully, by which we are released from payment. [PARKE, B.—It is only a trespass by the vendor, for which you can maintain a cross-action. You do not bring yourself within the clause of the deed.] We may waive the tort. [TINDAL, C.J.—That would be pushing the doctrine of waiving a tort.] Yes, to a certain extent. [TINDAL, C.J.—No, but to an uncertain extent. The plaintiff must have judgment on the 3rd plea.]

Jervis, then lastly on the 4th plea.—We contracted for the services of the apprenticed labourers till the 1st August, 1840, and there was a warranty on the part of the vendor that we should have the services during all the term which had been provided by the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 73. [TINDAL, C.J.—There was a warranty of their services according to law. MAULE, J.—Suppose the vendor did warrant, would that avoid the contract? It would form the subject of a cross-action rather. TINDAL, C.J.—The vendee must sustain the loss produced by the ordinance. He has bound himself to pay the instalments.]

COURT OF REVIEW.

Wednesday, Feb. 12.

Ex parte TEAGUE.

46th and 55th sections of 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 56—Costs. Where the bankrupt has obtained his certificate, and there has been no proof under the fiat, and no choice of assignees, and there exists a moral certainty that no choice will ever take place, it appears that the official assignee may pay over a small sum in his hands in discharge of the solicitor's costs without reserving the sums required to be paid under the above sections.

The fiat in this case was issued on the 10th of October, on the petition of the bankrupt himself. On the 15th of October advertisements were published for the meeting of creditors for the choice of assignees and proof of debts. On the 26th October the meeting was held but no creditor proved, and the meeting was therefore adjourned to the 27th Nov. when from the same cause the meeting was again adjourned to the 24th Dec. At this last meeting no creditor proved, but the bankrupt passed his examination. The petitioner was the solicitor to the fiat, and his bill of costs up to the 27th of Nov. had been taxed and paid; his petition was now presented to obtain out of a sum of 33*l.* in the hands of the official assignee, the payment of 11*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.* the amount of his costs since the 27th of Nov. The 46th section of the 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 56, requires the official assignee to pay to the Accountant-General out of the first moneys that shall come into his hands, and immediately after the choice of assignees, the sum of 20*l.*; and the 55th section of the same Act requires the official assignee, immediately after the choice of assignees, or so soon afterwards as a sufficient sum shall come into his hands for the purpose, to pay over and above the sum before directed to be paid by such official assignee, the sum of 10*l.* into the Bank of England, &c. The official assignee in this case refused to pay the petitioner his costs, as under these sections of the Bankrupt Act he might be called upon to pay the greater part of the sum in his hands to the Accountant-General. The bankrupt had not obtained his certificate.

Glasse, for the petitioner, said that there was no probability of a choice of assignees ever taking place, and that the official assignee might safely pay the petitioner's costs.

Anderdon, for the official assignee.

The CHIEF JUDGE.—My present impression is, that if the bankrupt had obtained his certificate, and there had been no proof of debts and no choice of assignees, and you could shew that there was a moral certainty that there would be no choice, I should make an order in favour of this claim.

Ex parte DIAMOND, re DIAMOND.

46th and 55th sections of 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 56—Commissioner's certificate—Supersedeas.

A fiat was annulled with the consent of the creditors, notwithstanding the sums of 20l. and 10l. had not been paid under the above sections, and the consent of the creditors was permitted to be proved by other evidence than the Commissioner's certificate.

This was a petition by the bankrupt to annul the fiat, with the consent of all the creditors. There was the sum of 8*s.* only in the hands of the official assignee, and the sums of 20*l.* and 10*l.* had not been paid under the 46th and 55th sections of the 1 & 2 Wm. 4, c. 56. The Commissioner, pursuant to the directions of the general order 21st August, 1818, declined to give a certificate of the consent of the creditors until these two sums had been paid.

Rolt, for the petitioner, now applied for the supersedeas, notwithstanding the non-payment of the 20*l.* and 10*l.* and submitted that the consent of the creditors might be proved otherwise than by the Commissioner's certificate. He cited Ex parte Green, re Green (1 Mont. Dea. & De Gex, 174), which he stated was a case directly in point: and

The CHIEF JUDGE said that he should follow the precedent, and accordingly made the order, subject to the production of sufficient proof of the consent of the creditors.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

Tuesday, Jan. 28.

(Before Mr. Commissioner EVANS.)

Re ADAMS.

The petition of an insolvent must be true in every particular—The Court has no power to amend same.

This insolvent was described as a pastry-cook and confectioner, residing at Canterbury, and owed debts to the amount of nearly 300*l.*

He was opposed by T. B. Hughes on the part of several creditors. The grounds of the opposition were, that the petition was not true, and could not, therefore, be sustained under the 2nd section of the Act; and also on the grounds of fraud and concealment of property.

Hughes* submitted that the first point of opposition was fatal to the petition, and called his honour's attention to the 2nd section, which enacts that the petition must be true, and shall be in the form prescribed in the schedule annexed to the Act. It would be seen that in the balance-sheet the insolvent had charged himself with the payment of 5*l.* to his solicitor for preparing his petition and schedule. This entry was not found in the petition, although a blank was left in the printed forms for that purpose, and the Act required its insertion, viz., "That the insolvent had expended a sum not exceeding 5*l.* for the necessary expenses of this his petition." Now, there was a blank in the petition where the entry of the 5*l.* should have been; and, therefore, the petition was neither true nor according to the form laid down; and, therefore, it must be dismissed.

It was suggested by the insolvent's solicitor, that the petition might be amended in that particular.

Hughes urged that the Act did not empower the commissioner to amend a petition, although he could amend a schedule.

Mr. Commissioner EVANS was of opinion that the objection taken was a fatal one; and as to amending the petition, it was utterly out of his jurisdiction to do so, the Act of Parliament not giving him the power, and therefore the petition must be dismissed.

Petition dismissed accordingly.

Re BIRLEY.

Fiat in bankruptcy issued after a petition filed. Refusal of the Commissioner to act on the fiat, while the petition was on the file.

Insolvent had some time since filed a petition to the Court, but being advised he could not succeed on it, caused a fiat in bankruptcy to be issued against himself. On the day for choice of assignees, Mr. Commissioner Fane refused to act on it, in consequence of the insolvent having filed a petition.

Buchanan, sol. applied to-day to Mr. Commissioner Goulburn (before whom the petition had been set down to be heard), to dismiss the petition, on the ground that the insolvent had no locus standi in court, his debts exceeding 300*l.* All his creditors had notice of this application. The petition was dismissed, and Mr. Commissioner Fane will proceed with the fiat.

(Before Mr. Commissioner SHEPHERD.)

Re GARDINER.

Petition must be true in all its allegations.

This insolvent was brought up in custody from Horsemonger-lane gaol, to be heard on his interim order.

Buchanan, solicitor, opposed him, on the ground that the petition was not true. He had not stated what was his trade or profession, although the marginal note in the printed forms settled by the Act gave express directions for such an insertion. He contended that the occupation of the insolvent should be inserted to prove his identity, as there might be several persons of the same name in custody; and therefore, unless the trade or profession of a party were fully stated, creditors could have no certain knowledge whether or not it was their debtor who was to be heard.

Mr. Commissioner SHEPHERD concurred in the view taken, and that the petition was not true as the Act required. Petition dismissed.

Re STANLEY.

New Rules.

Discharge of an insolvent after petition and schedule filed.

Charnock, on the behalf of the insolvent, applied that he should be discharged out of custody, having obtained an interim order of protection. The insolvent was brought up in custody from the Queen's Prison. The notice required by the recent rules framed by the commissioners had been duly served on Friday last about six o'clock in the evening on the detaining creditor.

Llewellyn, solicitor for the detaining creditor, submitted that the insolvent should not be discharged, on two grounds; first, that the notice to the detaining creditor had been served too late, and that he, on behalf of his client, had not sufficient time to obtain an office copy of the schedule, and that the insolvent had not inserted certain property belonging to him in his schedule. He also urged that the insolvent should be examined as to the statements made in his schedule, and in fact that certain points of opposition might be entered into.

Charnock, contra.—The insolvent is secretary to the North Ireland Railway Company, and if detained in custody might lose his situation, which would be no benefit either to the insolvent or his creditors. He contended that the notice was sufficient in a London case, and that the opposing creditor could have availed himself of every opportunity of inspecting the schedule. It had been stated that the insolvent might abscond if he obtained his discharge; if any fear was entertained of that, he could be arrested under a judge's order. As to examining the schedule of the insolvent, the Court had no power to do so until he appeared to be heard on his interim order (the first hearing).

Mr. Commissioner SHEPHERD did not see any thing on the face of the schedule to authorize him to detain the insolvent in custody. He considered he had no power to go into the merits of the case on this occasion. Regarding the notice, he thought the time was sufficient, because by the manner the opposing creditor's solicitor had conducted the case, he must have had some little knowledge of its merits. He should order the insolvent to be discharged.

Insolvent discharged.

(Before Commissioners FONBLANQUE, HOLROYD, and GOULBURN.)

Re J. H. DENISON.

Important decision regarding the execution of a power contained in a marriage settlement—Power of the Court to appropriate funds.

In this case, which was partly heard before Mr. Commissioner Goulburn, and which stood over for the decision of the Subdivision Court, that learned Commissioner stating that it was a question which he should not wish to decide without the assistance of Mr. Commissioner Fonblanque, whose practice at the bar of a court of equity would enable him to enter more properly into the case,—

Judgment was this day given by Mr. Commissioner FONBLANQUE as follows:—This case, which arises out of the marriage settlement of a Mr. and Mrs. Denison, whereby certain property, situate at King's Stanley, was conveyed to trustees (from and immediately after the decease of Ann Pierce, widow, the mother of Mrs. Denison), for the term of ninety nine years, upon trust to pay the rents &c. to Mrs. Denison, for life, to her separate use, and after her death, to her husband and his assigns, for life; and after his decease, in trust for the issue of such marriage, either entire, or in such parts, shares, and proportions, at such time or times, and in such manner and form, as the wife should by deed or will, appoint. And in default of appointment, the same to go to and amongst all the children issue of the marriage, or the survivors, in equal shares, upon their attaining twenty one. By an indenture, dated 17th August, 1829, Mrs. Denison, in consideration of the natural love and affection which she bore to her children, J. H. Denison, W. Denison, and T. P. Denison (one of the marriage), did direct, limit, and appoint, that the whole of the property so settled should from thenceforth be charged with the sum of 700*l*. payable upon the death of the survivor of herself and husband; and that such last-mentioned sum should belong, and be the exclusive property of T. P. Denison, "for his own use;" and that, subject thereto, the said hereditaments should go, remain, and be to the use of the said three children in equal shares. Mrs. Judson, a sister of Mrs. Denison, by her will, made certain provisions for her sister (Mrs. Denison) and her husband, and bequeathed legacies of 500*l*. each to her nephews, J. H. Denison and W. Denison (the said T. P. Denison not being then born), payable upon the death of the survivor of Mr. Judson (her husband), her mother, and Mrs. Denison. Mr. and Mrs. Denison, previous to this, in 1821, borrowed of a Miss Pierce 200*l*. on their joint bond (prepared by Mr. J. H. Denison, the son, the insolvent), whereby they became bound to pay to Miss Pierce interest on the said sum at 5*l*. per cent., and to pay off 100*l*., part thereof, within one year, and the residue within two years after the decease of Mr. Judson. This last gentleman died in 1823; but Mr. and Mrs. Denison being unable, without great inconvenience, to pay the bond, requested an extension of time; they, in fact, only paying the interest up to the 6th of May, 1821, and that payment being made on the 3rd of Jan. 1827. Between that time and 1829, Miss Pierce made repeated applications for payment of the debt due to her (some of them being made through Mr. J. H. Denison, the insolvent), and Mr. and Mrs. Denison being still unable to pay, it was arranged between Mrs. Denison and her three children, who had all three then attained their majority, that, in order to provide a fund for the payment thereof, so far as 200*l*. would extend, she, the said Mrs. Denison, should charge the property with a sum of 200*l*. in favour of her son, Mr. T. P. Denison, he verbally undertaking to apply that sum in part liquidation of the bond debt. To effect this object, and to make her son, T. P. Denison, equal with his two brothers, who were respectively to take legacies of 500*l*. on the death of their mother under said Mrs. Judson's will as before mentioned, Mrs. Denison determined to charge, and did accordingly charge, the Kings Stanley property with the sum of 700*l*. This arrangement was perfectly well known to and acquiesced in by J. H. Denison (the insolvent) and W. Denison, and was carried into execution by the before mentioned indenture of appointment of 1829. J. P. Denison died in 1831, in the lifetime of his father and mother, having by his will appointed his brothers, J. H. Denison and W. Denison, his executors. The said Mr. Denison died in June 1835, having by his will made the like appointment of executors. The said Mrs. Denison died in 1841, having by her will also made the like appointment of executors. The property of Mr. Denison, at his death, was very small; and it is stated that the expenses of his funeral, and of his executors in proving his will, exhausted the value of his furniture, &c., but this bond debt was the only specialty. On the death of Mrs. Denison, the Kings Stanley property was sold, and the produce (of which a part has been paid to Mr. W. Denison) has been more than sufficient to pay the 700*l* charge created in favour of T. P. Dennison. The bond debt, with a large arrear of interest, still remain due to Miss Pierce, and it has been contended on her part that the household furniture, &c. of Mr. Denison, deceased (subject to the payment of the reasonable expenses of his funeral and of proving his will, and 200*l*., part of the 700*l*. charged in favour of the said T. P. Denison, are applicable, so far as they will extend, to the payment thereof. Mr. J. H. Denison took the benefit of the New Insolvent Debtors' Act, and on the 2nd February, 1843, obtained his final order. His brother, Mr. W. Denison, had acted entirely in the executorships, and had in his hands 191*l*. as the share to which his brother (the insolvent) was entitled of the proceeds of the Kings Stanley property. This sum has been, by order of my brother commissioner Goulburn, paid into the hands of the official assignee, subject to further order. The assignees of Mr. J. H. Denison, the insolvent, contend, on the other hand, that Miss Pierce has no claim whatever on the fund now in court, as Mr. T. P. Denison did no act which could make the property at Kings Stanley liable for the 200*l*., nor were J. H. Denison (the insolvent), or Wm. Denison parties to any legal Act rendering their shares liable, and that Miss Pierce has no claim beyond a right to prove for her debt and come in with the rest of the creditors. The question which arises for our decision is, whether the power contained in the settlement is general or not. A strict interpretation would make it general and the execution of the bond might have been construed as an execution of the power. It is clear, however, that the parties thought afterwards it was questionable, and the learned Commissioner then cited the case of Bristow v. Ward, which, although it had been shaken by the eminent author of the Treatise on Powers (Sugden) and other dicta of leading council, yet the decision has not been overruled, and we have therefore come to the conclusion that the power is not general, and this the parties appear to have known some years ago. Thomas P. Denison promised to make this payment, and Miss Pierce appears to have consented to make this her security, although the appointment was to "him for his own use," and on this point the claim of Miss Pierce must fall to the ground, and the assignees of Mr. J. H. Denison, the insolvent must be declared to be entitled to the fund in Court.

Re STAGG.

As to Amendment of Schedule—Order for payment out of a salary.

The insolvent had been a lieutenant in the navy, and is now the keeper of the Semaphore, at Hazlemore, in Surrey.

He was opposed by Knight, solicitor, and supported by Buchanan, soliciter.

It appeared that the insolvent had petitioned the Court some time previously, but his petition was dismissed in consequence of his having paid his creditors 30*l*. between the date of his first petition and the interim order obtained thereon. He had filed a fresh petition and had omitted certain creditors in his first schedule.

Buchanan prayed an amendment, and offered [illegible] the sum [illegible] a year, in liquidation of his debts.

Knight, solicitor, objected, and urged that the insolvent should pay one-third of his salary.

Mr. Commissioner HOLROYD, under all the circumstances, ordered an amendment of the schedule, and granted a day for the final order, on the insolvent paying the sum of 40*l*. per annum, the insolvent being on full pay. The first payment to be made in July, and if the payments were not strictly made, the petition to be dismissed.

A day fixed for the final order.

THE LEGISLATOR.

Summary.

THE new Settlement Bill is the topic most interesting to our readers, which has engaged the attention of Parliament during the past week. It is considered elsewhere. On Tuesday, Lord BROUGHAM brought before the House of Lords a complaint of the infrequent sittings of the Bankruptcy Commissioners. He was answered by the LORD CHANCELLOR, who explained the matter, and the conversation dropped.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

LAW OF DIVORCE.

MONDAY, Feb. 10.—Lord BROUGHAM gave notice that he should, early next week, being guided in the selection of a day by their lordships' convenience, move for leave to renew a Bill, the consideration of which had only been postponed, never abandoned, and containing clauses, some of them suggested by his noble and learned friend on the woolsack, and others by one of his right reverend friends, for the purpose of transferring the jurisdiction of courts in vinculo matrimonii, from the ecclesiastical courts to the court of Privy Council. He did not, however, think it necessary to move for a renewal of the committee which had already sat upon the subject, or for a new committee.

LAW REFORMS—BAIL IN ERROR—CHALLENGE TO THE ARRAY.

Lord CAMPBELL put a question to his noble and learned friend on the woolsack, relating to the important subject of bail in error in criminal cases. He wished to know whether the noble and learned lord on the woolsack intended to introduce a Bill in reference to this matter, and if so, when it might be expected. It was very desirable that it should be sent down to the other House as soon as possible after it had been originated in this. There was another subject to which he begged leave to draw the attention of their lordships. He referred to the mode in which objections were to be made to a jury improperly returned. Now he would assume that the opinions of the judges in the late case to which reference had been made were perfectly correct, and also that his noble and learned friend upon the woolsack had taken an equally correct view of the case. Then supposing this to be the fact, how did the law of England now stand as to a jury improperly returned? Why, it appeared that we were without remedy. An accused person, who was about to be placed on his trial, might have a jury improperly impanelled. Now, the old common law of England provided a remedy by challenge to the array, and on the proof of the validity of the objection, the array was quashed, and the proceedings began de novo. In these days the impanelling of the jury was intrusted to the sheriff, and upon him depended whether the jury were properly or improperly constituted. Now the grounds of challenge at that time were that the sheriff was not indifferent—that he was partial. Afterwards, however, by a most excellent law, for which they were indebted to the present Prime Minister, the mode of constituting the jury was altered, and the power formerly vested in his hands was taken from the sheriff, and intrusted to other functionaries. The sheriff could, therefore, no longer be recognized. This being the position of matters, the learned judges came to the unanimous decision that, as the sheriff could no longer be complained of, the challenge to the array was gone. Now, although he was humbly of opinion that this was a point involved in considerable doubt, and that another mode of redress might still be pointed out, still, assuming that the decision was correct, he hoped that his noble and learned friend would acknowledge that the law, if such were the law, should not remain in that condition, but that some remedy should be provided, something tantamount to the challenge to the array when the sheriff was the returning officer. Now, he begged to draw the attention of his noble and learned friend to this subject, and he ventured to ask him now, or, if he wished for time to consider it, he would not press the question, but he ventured to put it—to ask whether it was the intention of government speedily to bring forward a measure upon the subject? Such a Bill would certainly be better in their hands than in those of any noble lord sitting upon the left of the woolsack. He would repeat the question—whether it was now the intention of his noble and learned friend to introduce any such measure as that to the necessity for which he had referred? If it was his intention, he would most willingly leave the matter in his hands. His (Lord Campbell's) sole object was to amend the criminal law, and he would much rather that the measure came from his noble and learned friend than that he should attempt to introduce it. But should that noble and learned lord's answer be that he declined to take any such steps, then he (Lord Campbell) gave notice that he should feel it his duty to move for leave to bring in such a Bill as he believed was wanting upon the subject. — The Lord CHANCELLOR said his noble and learned friend had put two distinct questions to him. First, whether, in pursuance of engagements entered into on a former night, it was his intention speedily to bring forward a Bill relating to bail in error. In reply to his noble and learned friend, he had to state, that he had directed his attention to the subject, and that it was his intention, within a few days (so that the Bill should pass through the House before Easter), to introduce a measure upon the subject, similar in many points to the Bill last year introduced by his noble and learned friend. With respect, however, to the second point to which that noble and learned lord referred, he believed that he laboured under some misapprehension as to that subject. He, the (Lord Chancellor) had not understood that the judges had pronounced any such opinion as that attributed to them by his noble and learned friend. Certainly, so far as he (the Lord Chancellor) was concerned, he never ventured to express any such opinion. He did not think that the judges were of opinion that the challenge to the array was taken away by the recent Act of the Legislature; all that the judges decided was, that the challenge to the array did not lie in the particular instance or case referred to. The challenge to the array could only be sustained in consequence of a fault in the sheriff or returning officer, or on account of some connection he had with the party accused, so as to be a challenge on the ground of unindifference. There were two grounds of challenge granted to the prisoner by the common law. In the instance under discussion there was no imputation of partiality upon the part of the sheriff, and nothing upon the record tending to shew that he was unindifferent. Therefore the challenge to the array was not allowed, consequent upon the course of common law. This was, as he understood it, the opinion of the judges. He did not say that that opinion was correct, but he had stated the grounds upon which it rested. The principal objection, however, in the case under discussion, arose from a defect in the book. The book containing the names of persons liable to become jurors was defective. A certain number of names which ought to have been there were not found in it. With this, however, the sheriff had nothing to do. He was merely bound to take the names from the book. No blame could be attributed to him; and, therefore, he apprehended that the learned judges had given no opinion to the effect of that stated by his noble and learned friend. He (the Lord Chancellor), however, admitted that the proved evil was one requiring a remedy. If the book was defective—if names were omitted from it which ought to have been inserted, or if names were inserted which ought to have been omitted—then he admitted that a jury might be improperly impanelled, and that that was an evil which required a remedy. He had already directed his attention to the subject; he would continue to direct his attention to the subject, and if he found it possible to provide an adequate remedy, that was, supposing the existence at present of no actual remedy, then he would bring in a Bill to supply the omission. In fact, the defect had arisen out of the legislative measure introduced for the purpose of reforming the law relative to juries. The common law did not apply to the case in question, and no provision had been made by the legislature to provide for the defect. But if the fault lay in the sheriff, if he was not indifferent, the case was then open to challenge to the array under the common law.—Lord CAMPBELL was glad to hear that his noble and learned friend had devoted his attention to the subject, and that he would continue so to devote it. He was sure, however, that, on mature consideration, he would find that the opinion of the learned judges was, that challenge to the array was taken away, because they said that unindifference or default on the part of the sheriff were the only grounds for a challenge to the array. Now in the case under question, it appeared that the power of returning the jury was taken out of the hands of the sheriff, and there could, therefore, be no challenge. The only grounds for challenge were entirely lost. However, he was satisfied with the assurance given by his noble and learned friend, that the subject should receive his full consideration.

LAW OF DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

THURSDAY, Feb. 13.—Lord CAMPBELL laid on the table of the House two Bills similar to those which he had presented to their lordships' House last session upon this subject. By the law of England a creditor could not proceed against a debtor unless the latter were within the jurisdiction of the Court in which the action was to be tried, and process accordingly served upon him; so that if he chose to go abroad he might there live in the receipt of 10,000*l.* a year without the creditor being able to proceed against him. He (Lord Campbell) had proposed that process might be served upon the debtor although living in a foreign country; then that, having ample opportunity to make any defence which he might purpose making, there might be judgment against him, upon which the whole of his property might be taken in execution. Their lordships had unanimously approved of that measure, and it had been sent down to the House of Commons. But there by an unfortunate misunderstanding it had been lost. A clause had been introduced excepting Scotland from the operation of the measure, so that the debtor might go to Holyrood House and there live in as a sanctuary. He was happy to say, however, that he had had a communication with the Lord Advocate of Scotland, and he had informed him (Lord C.) that there had been a misunderstanding in this matter, but that, as at present advised, he would offer no opposition to the measure. He (Lord C.) therefore now hoped that those Bills would pass both Houses without opposition, and he was sure they would produce very great improvement in the law upon this subject.—The Bills were then read a first time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

LAW OF SETTLEMENT.

TUESDAY, Feb. 11.—Sir J. GRAHAM said, he had laid on the table at the close of last session a Bill, in the hope of its undergoing free discussion in the recess, and of his receiving aid from the public, in order to amend it. He would now proceed to lay before the House his present Bill, as the best return which he could make to the comments and suggestions which had been offered him. In his Bill of last year there were four points prominently treated. First, he had proposed great alterations in the law of settlement by proposing that all other causes of settlement should be repealed, and that birth should be the sole ground of settlement hereafter. Secondly, as to removals, he had proposed seven checks to the summary power now in existence, and it was not necessary for him to repeat more than one of them at present, by which he proposed that, five years' industrial residence in one locality should not give an absolute settlement to any individual, but should place him in such a situation that, though without a settlement, he could not be removed. His third branch related to appeals on the law of removal, and his fourth to the removal of Scotch and Irish paupers to their respective countries. To the two last branches no serious objections were made; but the strongest were made to the two first, the substitution of a birth settlement prospectively and retrospectively, and the proposition for the irremovability of parties not having a settlement but having a five years industrial residence. It was his wish at present to meet both those objections. He was not prepared to propose that a retro-active effect should be given to the right of settlement by birth; but he was prepared to propose, that from and after the passing of this Act only prospectively, birth should be the ground of settlement, leaving undisturbed all existing settlements. Of late years a great statistical improvement had been introduced. The registrations, not only of the birth but also of the place of the birth, was now compulsory, and thus facilities were given for proving birth settlements. The interests of the town and the country did not always run in the same direction. The effect of the substitution of a birth settlement, retrospectively and prospectively, was in favour of the town at the expense of the country districts; for towns were the great marts of industry, and attracted the labour of the rural districts. If birth were the only ground of settlement, it was clear that the expense of providing for destitution must be thrown upon the country. The abolition, therefore, of birth settlement retrospectively would be favourable to the rural districts, and not beneficial to the towns. The converse of this was true with respect to irremovability. The clause which provided that five years' industrial residence should render a man irremovable would cause an increase of burden on the towns, and would be a consequent benefit to the country. He was therefore disposed to forego two portions of his former Bill. He would no longer insist on birth settlement retrospectively, and he would withdraw the irremovability arising from a five years' residence. He then called the attention of the House to the advantages which the poor would derive from the other six limitations in his Bill of last year, which he proposed to continue in the present. He then stated that it was his intention to propose that no woman residing with her husband at the time of his death in the parish of his settlement should be removable to her own parish after his death; that no widow, whether living in her husband's parish or elsewhere, should be removable for 12 months after his death; that no legitimate child after its father's death should be removable under 16 from its father's settlement; that no illegitimate child under 16 years of age should be removable from its mother's settlement; that no one becoming chargeable by sickness or accident should be placed under order of removal until he or she had received relief for 40 days consecutively; and, lastly, that persons requiring relief should be relieved wherever they were resident, irrespective of their settlement. He then detailed the substance of the clauses which he had provided for the removal of Irish and Scotch paupers, and for the reparation of any wrong which might be done by illegal removals, and which were precisely the same as those introduced in his Bill of last year. He then came to what he called the most important provision in his measure—it was so important that he would give the fullest time for its consideration before he called upon the House to affirm it on the second reading of the Bill. Dr. Adam Smith doubted whether any poor man ever reached the age of 40 without experiencing the hardship and injustice of the law of settlement, and thought it monstrous that any man should be confined within the narrow limits of his parish either for his residence or his labour. In England and Wales there are 14,500 parishes—their limits are of course very narrow, and yet within them is the poor man restrained. It will be an advantage to the poor man to reduce the number of restrictions which are now placed on the free circulation of his labour, and the number of those small local circles within which he is confined by the present law. He, therefore, proposed to substitute 620 for these 14,500 small districts—in other words, to substitute unions for parishes. If he could induce the House to substitute union settlements for parochial settlements, he should consider himself as having accomplished a great benefit both for the payers and recipients of the rates. He then read several memorials which he had received from boards of guardians in Norfolk and Lancashire, and from Assistant Poor Law Commissioners, and from a meeting of the clerks of boards of guardians, in favour of the alterations which he had just suggested. The right hon. gentleman next proceeded to state in detail the manner in which he proposed to change parochial into union settlements, and the manner in which he intended to apportion the rates to be paid by the different parishes in the union. He proposed that the amount of the poor-rate (abstracting the county rate and other similar charges) paid for the seven years antecedent to the 5th of March, 1845, should fix the relative amount of the burden to be defrayed by each parish. The equity of such an arrangement could not, he thought, be impugned. He should weary the House if he stated all the advantages which he anticipated from these changes; he would therefore conclude by moving for leave to bring in a Bill to consolidate and amend the laws relating to parochial settlement and the relief of the poor, and would recommend it to the justice and humanity of all who were anxious to promote the interests of the poor.—Colonel WOOD (Brecon) thought that this principle of an union settlement would raise alarm.—Mr. BRIGHT saw some difficulties, but, in the face of the pauperism of England, and the imperious necessity for a remedy, was willing to give the measure a fair consideration.—Mr. HENLEY was fearful that this proposition of a union settlement was a prelude to the breaking up of the parochial system of England.—Mr. BROTHERTON and Lord EBRINGTON were disposed to think that the measure would give satisfaction.—Mr. BECKET DENISON regarded the existing law of settlement as absurd and cruel in its operation, and was of opinion that, though the proposed Bill was an immense improvement, it did not go far enough.—Sir JAMES GRAHAM pointed out that some of the objections taken to his measure would lead to the entire abrogation of the law of settlement. He reiterated that parochial settlement, as applied to paupers, originated in an act of Charles II. which he cited.—After a few words from Mr. WAKLY, leave was given to bring in the Bill.

PARLIAMENTARY CHANGES. — The average amount of alterations in the House of Commons is about 17 or 18 per annum; in the present year, however, we find the number to be 21—that is to say, there are in the representative branch of the Legislature 21 gentlemen who had not seats there at the commencement of last session. The names of the places which they sit for are subjoined. Our statement on the subject is taken from Mr. Dodd's Parliamentary Companion—a work now so complete, that it amounts to little less than a biographical dictionary of the House of Commons, and almost a pocket encyclopædia of all Parliamentary matters. The places above referred to are as follows :—Tipperary, Londonderry, Christchurch, Hastings, Huntingdon, Woodstock, Horsham, Lancashire (South), Launceston, Devizes, Kilmarnock, Enniskillen, Limerick, Birmingham, Lancashire (North), Abingdon, Dartmouth, besides a few others which were vacated before the beginning of last session, and filled up afterward.

"CONSOLIDATION OF CLAUSES" BILLS.—The table of the House of Commons already groans beneath the superincumbent pressure of three new Bills, in a printed shape, for the introduction of which leave was obtained a few nights back. The first is the Railway Clauses Consolidation Bill, which is entitled, "A Bill for Consolidating in one Act certain Provisions usually inserted in Acts authorizing the Making of Railways," and contains as many as 109 clauses or sections; this Act is not to extend to Scotland. The second is the Lands Clauses Consolidation Bill, which is entitled, "A Bill for Consolidating in one Act certain Provisions usually inserted in Acts authorizing the Taking of Lands for Undertakings of a Public Nature," and contains as many as 124 clauses. The third and last is the Companies Clauses Consolidation Bill, which is entitled "A Bill for Consolidating in one Act certain Provisions usually inserted in Acts with respect to the Constitution of Companies incorporated for carrying on Undertakings of a public nature," and contains 161 clauses for dissection by a committee of the whole House. The operation of all these Acts is intended to be purely prospective, that is, they will only affect future undertakings, and not those concerns already in existence. It may be worth while to notice a few of the provisions (for we have not space at present for a regular analysis) of the new Railway Bill. The clauses 5 to 19 relate to the construction of the railway. Clauses 20 to 30 refer to the powers of the company with regard to the temporary use of lands during the construction of the said railway (for which compensation is to be made); clauses 15 and 46 empower the Board of Trade to require a railway company to erect screens at those points where the railroad adjoins the turnpike-road, in order to prevent the danger arising from the frightening of horses by the engines and carriages, under a penalty of 20*l*. for non-compliance. The board is further empowered to modify the construction of certain roads and bridges, &c. in cases where a strict compliance with the Act of Parliament may be impossible or inconvenient. That portion of the Bill which relates to the carrying of passengers and goods on the railway, and the tolls to be taken, occupies clauses 66 to 88. All these measures are under the superintendence of Lord Granville Somerset and Mr. Greene.

THE MAGISTRATE.

Summary.

THE event of the week is Sir JAMES GRAHAM'S new Settlement Bill, which has been treated of in an article that appears below. We have only further to announce that Mr. SYMONS, to whom we were indebted for the very valuable Forms in Bastardy, has undertaken to prepare a complete series of Magistrates' Forms, which will be printed as speedily as they can be drawn with the consideration necessary to ensure correctness.

SETTLEMENT BILL, No. II.

WE regard this Bill, and the speech with which Sir JAMES GRAHAM introduced it on Tuesday last, as interesting illustrations of the new art of experimental legislation. In days of yore, when the powers of Parliament were somewhat less prolific, and had not attained to that perfection of despatch which now produces a statute per night,(a)—in those dull times, when each measure was the result of some slight reflection, it was the way with Governments not to introduce a new Bill until they had not only inquired into its applicability to the purpose in view, but had, to some extent, matured it for the further deliberation of Parliament: and the more important the change to be effected, the more care and attention were bestowed on this preliminary labour. All such proceedings are now superseded by an ingenious system, which not only edifies the public, but relieves the Cabinet and Parliament of all sorts of trouble and responsibility. The plan simply consists in putting forth the first project that strikes the imagination of the Minister in the shape of a speech and a Bill, and in begging people in general, and Poor Law guardians in particular, to supply ideas upon it, under cover to the Home Office. It was thus the last Bill was treated.

I seized (says Sir James) with anxiety the opportunity of the approaching recess to lay the Bill before the public, in the hope that during the recess it would undergo free discussion, and that I might receive aid from that discussion, and profit by the hints thrown out. (Hear.) In that expectation I have not been disappointed. (Hear.)

And once more on this amended project—

I wish it to be understood that I have no intention of pressing this measure to a second reading till there is time to collect the opinions of persons best informed upon these subjects, and I commit the plan to that species of examination with entire confidence as to the merits of the measure. I commit it to the favourable consideration of all men of humanity who have laboured sedulously to promote the well-being of the poor. * * * *

The provision which I now mean to lay before you is one of such great importance as to induce me very much to wish that some time should elapse before it becomes necessary for me again to press it upon the attention of the Legislature, for I earnestly desire that it should receive the fullest attention, and undergo the most searching investigation.

So do we; and it shall be no fault of ours if it do not receive an investigation quite as searching, if not rather more so, than that which the Government shifts from its own shoulders. Whether it be quite correct that Ministers, deriving immense salaries from the public, should thus cast their own work on those who pay them to do it themselves, is a matter into which it is bootless to inquire; we are willing to concede to Sir JAMES GRAHAM that under existing circumstances this may be an advantage to the people

Let us state in brief the new plan thrown down for discussion. Yielding with inimitable pliancy and in the most gracious manner to the objections made, first we believe in this Journal, Sir JAMES says—

It is my wish to meet these objections (hear, hear), after having given them the best attention in my power. I am not prepared any longer to propose that a retroactive effect should be given to birth settlement. What I now propose, with the permission of the House, is, that birth should only have a prospective effect. I see very great advantages in limiting the proposition as regards further settlement to a prospective operation.

From "retroactive" to "prospective" operation, the transition is conceded as soon as asked. The reason alleged is that—"We have lately introduced a great statistical improvement. (Hear.) Our mode of registering births as recently enacted was a very great improvement upon the former law." This seems to be a new thought, which had not struck the Home Minister before; ergo, the births are not to be retroactive. The next result of the "suggestions and objections" is an entire abandonment of the quinquennial residence industrial irremovability. We lay claim to a large share of the glory of having immolated this beautiful creation of the last Bill. Sir JAMES thus states his reasons :—

It is quite clear that birth settlement was in favour of the towns at the expense of the rural districts. (Hear, hear.) The towns are the great marts of industry—the great centres of capital, and they do attract labour from the rural districts. Thus the population becomes redundant on account of the supply of labour from those districts. On the other hand, the abolition of birth settlement retrospectively would be a measure favourable to the rural districts, but would not confer benefit on the towns. (Hear, hear.) Parties are attracted to the towns, the marts of industry, by the greater demand for labour; thus it is clear that conferring a settlement by five years' industrial residence would cause a great burden to the towns and confer great advantages on the rural districts. But I am bound to hold the balance evenly (hear); I am bound not to impose upon the towns the extra burden which the measure laid on the table last session proposed.

Sir JAMES, who proposed his last Bill with just as perfect a confidence as he does now, sees "it is quite clear" how unjust it was. Vulgar people will want to know why this clairvoyance comes so late; but that is upon the assumption that Ministers are to consider their measures. They know better; and we proceed to assist Sir JAMES in setting that task to the people. The quinquennial irremovability is at an end—Requiescat in pace! But the widows' irremovability is to remain; and it is also provided that no child under sixteen years of age shall be removable from its father; that no legitimate or illegitimate child under sixteen years of age shall be removable from its mother; and that no one becoming chargeable by sickness or accident shall be placed under order of removal till he or she has received relief for forty days consecutively. All this is well enough.

But now comes the great change. Sir JAMES proposes that paupers should be henceforth deemed to be settled in unions, and not in parishes.

I beg to call the attention of hon. gentlemen to this material fact,—that there are in England and Wales as many as 14,500 parishes and townships. It requires no observations from me to shew how narrow the limits are which so minute a subdivision necessarily creates; and within those limits does the existing state of the Poor-law confine and restrain the labour of the poor man. I think, and I hope the House will likewise think so, and it would be an immense advantage to the poor man, and no disadvantage to the wealthier classes, at once to remove that restriction. (Hear.) By reducing the number of places within which settlements may be acquired, I expect to be able to give a more free circulation than ever to the labours of the poor. I do not propose that the whole of the 14,500 places should be rated in a mass; on the contrary, I think that a national poor-rate would be most objectionable; but I am sure that no valid objection can be urged to substituting 620 divisions for 14,500. There are in England 620 unions. Now, if I should be so fortunate as to induce the House to substitute settlement by unions for parochial settlement—if I can reduce the number of districts conferring the right of settlement from 14,500 to 620, I shall consider myself as having effected a great change for the better, and as having bestowed an immense advantage upon the ratepayers, and upon those who may become the recipients of those rates.

Sir JAMES rightly states that this is no new principle; inasmuch as it is to be found in the 33rd section of the Poor Law Act, where assuredly a permission is given to the parishes of a union to make themselves one for purposes of settlement, if all their guardians agree, which we believe they scarcely ever have done yet. Then comes an equally important project, namely, that parishes shall hereafter pay a proportion to the expenses of the union to which they belong, to be ascertained and PERMANENTLY fixed, according to the proportion they may have contributed, upon an average of the seven years' actual payments ending March 1844.

This is the substance of the Bill which the Government flings into the arena of discussion.

The first striking feature of this Bill is, that it leaves the present law of settlement in the main unaltered for the next twelve or fourteen years. All existing settlements remain in full force during the lives of those who now possess them. Not an iota of the old law will pass away: the host of reports from BURROW to BITTLESTON; sessions cases, old and new, and text-books, from NOLAN to ARCHBOLD, will remain in full force and effect. Even the prospective generation will remain with their mothers for sixteen years to come. To provisions thus retropassive, (a) it would be difficult to find an objection prospectively active.

(a) Neither House sat as many nights as they produced Acts last session.

Let us turn to the grand crotchet of union settlements. And here we must avow our perplexity. Having read the Times of Thursday last with becoming deference, we were at first disposed to join its monody on parishes, and bewail the disruption of rural localities. But we confess ourselves to be people prone to dull realities and matter of fact ways of viewing things; and, to our shame be it spoken, though nowise enamoured of Sir James's proposal, yet, for the life of us, we do not see why being settled pauperically in union No. 6 should exterminate a man's birth-place, or abolish the hills, dales and purling streams of his locus in quo, and its divers endearments, or take away his powers of saying he belongs to his parish; or, in short, why it should prevent his being wholly and entirely "retroactively" parochial. If he becomes a pauper now, he is a union and not a parish pauper; and from the union, and not from the parish, he receives relief. When, however, he emerges from pauperism, he is just as much a parishioner as before, and so, for aught we see, he may be when (if at all) Sir James Graham's Bill passes. The only difference will be that there will be much less removal from places in which paupers reside; and, more rather than less parochiality; for within unions there will cease to be removal at all. And it is among neighbouring parishes that there has been most removal. As far as this goes, the proposal is a step on the right road. We should be sorry to be mistaken; if this were really a plan for the destruction of parishes, and the overthrow of all social haunts and rural homes, we should oppose it manfully, and though we do not excel in heroics, and rather avoid the "Cambyses vein" than otherwise, we should denounce such a measure quite as sincerely, and perchance not less forcibly than our great namesake, the leading journal. But perfectly satisfied that no such disruption can ensue from directing orders of removal to the guardians of a union instead of to the overseers of a parish, or by lessening the number of removals, we must alike decline swelling the rhapsodies of newspaper romancists or the invective of Parliamentary partisans.

The proposed mode of rating is, we think, decidedly bad. Why is the proportion of the last seven years to be immutably affixed on the rate-payers of parishes? Why is the improved industry of parish A to be eternally deprived of its just reward for that better management and alleviation of burdens of which it has entitled itself to enjoy the benefit? Why i parish B to be saved harmless at the expense of its neighbours from any future growth of pauperism within its bounds? And why, when the ratio of increase in places varies almost incalculably, is the relative proportion of their burdens to be incapable of adjustment? These objections must be answered, and answered with effect, before t' provision can be passed into a law. We enter our humble protest against the perilous mania which besets these times of putting futurity into the clutches of septennial averages. What possible relation can they bear to the unforeseen changes and chances of time to come? What effect can they have but to be continually unfit for their purpose and perpetually wrong? A man may just as well measure his grandfather for his son's clothes. Nothing could be more ridiculous than the regulation of tithe payments by floating septennial averages, except Sir James's new proposal of fixing rates for ever by one septennial standard. We do hope that this is the last time we shall hear of this Vandal folly.

There is another great objection to the proposal; it consists in the extreme difficulty parishes already experience in knowing how their money goes, and which will render them still less disposed to intrust the blind control of its distribution to boards of guardians.

As a whole, Sir James Graham's present Bill is an improvement on the last. Our objection to it is, that it does not go nearly far enough in the right direction. Sir James Graham begins his speech by echoing the general principles on which settlement laws ought to proceed, and which have this basis, that "removal is an evil."(a) If so, why not abolish it in toto? Why is the benefit to be confined to the unions? Why not multiply it by 620, and give it to the kingdom?

We have given this subject much thought; and without pretending to "perfect confidence," we humbly submit this scheme of settlement as not unworthy of the consideration of the country:—

1. To abolish all removals, and render them illegal.

2. To provide that every pauper shall be relieved wherever he may become chargeable.

3. That the relief of the pauper be defrayed by the union, as at present, out of the general fund; but that such relief be entered and classed as relief given to the parish in which the pauper became chargeable.

4. That the proportion in which each parish of a union should be rated in each year should vary according to the proportion of relief so entered and classed to such parish as aforesaid during the year ending on the 31st December then next preceding.

This plan, we think, would clearly sweep away the present sources of litigation, with all the expense of appeals and removals. It would not impair any of the inducements to industrious occupation; it would, on the contrary, give free adaptation of the supply to the demand for labour; and each parish would have additional incentive to lessen the burden of its own pauperism; and this would certainly not be the case where the proportion of burden was rendered insensible of diminution even by the decrease of the burden itself.

With great deference we submit this our Bill for the Improvement of Settlements and the Abolition of Removals, to the judgment of a discerning public. S.

(a) We do not see why Sir James is to possess a monopoly in coining words.

(a) This principle was set forth in an article in the December number of the Law Magazine, nearly in the same words as were used by Sir James Graham.

The following gentlemen are to be raised to the rank of Queen's Counsel:—Messrs. Lee, Parry, and Wood, of the Equity Bar; and Messrs. Humfrey, Hayward, Butt, Russell Gurney, and Montagu Chambers, of the Common Law Bar.—Evening paper.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

A few important judgments in cases that had been hung up, have been delivered since our last. Some of them will be found reported verbatim in this number; the others, given too late in the week to be prepared for the press, will appear next Saturday. By dint of exertion, we are enabled to place in the hands of our readers the New Rules and Orders in Bankruptcy, just issued. The forms prescribed are important, and therefore to make room for them, we have been compelled to exclude much of the usual information of the Law Times.

RULES AND ORDERS

Made under the 7 & 8 Vict. cap. 70, sec. 14, for the better carrying into effect the several purposes of the said Act, the 11th day of January, 1845.

It is ordered as follows, that is to say :

1. That petitions under this Act shall be delivered, fairly written on parchment, to the Registrar of the day sitting at the Court of Bankruptcy, between the hours of eleven and two, who shall number the same as they are received, and at the rising of the Court shall deliver the same to the Commissioner of the day, who shall allot the petitions by ballot among the Commissioners of the Court of Bankruptcy in London and the Commissioners of the country districts, regard being had to the usual place of residence of the petitioner, the residences of the major part in number and value of his creditors, and the situation of the property to be administered. And every petition, and the number and allotment thereof, shall be entered in the private minute-book of the commissioner of the day; provided, that if for any sufficient cause, agreed by any two commissioners, any commissioner shall decline to act in the matter of any petition, or other cause shall be shewn for altering the allotment, such petition shall be allotted in such manner as such two commissioners shall direct.

2. That two fair copies of every such petition shall be delivered to the said registrar at the same time with the original petition, one for the use of the commissioner to whom the same shall be allotted, and one for the use of the person to be appointed to preside at the meetings and for the inspection of creditors.

3. That the sum of 10*l*. or such other sum, not exceeding 20*l*. as the commissioner to whom the petition is allotted, shall direct, shall be deposited with the messenger previous to the appointment of any meeting of creditors, for the costs of such meeting or meetings, the costs of serving notices upon creditors, and other necessary expenses; the residue, if any, after payment of such expenses, to be accounted for to the petitioner.

4. That the notices required by the 2nd section of this Act shall be transmitted through the post by the messenger of the Court, who shall be allowed the sum of 4d. and no more for the filling up of the forms, addressing the same, the messenger's signature, and the postage stamp.

5. That the notices required by the 4th, 11th, and 12th sections of this Act shall be served by the messenger of the Court (if within ten miles of the General Post Office or of the court), or by his agent, if at a greater distance.

6. No person, not being a creditor or the authorized agent or attorney of a creditor, except the appointed president and one clerk, and the petitioner, accompanied by two persons, shall be permitted to be present at any meeting, or to inspect the petition, schedule, or other document, unless so directed in writing by the commissioner.

7 The forms set forth in the annexed schedule shall, mutatis mutandis, be used under this Act.

Petition for carrying into effect proposal for future payment or compromise of Debts, under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 70.

In the COURT of BANKRUPTCY, London.

The humble petition of

SHEWETH, That your petitioner being a debtor unable to meet his engagements with his creditors, and not being a trader within the meaning of the statutes now in force relating to bankrupts, petitions this honourable Court under the provisions of the statute passed in the Parliament holden in the 7th and 8th years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for facilitating arrangements between Debtors and Creditors," with the concurrence of one-third in number and value of his creditors, as is testified by their signing this his petition.

That the following is a full account of your petitioner's debts, and the consideration thereof, and the names, residences, and occupations of his creditors, and also a full account of your petitioner's estate and effects, whether in possession, reversion, or expectancy, and of all debts and rights due to or claimed by him, and of all property of what kind soever held in trust for him, viz.—

Name of Creditor.	Residence.	Occupation.	When Debt contracted, & Consideration thereof.	Amount of Debt.

That the inability of your petitioner to meet his engagements with his creditors arises from

That for the future payment or compromise of such debts and engagements your petitioner proposes and one-third in number and value of your petitioner's creditors having assented to such proposal;

Your petitioner therefore prays that such proposal, or such modification thereof as by the majority of his creditors may be determined, may be carried into effect under the superintendence and control of this Honourable Court, and that he may in the meantime be protected from arrest by order of the said Court.

The Court of Chancery.—By an order of the Court of Chancery made on Wednesday last, a further reduction has taken place in the fees payable by suitors in that court. When the office of the taxing masters was established by the Act of the session of 1842, a fee of 4 per cent. on the amount of every bill of costs as taxed was imposed. That fee has now been reduced to 3 per cent. and we understand that this reduction amounts to nearly 5,600*l.* a year.

PROMOTIONS, APPOINTMENTS, ETC.

Whitehall, Jan. 16, 1845.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed Francis Soames, of Wokingham, in the county of Berks, Gent. to be a Master Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

Whitehall, Jan. 7.—The Right Hon. Sir Nicholas Conyngham Tindal, Knt., Lord Chief Justice of Her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas, has appointed Peter Day, of the city of Norwich, gent., to be one of the Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women, in and for the city of Norwich, and county of the same city, also in and for the county of Norfolk.

Whitehall, Jan. 7.—The Right Hon. Sir Nicholas Conyngham Tindal, Knt. Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas, has appointed Thomas Tudor Trevor, of Guisborough, in the county of York, Gent. to be one of the Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women, in and for the North Riding of the county of York.

CIVIL SERVICE.—Excise Department.

Dec. 3—George William Draper, to be a Junior Clerk, vice F. Bryan, promoted.

We stated, in referring to the legal appointments of the government, that it was generally believed that Mr. Baron Gurney had obtained a promise, that upon his resigning his son should obtain a silk gown. We are assured that there is no foundation for such a report.—Chronicle.

We understand the office of Counsel to the Irish Office, now vacant for eight months, since the death of Mr. O'Hanlon, has been conferred on Mr. John E. Batty, of the Irish bar.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

QUESTIONS AT THE EXAMINATION.

Hilary Term, 1845.

I.—PRELIMINARY.

1. Where, and with whom did you serve your clerkship?

2. State the particular branch or branches of the law to which you have principally applied yourself during your clerkship.

3. Mention some of the principal law books which you have read and studied.

4. Have you attended any, and what, law lectures?

II.—COMMON AND STATUTE LAW AND PRACTICE OF THE COURTS.

5. Give the names of some of the principal kinds of action at common law.

6. In a case of seduction, who is the party to bring the action, and what action must be brought?

7. When is a master answerable for damage done by his servant? In the case of a coachman driving against and injuring a cart, must the master be present to render himself liable?

8. Within what period must an action be brought on a simple contract debt?

9. How long does a writ remain in force? and if the defendant keeps out of the way to avoid service, is there any mode of compelling his appearance?

10. In a writ of summons, would it be a sufficient description if the defendant was described as "A.B. of the City of London;" and what description is required by the statute?

11. Writ served in any Term or vacation—Within what time should the plaintiff declare to prevent judgment of non pros.?

12. An action is brought on a charter-party; the defendant's witnesses reside at Singapore—How can he procure their testimony?

13. In an action for goods sold and delivered, the plaintiff claims by his particulars 25*l.* Before plea, defendant takes out a summons to stay on payment of 15*l.* only, which the plaintiff refuses to accept: on the trial the plaintiff only recovers 15*l.*, to what costs will he be entitled?

14. A and B, partners, bring an action for a client C. When the cause is at issue, A dies, B continues the action, and fails. C afterwards refuses to pay the costs incurred—Who must sue C for the costs?

15. In a town cause, if an issue is served in Hilary Term, or in the vacation preceding, and the plaintiff does not proceed, when is the earliest period in which the defendant can move for judgment as in case of a nonsuit? State the practice also in a country cause; and would it make any difference if the issue was joined in a non-issuable term, as Easter, instead of an issuable term, as Hilary?

16. A plaintiff obtains judgment on a promissory-note for 18*l.* with 6*l.* for his costs—Can he take the defendant in execution?

17. When a cause goes to trial, and a juror is withdrawn, what effect has that upon the costs of the trial?

18. A sheriff puts an execution into a defendant's house. The day after he has a notice served upon him that the goods belong to the defendant's brother-in-law. Under these circumstances, how must he proceed?

19. An attorney at Christmas delivers bills to five clients. One for borrowing 1,000*l.* on mortgage; one for defending an action for a libel; one for filing a bill on equity to compel the completion of a purchase; one for defending a client at the sessions house, charged with an assault; and the fifth for preparing a marriage settlement. Are any, and which of these bills, liable to be taxed? And if the bills are delivered on the 1st January, and not paid, when can the attorney commence an action to recover them? If the attorney had died, and the bills were delivered by his executor, would that make any difference as to the taxation?

III.—CONVEYANCING.

20. In preparing an abstract of title on a sale, is the vendor's solicitor personally liable for omitting to state all the incumbrances within his knowledge? And in examining an abstract with the title-deeds on behalf of a purchaser, what would be the consequence to the solicitor personally of his overlooking notice of any incumbrance contained in any instrument abstracted and produced for examination, whether such notice were contained in the abstract or otherwise?

21. What protection does the assignment of a term of years in trust for a purchaser of the inheritance afford the latter? and in what cases is such protection annulled or qualified by his having had at, or prior to, such assignment, notice, express or implied, of the estate or incumbrance against which he may claim such protection?

22. Where a power of appointment over real estate is executed, from whom does the appointee immediately take in point of estate, viz. the party creating, or the party executing the power? and state the reason.

23. Where a power is executed by will, at what point of time does it take effect?—And would there be any difference in this respect if the power were executed by deed with a power of revocation to the appointor?

24. Prior to the Fines and Recoveries Act (3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 74), if tenant in tail, with the immediate remainder or reversion in fee to himself, levied a fine, he created what was called a base fee, which immediately merged in the reversion, and became subject to any charges affecting the latter, the title to which he was also in future obliged to shew. What difference in this respect has been made by the above statute, both as respects past and future cases?

25. What are the requisites to the valid executions of wills made since the present Wills Act came into operation as respects the age of the testator, form of attestation, and otherwise?

26 State the effect of marriage upon the will of a man before and since the Wills Act.

27. A testator devises real estate to A for life, with remainder over to A's first and other sons successively in tail male, with remainder to testator's own right heirs—under such a devise, when does the ultimate remainder become vested in the heir of the testator, viz. at his decease, or at the time of the failure of the prior limitations?

28. A. dies seized of real estate without issue, an intestate, leaving his grandfather and his (A's) mother, and a brother and sister him surviving—Which of these is his heir?

29. In a devise of real estate to A in fee, in trust for B in fee, A by deed disclaims the estate—What is the effect of such disclaimer? viz. does it vest the estate in the testator's heir, or in B?

30. A testator seized in fee of lands, and also of the tithes of them, devises the lands without expressly including or shewing his intention to include the tithes -Will the latter pass to the devisee of the lands?

31. Where under the Tithe Commutation Act, tithes have been merged by an owner in fee simple of both the tithes and the lands out of which they are issuing, and he afterwards sells the lands as tithe or rent-charge free—Must he deduce his title to the tithes?

32. In a register county is it necessary that the memorial of a deed should be executed by a granting party, and attested by one of the witnesses to the execution of the deed by a granting party? or can the deed be duly registered without either, and which of these formalities?

33. If a vendor claim leasehold estate in a register county as executor or legatee, can a purchaser from him insist upon the will being registered in either case, and state a reason?

34. In a register county where the vendor of real estate is both heir-at-law and devisee, is it material that the will should be registered? and is it material if he should be devisee only?

IV.—EQUITY, AND PRACTICE OF THE COURTS.

35. If a defendant who has appeared and answered an original bill cannot be found to be served with a subpœna to answer a bill of revivor, what is the course of the plaintiff in such a case?

36. When a husband and wife are defendants in a suit, in what case is the wife entitled to an order to answer separately?

37. Does the "prochein ami" of an infant incur any and what liability in becoming such prochein ami for prosecuting a suit?

38. What is the difference in effect of the allowance of a partial demurrer and that of a general demurrer?

39. Where a plaintiff is suing a defendant both at law and in equity for the same matter, what is the course of proceeding to be adopted by the defendant under such circumstances?

40. Can a defendant in a suit be examined as a witness on behalf of a co-defendant in the same suit, and under what authority?

41. In what cases does a suit abate so as to render a bill of revivor necessary?

42. In what cases, and upon what grounds, is a writ of "ne exeat regno" granted?

43. Is there any and what mode, and under what authority applied, for the prevention of the transfer of stock standing in the books of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, and for the payment of the dividends thereon by the bank without resorting to a suit?

44. Can witnesses be examined vivâ voce in chancery, and upon what occasions?

45. At what distance of time do deeds, bonds, and other writings prove themselves, and thereby render their proof unnecessary?

46. In what case is a mortgagee compelled to file a bill of foreclosure to enable him to enforce payment of his principal and interest?

47. Is it necessary in all cases to institute a suit for the purpose of having guardians appointed to, and of obtaining an allowance for the maintenance and education of infants? If not, state the exceptions to the rule.

48. In suits to carry into execution the suits of a will, in what case is it necessary or desirable that the heir-at-law should be made a party?

49. Explain the difference between legal assets and equitable assets, and state how each are administered amongst creditors.

V.—BANKRUPTCY AND PRACTICE OF THE COURTS.

50. State the proceedings now necessary to obtain a fiat in bankruptcy.

51. What amount of debt or debts will support a fiat?

52. Should the petitioning creditor's debt prove to have been insufficient, is the fiat void or not? and state the reasons.

53. Can a compulsory act of bankruptcy now be effected, and by what means, since the abolition of imprisonment for debt?

54. Can a creditor who has taken his debtor in execution, or who has taken his goods under a fieri facias, sue out a fiat against him?

55. Is a mortgage debt made payable only after six months' notice, a good petitioning creditor's debt, if notice has not been given?

56. Is it necessary that a petitioning creditor should prove his debt under the fiat before he can vote in the choice of assignees?

57. Doth the death of a bankrupt affect the fiat, and in what way?

58. A debt cannot be proved if barred by the Statute of Limitations. To what time does the six years apply:—to the time of proof, or of the issuing of the fiat?

59. Does bankruptcy affect the rights of the bankrupt as executor, and does property in his hands, as such executor, pass to the assignees?

60. What alteration has the late bankrupt law made respecting the bankrupt's certificate? and state the old and new practice.

61. If a plaintiff in an action at law, or suit in equity, become bankrupt, can the assignees continue the action or suit in his name?

62. Can a landlord distrain for rent when the messenger is in actual possession of the bankrupt's goods on the premises?

63. Does a lease to the bankrupt vest in the assignees, and are they liable to the bankrupt's covenants, or can they repudiate the lease? and if so, is the bankrupt liable to payment of future rent, and performance of future covenants?

64. If the drawer, acceptor, and first indorsee of a bill of exchange, become bankrupt, can a second indorsee, who holds the bill for a valuable consideration, prove the whole amount under each estate, and receive dividends from time to time on such amount, and to what extent?

VI.—CRIMINAL LAW, AND PROCEEDINGS BEFORE JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

65. Are there any, and what forgeries, now punishable with death?

66. State what is meant by "Exhibiting articles of the peace," and how the same is effected.

67. What is a libel?

68. Can a libeller be prosecuted criminally, as well as proceeded against civilly? and if so, in what manner and for what reason?

69. Can the truth of a libel be made a defence to a criminal prosecution, as it can to a civil action? and if not, for what reason?

70. What is burglary? and state some of the requisites to support the charge.

71. What is the legal distinction between the crimes of murder and manslaughter?

72. What is a criminal information, and under what circumstances will it be granted?

73. By what court, and on what evidence, will leave to file a criminal information be allowed?

74. In what cases is it usual to grant an information against magistrates?

75. When will an information lie against parish officers?

76. Define the offence of perjury, and the circumstances which constitute the offence.

77. What evidence is necessary of the oath having been taken?

78. State the consequences to the offender of a conviction of perjury.

79. Has there been any, and what, recent alteration in the course of proceeding in the Crown Office?

THE OXFORD CONVOCATION.

The following are the questions submitted on behalf of the Board of Heads of Houses and Proctors, respecting the propositions to be brought before Convocation in the matter of Mr. Ward; and opinion of the Solicitor-General, Sir Charles Wetherell, Dr. Addams, and Mr. Cowling:—

"QUESTIONS.

"1. Whether the University has any power of depriving a party for any cause of any degree which has been conferred upon him?

"2. Whether the extracts given in the notice issued by the Board of Heads of Houses and Proctors contain sufficient cause to justify the degradation of Mr. Ward?

"3. Whether the House of Convocation has he power of degradation in this case?

"4. Whether in proceeding to degrade Mr. Ward, the University will render itself liable to a writ of mandamus at his suit?"

"ANSWER.

"1. We are of opinion that the University has the power to degrade, and that that power is by no means limited or confined to cases of prior conviction of an offence by a court of competent jurisdiction, nor to those particular cases enumerated in the statutes to which degradation is specifically annexed.

"2. We are of opinion that the extracts set forth in the notice contain sufficient cause to justify the House of Convocation, as representing the University, in taking cognisance of them, and coming to a decision on the subject, with a view to the degradation of Mr. Ward; but whether, in the result, the charge, preferred against him shall appear sufficient to justify the house in degrading him, is a conclusion which must rest entirely with, and be formed by, the members of Convocation upon consideration of the whole matter.

"3. Provided Convocation shall upon consideration come to the conclusion that Mr. Ward ought to be degraded, we are aware of no ground for impeaching, or questioning the validity of the degradation.

"4. If the determination of Convocation should be to degrade Mr. Ward, and he should apply to the Court of Queen's Bench for a writ of mandamus to restore him, we are of opinion that it will be an answer to it, that her Majesty is Visitor of the University, and that the subject lies exclusively within the province of her Majesty as Visitor, and that any complaint against the proceedings of Convocation must be made to her Majesty in that capacity, and cannot be withdrawn from her jurisdiction.

SECONDARIES COURT—WEDNESDAY.

(Before Mr. Secondary POTTER.)

BARRISTERS AND ATTORNEYS' CLERKS—NIND v. IRWIN.

In this case, which was merely an action for goods sold and delivered, Mr. Neale, a barrister, appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. Adams, clerk to an attorney, named Richardson, appeared for the defendant.

Upon the case being called on,

Mr. Adams objected to the trial proceeding, on the ground that the secondary had no jurisdiction. There were two issues to try, whereas upon the record the letter s had been left out, making the word issue instead of issues. He therefore contended that he had no jurisdiction beyond trying one issue.

Mr. Neale said he wished to know before he answered that objection, whether attorneys' clerks were allowed to practise in that court?

The Secondary said he allowed them to watch the cases and examine witnesses.

Mr. J. B. Hughes (barrister) said he believed there was a rule of that court, not to allow attorneys' clerks to practise.

The Secondary believed not. He remembered, however, a case which had occurred, of one attorney's clerk attending for the clerk of either the plaintiff or defendant's attorney, and he (Mr. Potter) refused to hear him.

Mr. Hughes thought it was a system that ought not to be tolerated, and that the litigant parties should be represented by their attorneys or counsel. It was not allowed either in the Bankruptcy or Insolvent Courts, and the debt sought to be recovered was 21*l.*; the attorney even could not appear, but was obliged to have counsel. He was of opinion that the Secondary, being the superior judge of that court, ought to insist upon the parties appearing either by their attorneys or counsel.

Mr. Neale said that the consequence of attorneys' clerks conducting cases was great irregularity and confusion.

The Secondary: Not so; he had known many clerks conduct cases much better than attorneys, and even gentlemen at the bar.

COURT OF CHANCERY.—The ancient hall of Lincoln's-inn, in which the Chancellors of England have sat for so many years, is nearly stripped of all the armorial bearings which decorated its walls, and the stained glass that ornamented the windows, the whole of which have been removed to the new hall, Lincoln's-inn. The admired picture of Paul pleading before Agrippa, which has so long ornamented the end of the hall, has also been removed to the new building. It is said that it is in contemplation to add the present kitchen (which is only divided by a passage) to the present hall, and then divide the building into three courts, one for the Lord Chancellor, the others for the Vice-Chancellors. If this plan is carried into execution, the temporary courts at present occupied by Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce and Vice-Chancellor Wigram will be pulled down.—Globe.

PROXY VOTING IN PUBLIC COMPANIES.—The right of voting by proxy in railway, mining, and other public companies, although at all times legal, has, until very recently, been subject to a heavy pecuniary charge, to which the generality of shareholders were unwilling to submit, unless where the exercise of the vote was called for upon strong grounds. Under the old law, no proprietor could vote as proxy for an absent proprietor without the production of an authority, such instrument bearing a 30s. stamp. This was found to be a practical grievance, inasmuch as it was not always convenient for shareholders residing in distant parts of the kingdom to attend in person the meetings of companies in which they held shares. By the act of the 7th of Victoria, cap. 21, the stamp duty has been reduced to 2s. 6d. but the statute contains some stringent provisions which will, it is conceived, have a salutary effect. The 6th section provides, that any such instrument shall authorize the proxy to vote upon any matter at any one meeting of the proprietors or shareholders of the company, the time of holding such meeting being specified in such instrument, or at any adjournment of such meeting, the instrument being no further available. In order to prevent evasion of the law, the seventh section prohibits the Commissioners of Stamps from stamping any proxy paper after the same has been signed; and if any person shall sign any proxy paper not duly stamped, or shall vote or act as proxy under authority of an instrument not duly stamped, the party becomes subject to 50*l*. penalty, and every vote so given becomes absolutely null and void.

COURTS OF EQUITY.—The business of the equity courts was resumed on Monday, and they will continue to sit up to Friday, March the 14th. The total number, as appears in another part of our paper, of appeal causes and causes set down up to Saturday morning, amounts to 283. Of this number, 42 are in the Lord Chancellor's list; 139 in the Vice-Chancellor of England's list; 47 in Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce's; and 55 in Vice-Chancellor Wigram's list—independent of these, there is a rather heavy list before the Master of the Rolls.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SELECTIONS FROM CORRESPONDENCE.

J. C. D. (Stockton) throws out the following suggestion on Capital Punishments :—

With all due deference to the opinions of those who advocate the abolition of capital punishment, I wish to shew that some absolute nonsense has been propounded on the subject, even in the correspondence of your columns; and in doing so I do not deny that, under better auspices, it might be expedient to try the effect of the abolition of a power hitherto exercised by all societies, in all ages; though I cannot myself believe, while murder in all its forms is so frightfully frequent, that the time for doing so is yet come, and would rather suggest that the progress of Christianity alone in preventing crime can really dispense with the necessity of punishment.

But it has been argued that putting to death, even for murder, is a breach of the commandment, "Thou shalt not kill!" Why, the law of the same God, given to the same people, at the same time, further directs (see Exodus xxi. 12), "He that smiteth a man, so that he die, shall surely be put to death." Sr ely a more utter confusion of the very ideas of crime and punishment than such an argument betokens cannot be conceived. It appears to me quite impossible to say that the exercise of the power in question by society is morally wrong in the abstract, without impugning the morality of God himself, in his own laws given to the Jews. Indeed, upon the same principle, all punishment whatever is equally unlawful, and the dictates of Christianity so applied to the punishment instead of the crime, would forbid society the power to imprison, to fine, and to transport! I cannot think it necessary further to expose this fallacy.

Next, as to the expediency of society exercising the power of capital punishment. This must be judged by the circumstances and state of society at any given time; but I do not think the question has been ever fairly argued as to this age and time, nor is there space here to do it. But it has been assumed that, because crime is committed at the very foot of the gallows(a), and because out of 160 criminals in a gaol, perhaps 147 had been present at executions, and because murder is still committed, therefore executions are inoperative to deter from crime, and, ed ratione, inexpedient.

Are not transportation and imprisonment equally inoperative, and, therefore, equally inexpedient? We see men go from prison to crime, and back again from crime to prison, over and over; and the same may be said of transportation—witness Tawell, the returned convict! Is all punishment, then, to be abolished, because crime continues?

(a) According to the tendency of the argument, it should be proved that murder takes place at executions.

But it is further said that public executions demoralize. It is not proved, any further than that all public spectacles—fêtes, fireworks, churches—demoralize, because pocket-picking flourishes at them; but suppose it granted, what follows? Only, that executions in public are inexpedient; and it may be well worth the attention of the Legislature before the hazardous experiment of abolition, to consider if public execution be at all a necessity; and to try the effect of executions within the walls of prisons, in the presence of the sheriffs and other authorities, with or without a jury to be summoned for the purpose, while the death-bell should toll solemnly to announce the dreadful "last scene" enacting within;—crime, inconsistent with the very existence of society, receiving its decreed and foreknown penalty at the hands of the law it had outraged.

I believe that this would have a very solemn effect. The excitement, which has its charm for depraved minds, would be at an end; and the bare fact, in its mysterious and unrelieved intensity, must appal the most hardened.

But, it may be objected, the public mind of England will not tolerate private executions. Why not? If the criminal be decreed to death by society, and handed to the officers of the law, what further interest has society in the matter than to know that the last dread penalty will be inflicted, and inflicted without torture? The presence of the sheriffs and a few others would sufficiently guarantee this. Again, the "public mind" does tolerate the private infliction of any other punishment, viz. whipping, imprisonment, and even transportation, in the like confidence of its due administration.

I will not trespass further on your space. My object was, first to expose an absurdity which I noticed some time since in your correspondence, and next to suggest what I conceive to be the logical remedy for the evils of public execution. I have no wish to enter into controversy, or to answer any letters on the subject.

"ORIGO" (Shrewsbury) transmits the following difficulty arising out of the "Transfer of Property Act:"—

It is well known as one of the common law rules, with reference to the creation of remainders, that they must be limited to take effect upon the regular and natural determination of the particular estate; but it appears to me that this old rule is now superseded by the new Act 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76. The reason generally given for the rule is, that the opposite limitation would tend to defeat the estate by force of a condition, which can only be done by the entry of the grantor, the effect of which would be to defeat both the particular estate and the remainder. Now, if the rule and the reason must stand or fall together (which I apprehend is the case), this rule no longer exists; for sec. 5 of the new Act enables persons to assign their rights of entry, upon breach of condition subsequent, as well as others, and the question therefore is simply, whether the remainder-man would not be considered the assignee, and consequently entitled himself to enter, upon breach, without the interposition of the grantor? for if so, then the reason above stated why such a limitation in abridgment cannot be made (the entry of the grantor not being ex necessitate rei) is not applicable, and either the rule must in future exist without a reason (by no means legal), or a new reason be discovered adapted to support the rule. By the new Act all assignments are required to be by deed; sed quære—Would not the original deed, if properly stamped, serve the purpose?

Perhaps you, or one of your numerous readers, would feel interested in answering this question; and if so, it will give me pleasure to be instructed.

"T. M." (a magistrate) submits the following practical query.

Can any of your correspondents point out any decision, or afford any information on a case like the following:—

A. B. is the paid clerk of an attorney, who is clerk to the town council of a small borough town. By the interest of his master (the town clerk), A. B. contrives to get himself elected a member of the council, and has attended the corporation meetings in the town-hall ever since his election, in the double capacity of councillor and clerk to the town clerk, the greater part of whose duties, A. B., in fact, performs. By the 28th section of the Municipal Corporation Act the disqualification of the partner of a town clerk is clearly expressed, and the question arises as to whether à fortiori his paid clerk is not to be considered as excluded from the office by the above-quoted section of the Act.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.,
11th Feb. T. M.

An "OLD SUBSCRIBER" announces the following novel point in "County Court Practice."

Will you have the kindness to insert the following in one of the columns of your valuable paper? and I have no doubt but that some of my brother subscribers will have the goodness to give their opinion on the point.

The County Clerk for the county of Cardigan has decided that a commissioner of one of the Superior Courts is not authorized to take affidavits in the County Courts, and that they are not valid unless sworn before him at the County Court. Consequently, to the great inconvenience of the attorneys, they have been obliged to send their clients to attend him then and there for that purpose.

"AN ATTORNEY" would be obliged by information as to the following:—

I have had occasion, this day, to apply to a clerk to the magistrates for copies of depositions against a person committed for trial at the ensuing assizes, on behalf of the prosecution; and I have been asked for eleven shillings, or at the rate of 8d. per folio. This I think too much, and will feel obliged if any of your subscribers will give me information as to the charge per folio by other magistrates' clerks. If I wanted the copies for the prisoner, 1½d. per folio is all that the magistrates' clerk can charge for them.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

THE PUBLISHER begs to state, in reply to repeated applications, that he will readily accommodate the Subscribers to the LAW TIMES by procuring for them and inclosing in the parcels he may have occasion to transmit to them, any Books, Law Forms, or other Publications they may desire to receive from London. They may also, if they please, avail themselves of the transmission of their Volumes of the LAW TIMES for binding, to inclose any other books for the binder.

It is necessary again to state that the numbers of the completed Volumes, when transmitted for binding, should have some mark upon the parcel, by which they may be identified, and of which the Publisher should be advised by letter.

THE LAW TIMES.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 15, 1845.

NEW RULES AND ORDERS IN BANKRUPTCY.

A FURTHER series of New Rules and Orders in Bankruptcy have just been issued by the Commissioners with the sanction of the Lord Chancellor. They will be found in their proper place in the LAW TIMES of this day, and that our readers may possess them at the earliest moment, we have been obliged to omit much other matter that was in type, and to curtail the usual commentaries upon professional topics.

It may be as well to notify that these New Rules are also printed in a sheet folding in duodecimo, and paged continuously with the Rules issued a few months since, so that they may be bound up with Mr. Homes's or any other 12mo. work on Bankruptcy and Insolvency. This sheet will be forwarded by post (free) to any person inclosing 1s. in postage stamps, or the two sheets, containing both the series of Rules and Orders, for 2s. transmitted in like manner.

A second edition of Mr. Homes's Insolvent Debtors Act is also published, comprising all the New Rules, and, therefore, being the only complete work on the existing Law and Practice of Insolvency and Bankruptcy that has yet appeared.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT.

It would appear, from the conversations upon the subject in both Houses of Parliament, that there is to be no present amendment of a law which is working so vast an amount of injustice and wrong. Dishonest debtors are to be permitted to exult with impunity overruined creditors. Lord Brougham affirms that the iniquitous statute, of which he was the parent, possesses but one fault, and Sir James Graham states, in the House of Commons, that it is to have a longer trial.

May we hope that the Profession and the public will hasten to prove to the Lords that the one fault is a fault so grievous that it ought not to be permitted for a single month to deform the administration of justice in a civilized country, and to the Commons that the trial has been already long enough to shew that under its operation fraud is indemnified from punishment, and industry cheated of its rights. The Profession have the best means of learning the extent of the evil, and they should bring that knowledge before those in whom is vested the power of providing a remedy.

Nor is the demand unreasonable. We ask not that imprisonment for debt be restored; nay, we should approve its entire abolition. All we claim of the Legislature is a provision in lieu of it; power to reach the property of a debtor, now that his person is placed out of the creditor's reach.

The wrong of which we complain as perpetrated by Lord Brougham's Rogues' Indemnity Act is this:—There are many debtors who possess property that cannot be taken in execution. They have but to live in a furnished house, revel in luxury, and defy their creditors. The new law has forbidden us to take their persons, and they laugh at us.

The remedy we ask is simply this:—A provision that if any debtor, after judgment, shall not have sufficient property whereon execution may be levied, the creditor shall have the power to summon him before the Commissioners of Bankruptcy, who shall thereupon be empowered to examine him as to his means, his reasons for non-payment, and, in fact, to deal with him precisely as with any other insolvent, and to punish him for any fraud which may be proved.

This would meet the mischief effectually, and it is so simple and obvious a remedy, that we cannot believe the Legislature would refuse it, if it be sufficiently urged upon them by those who see and feel the mischiefs of the recent law that abolished one means of redress for creditors without providing another.

LAW FORMS.

In pursuance of the arrangement, announced last week, for publication in the Verulam Society of a complete series of Forms for Office use in Common Law, Magistrates' Law, Election Law, Bankruptcy, &c. &c. to be supplied to the Members at the lesser prices of the Society's publications, and to the public at the usual prices, the following have been already accomplished:—

I. Of Common Law Forms there are now ready for delivery:—

1. Copy of Writ of Summons. Price, to members, 4d. per dozen, to the public, 6d. per dozen.
2. Copy Subpœna ad test. Price, to members, 4d. per dozen, to the public, 6d. per dozen.
3. Copy Subpœna duces tecum. Price, to members, 9d. per dozen, to the public, 1s.
4. Notice to Quit. Price, to members, 9d. per dozen, to the public, 1s.

Others are in the press, and will be announced when ready for delivery.

II. As to Magistrates' Forms, we are happy to be enabled to state to the members that J. C. Symons, Esq. Barrister-at-law, has engaged to prepare for the Society a complete series, which will be published as speedily as each can be prepared. The series will commence with Forms in Bastardy, as in most immediate request. The following are ready, and may now be had at the prices named:—

1. Information of a Mother of a Bastard Child before Birth, a. To members, 2s. 3d. per quire; to others, 3s.
2. Information of a Mother of a Bastard Child after Birth, a b. Price ditto.
3. Summons to the Putative Father before Birth, A. Price ditto.
4. Summons to the Putative Father after Birth, B. Price ditto.
5. Summons to Witnesses. Price ditto.
6. Order of Maintenance before Birth, C. To members, 3s. per quire; to others, 4s.
7. Order of Maintenance after Birth, D. Price ditto.
8. Notice of Appeal. To members, 2s. 3d. per quire; to others, 3s.

The rest of the Forms in Bastardy are in rapid progress. Forms under the Constables' Act will be the next series.

III. The new Forms in Bankruptcy under the new Orders, and a series of Forms in Election Law, prepared for the Society by Edward W. Cox, Esq., Barrister-at-law, are in the press.

It may be as well to assure the Profession that all the Society's Forms will be settled by Counsel, and the utmost care will be taken to insure accuracy.

Orders should state whether they are from members of the Society, that the Society's prices only may be charged.

VERULAM REPORTS.

Numbers II. and III. of Practice Cases have been delivered. No. IV., completing the first part, will be ready early next week.

The third number of Criminal Law Cases is just published, and the fourth, completing the first part, for use at the ensuing circuits, will be ready on Thursday next.

The seventh and eighth numbers of Bittleston and Symons's Magistrates' Cases are in the press, and will contain the cases of Hilary Term, and the commencement of Mr. Symons's Forms and Precedents in Magistrates' Law.

Nos. VII. and VIII. of Real Property and Conveyancing Cases, completing Part II., will immediately succeed the above, with an Appendix, containing practical precedents in Conveyancing.

In pursuance of a recent arrangement, each series of the Reports will be accompanied with an Appendix of Practical Forms and Precedents in the branch of law to which the Reports refer. It is hoped that this will add materially to their value and utility to the Profession.

NECROLOGY.

THOMAS HAMILTON, ESQ.

We record, with much regret, the death of the above gentleman, of the firm of Few, Hamilton, and Fews, which took place at his residence, in the Mall, Hammersmith, on Sunday evening, the 2nd instant, in the fifty-seventh year of his age.

As Mr. Hamilton was a highly respected member of the Incorporated Law Society, and had been actively engaged before the public for a period of more than thirty years, with great credit to himself, and satisfaction to his clients, we think it right to give a short history of his Professional career.

Mr. Hamilton was the son of a respectable clergyman in Yorkshire, by whom he was principally educated, till after he had attained his sixteenth year; and for his years, his classical acquirements at that time were of no ordinary character. He was then articled by his father to Messrs. Upton and Co., an eminent firm in Leeds, with whom he served his clerkship, having acquired during that period a considerable knowledge of the law of real property, as well as of all commercial transactions. His clerkship having expired, he quitted Leeds, and went as an assistant to the office of Messrs. Few and Ashmore, who had a short time previously succeeded to the business of Mr. Townley Ward; and during the two years he remained their assistant, he became so valuable to the firm that they offered him a partnership, which he readily accepted.

From that time to the present, he has been most actively engaged in his professional capacity before the public, and few men have sustained a higher reputation than Mr. Hamilton, during his long and active career. He was retired and unostentatious in his manners; he possessed a noble and generous disposition, and performed unbounded acts of kindness and liberality to the widows and orphans of many of his poorer brethren.

For the last six months his health had been giving way by a pulmonary complaint, and he clearly foresaw that his earthly career was drawing to a close. He met his approaching fate with a quietude of manner perfectly consistent with his general character, and bowed with reverence to the will of that Divine Being, who had given him so many years, both of prosperity and enjoyment.

He has left a widow, but no family, to lament his loss.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Tuesday, Feb. 18.

THOMSON v. THE ADVOCATE-GENERAL.

Legacy duties.

A British subject born in England, resident in a British colony, made his will and died domiciled there. At the time of his death, debts were owing to him in England. His executor in England collected those debts, and out of the money so collected paid legacies to certain legatees in England.

Held, that such legacies were not liable to the payment of the legacy duty.

Kelly and Anderson appeared for the plaintiff in error, the Solicitor-General and Crompton for the defendant in error.

The point at issue will best appear from the question submitted by their lordships to the judges.

The Solicitor-General contended, that where a party acted in the discharge of duties of administration to a deceased person, the legacy duty was payable in respect of the money he received and dealt with in that character.

The LORD CHANCELLOR put the following question to the judges:—A B, a British subject, born in England, resided in a British colony, made his will and died domiciled there. At the time of his death, debts were owing to him in England; his executor in England collected those debts, and out of the money he collected paid legacies to certain legatees in England—are such legacies liable to the payment of the legacy duty? He had framed the question in this general form, because the statute equally affected England and Scotland.

The JUDGES requested a short time to consider their answer. They retired for this purpose, and at the end of about half an hour returned, when TINDAL, C. J. read their answer, to the effect that, though the words of the statute could not apply everywhere, and that the principle which ran through all the decided cases was, that the domicile of the deceased party gave the law which regulated the distribution of his personal property, that this rule was not affected by the situs of the personal property itself, or by the place in which the administrator received that property, and that consequently, the law applicable to this case was the law of the colony where the deceased was domiciled at the time of his death, and was not the law of England, and consequently that the legacy duty was not payable here.

The LORD CHANCELLOR expressed his full concurrence with this opinion, and went into a very exact examination of the cases on the subject, which, he said, completely justified the opinions of the learned judges. He begged to add that the reason why the judges had been summoned to give the House their assistance in this case was, that as the law was to be stated definitely for the British islands and for all our colonies, the Lords had deemed it proper that the decision should have all the weight which the concurrent opinions of the judges and of their lordships could give it. He moved that the judgment should be given for the plaintiff in error.

Lord BROUGHAM and Lord CAMPBELL severally expressed their concurrence with the motion of the noble and learned lord.

Judgment for the plaintiff in error.

Re WATTS, a Lunatic.

Commission—Intervals of long continuance, during which the lunatic may conduct himself rationally, form no grounds for refusing a commission, if it is shewn that, in fact, delusions exist—Mortgagees, having an interest to prevent the finding of insanity being carried back, will not be allowed to attend the execution of the commission, unless they agree to be bound by the verdict.

Wakefield, for the petitioner, offered other affidavits.

It appeared that since the petition had been presented the patient had recently become very much excited and violent, breaking glass, furniture, and windows in his paroxysms.

Anderdon and Bird, contrà.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This man has been subject for a long time to paroxysms of insanity. In one he cut off his finger; in another he maimed his eye. He admits having done this, but justifies it. He appears to have been always a weak man, and easily imposed on. Weakness alone, however, is not sufficient to justify a commission. But Dr. Southey reports him to be subject to delusions, and since Dr. Southey has seen him he has had another paroxysm. He is passive, and does not know who pays for his board at the place in which he resides; his memory is defective; he does not know whether he received 100*l*. or 1,000*l*. as a consideration of the mortgage. The commission must issue. The mortgagees may attend, but if so, they must consent to be bound by the verdict.

Anderdon.—The wife, the present petitioner, joined in the mortgage transactions. The alleged lunatic has been allowed, since 18[illegible]1, to act in all the relations of life. (King v. Daley, 1 Ves. sen. 269; Ex parte Morley, Shelford on Lunacy, 103.)

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Sometimes persons having an interest have been permitted to attend the commission, and sometimes such permission has been refused. It is entirely discretionary. I have allowed relations to attend, but not creditors.

Toller (amicus Curiæ),—In the case of Ex parte Stevens, not reported, where a person who had obtained a deed from the alleged lunatic, asked to be allowed to attend the execution of the commission, Lord Cottenham, C. said he might attend, but it must be at his own expense, and he must be bound by the result.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—That is on the principle that you are embarking in an investigation which may occasion great expense to the lunatic's estate, and if not bound, you may afterwards traverse the inquisition.

Anderdon.—It is not denied that the object of the petitioners is to impeach the securities of the creditors.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I find by the minutes of a case in the office of the secretary of lunatics, that the vendor of an estate purchased by the lunatic was allowed to traverse. In the case of Ex parte Stevens, the order to attend the commission was refused. If the mortgagees will consent to be bound by the verdict, they may be at liberty to attend, but if not, I cannot increase the expense which such an attendance will occasion to the lunatic's estate. If the mortgagees, not being bound, should be allowed to attend, and having discovered facts at the expense of the estate, they may immediately traverse, and have the whole question tried over again. This application is for the benefit of the lunatic himself. In Ex parte Hall the circumstances are not stated by Lord Eldon. The question there, too, was as to the parties' right to traverse, and the applicant in that case, having an interest, was clearly entitled to traverse. But a party is not to come to this Court, and to throw the expense upon the lunatic's estate of lengthened examination, and then afterwards traverse the finding of the jury. With respect to the commission, the principle upon which this Court acts is, that when the party is under a delusion, you can never be sure of him. The delusions in this case are consistent with great acuteness in matters affecting his own interest; yet the instances of violence shew that he cannot be depended upon. Here the mortgagee comes not to say the man is not insane, but to carry back the insanity to an early date. I do not place much reliance on Ex parte Hall: Lord Eldon was very tender in his way of dealing with it. Have you any case in which the Court has allowed a party to come forward, not for the benefit of the lunatic, but for his own interest?

Anderdon.—The mortgagees were ready to pay all the additional costs which might be occasioned by their attendance.

Bird, on the same side.—In the case of Ex parte Stevens, there were two deeds which had been executed by the lunatic to Newbury, the party desiring to attend. One was a deed in trust for Stevens until lunacy, and the other was a mortgage from Stevens to Newbury. No money had passed. Watts had appeared to the foreclosure writ filed against him by the mortgagees, but not having put in any answer, they had filed a traversing note, and obtained a decree of foreclosure.

Wakefield, in reply.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Dr. Southey, upon a personal examination, did not think there was the least doubt as to Watts's insanity. The mortgagee had made out no case to be allowed to attend the inquiry. She is merely seeking to attend to protect her own interest, and that cannot be allowed, unless she is willing to abide the result. Having examined and ascertained all the facts of the case, she may then the next day traverse. Lord Eldon doubted whether any person having an interest should be allowed to attend, except for the benefit of the lunatic. Here the object of the mortgagee is her own, not the lunatic's benefit.

Petition of the mortgagee refused with costs.

Re JENNINGS, a Lunatic.

Practice—Trustee—Bank of England—Transfer.

This was a petition for an order requiring the Bank of England to transfer to the committee of the estate certain stock standing in the name of a deceased trustee. A testator had given a portion of the produce of his real estate to the lunatic, and the deceased trustee had declared that the sum standing in his name was held in trust for the lunatic. The Bank refused to make the transfer without a previous order. Ordered.

The petition likewise prayed that the costs incurred in a contemplated sale of an estate in which the lunatic was interested jointly with others might be allowed.

Goodeve, for the petition.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—You may have the costs of consulting counsel, but nothing more, as the costs had been incurred without the previous direction of the Court having been obtained.

Re REVETT, a Lunatic.

Practice in lunacy—Transfer—Indemnity—Title-deeds.

Elmsley supported a petition by the administrator of the deceased lunatic, praying that a sum of consols which was standing in the names of Messrs. Alexander, of Ipswich, bankers, might be transferred to the administrator, on the bankers receiving an indemnity; and that all the deeds relating solely to the late lunatic's leaseholds might be delivered to the administrator, and those which relate to the freehold, or to the freehold, copyhold, and leasehold, might be delivered to the heir-at-law and customary heir, respectively. This arrangement was made by the consent of all parties. The petition also asked that a proportionate part of the yearly allowance from the last time of payment during which the lunatic lived might be paid to the administrator. Ordered.

Re Porch, a Lunatic.

Pauper lunatic—Guardians—Insolvent committee—Practice—Fees.

Blunt supported a petition by the guardians of the West London Union, which prayed that the income of the lunatic's estate might be paid to them. The committee of the person had become insolvent. The lunatic had been interested in certain freehold and copyhold estates, which had been sold to pay off annuities, and there remained a sum of 710*l*. Consols, producing an income of 20*l*. 13s. which constituted the whole of the lunatic's estate. The lunatic was in an asylum at Peckham, at an expense of 26*l*. a year. The guardians paid for the lunatic's maintenance; and it was asked that a power of attorney might be granted to their agent, to enable him to receive the lunatic's income. The committee of the person had been served with the petition, but did not appear.

The Lord Chancellor.—The insolvent person should not continue to be the committee.

Blunt asked that the officers of the Court should be directed not to take fees (which go to the fee fund) in this case.

The Lord Chancellor.—It may be a little stretch of authority to remit the fees. I won't make it a part of the order, but possibly the secretary may omit to require payment of the fees.

Re Lockey, a Lunatic.

Defaulting committee—Liability of sureties—Form of bond in lunacy.

The committee of the estate in this matter had a balance of 138*l*. reported to be due from him, and he being out of the jurisdiction, no part of the balance could be recovered from him. Considerable costs had been incurred in endeavouring to obtain payment of the balance, and it was now sought to enforce the bond, which was in the penalty of 900*l*. against the sureties, for the purpose of obtaining payment of such costs, amounting to 230*l*. The sureties had paid in the balance found due from the committee.

Elmsley, for the petitioner, the next of kin, contended that the bond into which the sureties entered comprised in terms these costs. The condition was, that the committee should duly account for all the estate of the lunatic, and should carefully observe, fulfil, and keep all the orders of the Lord Chancellor in the matter of the lunacy; and should well and carefully demean himself as a careful committee touching and concerning the lunatic and his estate.

Toller, for two of the sureties, contended that these costs were not within the terms of the bond; and even if they were, there had been so much delay in prosecuting the claim, that, as against the sureties, it was lost. One of the sureties, there having been originally three, had become insolvent. The debt, too, had been accepted without costs.

The Lord Chancellor.—The acceptance of a part of the debt would not discharge the whole. This is a matter relating to the estate of the lunatic, and by the bond the sureties undertake that the committee shall do all matters and perform all orders touching or concerning the estate. It is within the very terms of the bond. If it were not to be deemed sufficient to include these costs, the form of the bond ought to be amended; but I think it is sufficient to protect the estate.

Toller.—There is another point. There has been such a want of vigilance on the part of the next of kin, that they ought not to recover these costs against the sureties. It was known to them in 1840 that there was a deficiency in the committee's accounts, but that fact was never communicated to the sureties till July 1844. All the costs sought to be recovered were incurred between 1840 and July 1841. [He read affidavits as to these facts.]

The Lord Chancellor.—The sureties are bound to see that the committee passes his accounts regularly, and they cannot object that the next of kin have neglected their duty. The next of kin have no duties to perform. They are not bound to inform the sureties that the committee is in arrear. I am bound to protect the lunatic's estate, and the costs, if not paid by the sureties, must fall upon the lunatic's estate. The next of kin cannot accept only the balance in full for all that is due from the sureties under the bond. I must take care that the lunatic's estate does not receive damage by having these costs thrown upon it. It is true that the next of kin may ultimately have the benefit of a surplus, but at present the interest of the lunatic only is to be considered. This is not like the case of a receiver. If you have a case in which a receiver had become insolvent, and an infant was interested, there may be some analogy.

Toller.—It was held by Lord Eldon, that laches on the part of those interested might discharge the sureties of a receiver. (Dawson v. Raynes, 2 Russ. 466.)

The Lord Chancellor.—The next of kin have no duty. Incidentally they may have an interest, and therefore they are at liberty to attend the passing of the accounts, in order to watch them. But they are not bound to attend, and they are not always allowed to do so. The surety is the moving party, and he is bound to see that the committee passes his accounts. The Court accepts assistance from the next of kin, and therefore allows them costs; but they are not bound to attend to the committee's accounts, they are under no obligation, for what they do is for their own interest. If the next of kin do not attend to the passing of the accounts, how can they be compelled to do so? The present application is not for the benefit of the next of kin, but for the benefit of the lunatic, who may recover and take the whole of his estate into his hands. Suppose there may have been laches on the part of the new committee, is the lunatic to suffer from his neglect? There can be no waiver or neglect on the part of the lunatic, for he is incompetent.

Toller.—The steps taken appear from the bill of costs, and they shew that too much easiness was shewn towards the defaulting committee.

The Lord Chancellor.—Is not that usual? If it were to be rigorously insisted on, few sureties in lunacy would ever be made liable. Shew me a case or a dictum to the effect that any of the Acts referred to would relieve the sureties. These costs come within the very terms of the bond; but if the sureties desire it, they may be sued upon the bond.

Elmsley, in reply.—The sureties have submitted to the jurisdiction, for they have appeared upon the petition, which was presented in July last, and asked leave to pay in the balance.

The Lord Chancellor.—All these orders which direct the late committee to pay the costs, are existing orders under the lunacy. Unless the sureties can procure the discharge of those orders, they must be bound by them. I cannot enter into the questions they have raised at present. The orders were made upon the committee, which he has disobeyed. The bond is that the committee shall perform all the orders of the Chancellor in the matter of the lunacy, and the sureties are, therefore, liable to perform those orders. If they do not pay these costs, they must fall upon the estate of the lunatic. It is the duty of the sureties of the committee to see that he passes his accounts, and it is not sufficient to say they were not apprised of his default, for it was their duty to be apprised. They are bound to see that the committee performs all the orders relating to the estate of the lunatic which have been made by the Chancellor; these are orders relating to the estate. The costs are incident to the orders, which not only relate to the payment of the money, but to the costs as well.

Elmsley.—The order then will be that the sureties shall pay the money and all costs which the late committee had been ordered to pay.

Toller.—There is no power to enforce the order against the sureties by attachment.

The Lord Chancellor.—The order must be to put the bond in suit. They must be declared liable to pay the balance and costs, and if they are not paid, that the bond be put in suit, and the petitioners must follow up their remedy in that way.

December 7, 1844, February 15, 1845.

Oldfield v. Cobbett.

Contempt—Prisoner—Second rehearing on terms—Waiver—Return of writ—Irregularity—Practice.

Where a defendant has been arrested on process of contempt before the return-day of the writ, but not brought to the bar of the Court until after the return, the proceeding is regular, and the defendant has no right to be discharged.

Where a defendant is in custody for contempt in not putting in an answer, and (an answer having been subsequently put in) the plaintiff files a replication, that is a waiver of the contempt, and the defendant is entitled to be discharged without payment of costs.

The practice of the Court in that respect, certified by the officers to be in accordance with the case of Haynes v. Bull (5 Beav. 140).

Where a defendant is regularly in custody for contempt, and he makes various unsuccessful applications to be discharged, which are refused with costs, although by a subsequent act the plaintiff may waive the original contempt, and the defendant thereby become entitled to be discharged without payment of costs from the order by which he was first committed, he still remains liable to the costs ordered to be paid on his unsuccessful applications.

In this case Mr. Cobbett, the defendant, had been committed for contempt in not putting in his answer, and he afterwards applied many times to discharge the order of committal, on the ground of irregularity, all of which had been refused with costs; he had obtained leave now to move again to discharge all the orders under which he was detained in custody, upon entering into an undertaking to be bound by the result of the present application. The main question turned upon the regularity or otherwise of the first order of committal of the 11th of June, 1840. The facts so far as they are material, are stated in the Lord Chancellor's judgment. The following points made by Mr. Cobbett, who appeared in person, have been furnished by himself:—

Grounds of motion appearing on the documents and affidavits.

1st. That the writ of rebellion bears an indorsement as follows:—"8th June, 1840, Delivered the within-named William Cobbett into the custody of the keeper of the Debtors' Prison for London and Middlesex. For A. Sloman and others. J. Hesler;" and thereby shews that defendant was then not in the custody of the commissioners named in the writ, and shews nothing else as to them.

2nd. That the writ bears no other indorsement or return except as follows:—"1840, June 11th. In pursuance of the within writ, we have the body of the within-mentioned William Cobbett.—Henry Doncaster," which is false as a return, the same not being "in pursuance" of the writ, which was returnable on the 10th of June, and there being nothing to shew defendant in the custody of the commissioners before the 11th; and the same is moreover no return, it being made as of more than one, but signed by or for only one.

3rd. That defendant was taken or retaken on the said 11th of June, after the return-day of the writ, and therefore after it was no writ, and brought to the bar of the court by one Henry Doncaster, without any authority from the Court; but on a threatening notice from Messrs. Johnson, Son, and Weatherell, dated 10th of June, entitled in a cause which did not exist, and directed to the Sheriff of Middlesex, and the said keeper, as well as to the commissioners; and by which notice the said solicitors understood that defendant had been attached by both commissioners.

4th. That the commitment of the 11th of June, 1840, is false in not shewing the return-day of the writ or warrant, and in not shewing that defendant had been in the custody of the said keeper, and in omitting the date of the said indorsement,—date "1840, June 11th," which indorsement is in the said commitment referred to as the return, and in stating that the said defendant "was then brought to the bar of the court in pursuance of the said writ."

5th. That there is nothing in the commitment to shew that defendant was then in contempt, or that he had not put in his answer, or even that the contempt was not then cleared, or that he was examined in open court pursuant to the stat. 1 Wm. 4, c. 36, s. 15, rule 6, or that he was admonished, or that there was any cause for commitment.

6th. That the said commitment concluding in the words:—"It is ordered by the Court that the said defendant, William Cobbett, be, and he is hereby committed to the custody of the Warden of her Majesty's Prison of the Fleet, charged with his contempt of this Court in not putting in his answer to the plaintiff's said bill of complaint, as prayed," and thereby without any condition, alternative, or limit, is therefore contrary to the tenor and intent of the said statute (Rule 13), and not according to any other statute or law, or the practice of the Court.

7th. That the commitment is irregular in having been drawn up or lodged on the 12th of June, after defendant's answer was sworn and in the hands of his clerk in court, and the contempt costs (2*l*. 18s. 4d.) tendered to the plaintiff's clerk in court, and the answer being then or some time filed and accepted without in fact any act of the defendant in regard thereto, subsequent to the 12th of June, or to the commitment being lodged; which irregularity was brought before Lord Abinger on the 15th of December, 1840, in motion to discharge the commitment on that ground; but the last-mentioned fact not appearing by the affidavits, and very strong statements being made on affidavit by plaintiff's solicitor (that defendant's answer was vexatious, and implying that it was false), the motion was refused with costs.

8th. That plaintiff did not bring defendant by an habeas corpus to the bar of the court, pursuant to the said statute (Rule 5), and defendant was for that default of plaintiff entitled to his discharge without payment of the costs of contempt, and such costs were payable by the plaintiff from and after the 4th day of Michaelmas Term, 1840.

9th. That the plaintiff filed a replication and served a subpœna to rejoin in Easter Term, 1843, which was a waiver of contempt (if any) for all purposes, according to the practice of the Court.

10th. That independent of the defects, irregularity, default, and waiver aforesaid, defendant has been from the time of swearing his answer, on the 12th of June, 1840, fully entitled to his discharge without paying costs and for any costs to be made costs in the cause, under the 12th rule of the said statute.

11th. That the plaintiff not having prosecuted this suit, except by replying and serving subpœna to rejoin (and except as to the defendant's alleged contempt in not answering), defendant has been entitled to have the bill dismissed as of course, with costs, from and after Michaelmas Term, 1843, according to the 17th General Order of 1828, and to the practice of the Court.

He cited Haynes v. Ball (5 Beav. 140).

Wakefield opposed the motion, and made a preliminary objection, that the defendant had made six different applications in substance the same as the present, all of which had been refused with costs; and that until he had paid such costs he had no right to be heard.

The Lord Chancellor.—A party can have only one rehearing of right; but leave to have a second or more rehearings may be given on any terms. I will hear the case, and consider the objection to his being heard as part of it.

Wakefield stated the various proceedings, and contended that every process of contempt taken against the defendant had been regular; and that even if there had been any irregularity, all objection to it had been on various occasions waived and abandoned by the defendant. As to the latter point, he cited Const v. Barr (2 Russell, 161); and upon the general question he cited and referred to the following cases: Hoskins v. Lloyd (1 Sim. & St. 393); Anonymous case (15 Ves. 174); Green v. Thompson (1 Sim. & St. 121); Vowles v. Young (9 Ves. 173); Boehm v. De Tastet (1 Ves. & Bea. 324); Smith v. Blofield (2 Ves. & Bea. 100); Anon. (1 Mad. 109); Const v. Helen (1 Mad. 530); Bell v. Etches (1 Russ. & Myl. 324); Landreth v. Ellis (6 Sim. 619); Allibone v. Jones (22 Law Journal, 408); Woodward v. Cowling (9 Sim. 301); Livingstone v. Cook (9 Sim. 458); Williams v. Newton (11 Sim. 45); May v. Hook (2 Dickens, 516); Bailey v. Devereux (1 Vern. 269).

JUDGMENT.

Feb. 13.—The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This case has occupied a considerable time in argument, but the points which require consideration are confined within very narrow limits. The outline of the case is this:—Mr. Cobbett, the defendant, was in contempt for want of an answer, and a writ of attachment issued against him. The sheriff could not arrest him upon that writ, and made a return of non est inventus. An attachment with proclamations was then issued, but upon that writ the defendant was not arrested. A commission of rebellion then issued, and upon that commission the defendant was taken, on the 6th of June, 1840. The commissioners named in the commission of rebellion were, Henry Doncaster, and a person of the name of Sloman, a sheriff's officer, who kept a lock-up house. The defendant having been arrested on Saturday, was taken to Sloman's house, and remained there in custody until the Monday following. He was then conveyed by Haslar, a servant of Sloman's, to Whitecross street prison, and delivered by Haslar to the keeper of that prison, with the commission of rebellion.

On the 9th of June an application was made by Henry Doncaster to the keeper of Whitecross-street prison that the defendant should be delivered back to him, Doncaster, in order to be taken to the bar of the Court of Exchequer. The keeper declined to deliver him, under the belief that he had no right to do so. The plaintiff then served a notice on the keeper of the prison, the commissioners of rebellion, and the sheriff, requiring the defendant to be brought to the bar of the court. The keeper then having consulted with his legal adviser, found that he had no right to detain the defendant, and he delivered the defendant to the commissioners of rebellion on the 10th of June, who brought him to the bar of the Court of Exchequer on the 11th of June. The writ of rebellion was then read, and the defendant was committed for his contempt in not answering the plaintiff's bill. That is the short outline of the transactions. Mr. Cobbett complains of ill-treatment while in the custody of the commissioners, and supposing that complaint well founded, his proper course would have been to have complained of the conduct of the commissioners to the Court, when they might have been censured. But that is not a ground for discharge from custody. He also complained that bail was not accepted. The commissioners were bound either to accept bail or bring up the defendant, and on their neglecting to do so, would become liable to punishment on application to the Court, but that would not affect the regularity of the proceedings. That is not the object of the present application.

The next objection taken by Mr. Cobbett is, that after the return-day of the writ, the 10th of June, the writ was exhausted, and that there was no power to bring him to the bar of the court upon the 11th of June. But the delay arose from the misapprehension of the officer, the keeper of Whitecross-street prison, who had refused for a time to redeliver the defendant to the commissioners. Mr. Cobbett thinks that after the return-day the writ of rebellion was at an end, and that he ought to have been discharged by the commissioners; but he is mistaken and misapprehends the law. He could not have been arrested on that writ after the return-day, but having been arrested in time, the officer had no right to discharge him. The same thing happens where a defendant is taken upon an attachment before the return-day, and the sheriff brings him up after the return-day on a writ of habeas corpus. There is nothing in the circumstance that the defendant was not brought up to the bar of the court by the officer before the return-day to entitle him to be discharged. Another ground was taken by Mr. Cobbett, which shewed that he had no great reliance on the former point. It was this; that by the delivery of the defendant to the keeper of Whitecross-street prison, he was out of the custody of the commissioners of rebellion; and that the bringing him to the bar of the court on the 11th of June was, in fact, a retaking after the return of the writ. This was most ingeniously and well put, but it is a fallacy. The commissioners were not bound to keep him in their personal custody, and they delivered him to the sheriff. But in law he still remained in the commissioners' custody, though he had been delivered over with the commission, and remained in the actual custody of the sheriff. It is clear that in law he was in the custody of the commissioners. That objection has no foundation, and the defendant was, therefore, properly brought to the bar of the court, and committed.

Mr. Cobbett complains that no questions were put to him when at the bar of the court; but it is plain that no questions were necessary for the protection of a person of his education and intelligence. He had been active in copying his answer, and the next day he delivered his answer ingrossed to his clerk in court. Upon all these grounds, I think there was no irregularity in the order of commitment, and that Mr. Cobbett ought not to be discharged.

The same application was made to Lord Abinger, sitting in equity, on which the late Mr. Dixon appeared as Mr. Cobbett's counsel; a most active and intelligent counsel, and particularly conversant with matters of this sort, who, I have no doubt, urged every point of which the case admitted. That application was refused, with costs. It is not necessary to consider the point put by Mr. Wakefield as to the waiver by the defendant of the irregularity of his committal, which it is said must have occurred, when Mr. Dixon, his counsel, moved that he should be discharged, because there was no irregularity. Afterwards, repeated applications were made on the behalf of the defendant, which were uniformly refused, with costs.

That was the state of things up to Easter Term 1840, when the plaintiff filed a replication, the subpœna to rejoin having been served in 1843. The filing a replication is, as a general rule, a waiver of contempt. Mr. Wakefield said that replication is only a waiver in ordinary cases where the defendant is in contempt, but not where he has been committed for such contempt, and he cited very numerous authorities in support of that distinction. But I think the cases do not establish that point. They only shew affirmatively that by replying a plaintiff waives this contempt. There are certainly some expressions tending that way in the anonymous case in 15 Ves. 174, but they are too vague to be of any authority.

But there is a modern case cited by Mr. Cobbett (Haynes v. Ball, 5 Beavan, 140), decided by the Master of the Rolls, which is an express authority, that though the defendant has been committed, he will be disharged on the plaintiff filing a replication. There is also another case (Smith v. Campbell, 1 Russ. & Myl. 323), tending the same way. There the defendant had been committed to the Fleet for contempt, in not answering the original bill. Subsequently to his commitment, the plaintiff obtained an order to amend the bill, and on a certificate of the Six Clerks that the amendments were actually on the file, the defendant was discharged. That was an ex parte motion, and the attention of the Court was expressly called to the point, and the officer was consulted. I have so much respect for the opinion of Mr. Wakefield upon all questions respecting the practice of the court, that I applied to the officers of the court to ascertain what is the understood practice; and I have received a certificate from the clerks of the records and writs, which states, that if the defendant is in custody for contempt, and the plaintiff shall accept the answer or file a replication, the defendant is entitled to be discharged out of custody without payment of costs. That is in accordance with the case of Haynes v. Ball, and there is no contrary decision. I am therefore of opinion that the filing a replication by the plaintiff was a waiver of the contempt, and that the defendant is now entitled to be discharged out of custody as to the order of the 11th of June, 1840. Mr. Cobbett will judge what is the effect of this decision upon his position.

There is an end of the order of the 11th of June. The defendant has subsequently made various applications to the Court to discharge this order for irregularity, upon which the Court has made orders, dismissing those applications with costs. These orders will still stand, and the defendant will remain liable to the costs therein ordered to be paid. He is discharged from custody under the order of the 11th of June, 1840, not on the ground of irregularity of that order, but on something which has subsequently occurred.

ROLLS COURT.

Jan. 31 and Feb. 10.

MARQUIS OF HERTFORD v. LORD LOWTHER.

Motion for an injunction to stay proceedings in a foreign Court by a party out of the jurisdiction suing in that Court for the same subject-matter, and that service of notice on the agent of the party in this country might be considered good service on the party.

Kindersley moved for an injunction to stay proceedings in Austria by the Countess de Zichy, to obtain certain Polish and Austrian bonds or certificates, part of the effects of the late Marquis of Hertford, which by a codicil to his will had, among other things, been bequeathed to her. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—In whose hands are the documents?] In the hands of the Government of that country whose officials in the case of death take possession; but they should be in the hands of the executors, as the judgment here makes them general assets. There was a decree here in November 1842, for an account, &c. before the Master, and in January 1843, a claim was made and a state of facts brought in by Mr. Chatfield, acting under a power of attorney from the Countess, to establish her right to the property in question. The Master made a separate report in March 1843, by which he declared the Countess entitled to the property. In April 1843, exceptions were taken to the Master's report, which, in December following, were allowed. There was then an appeal, which is still pending. The executors having applied to the authorities at Milan for the property, were opposed by the Countess, and having failed in their application, then appealed to the Emperor of Austria, and were again unsuccessful. In March 1843, the Countess applied to the Court of Vienna for the property, on the ground of her being a legatee. The executors instructed their agent there to oppose her claim, inasmuch as she was suing here, and by so doing renounced the foreign jurisdiction. In August 1843, official copies of the proceedings here were sent over to the agent, but they did not satisfy the Court there, who required the originals. An official copy of an affidavit verifying the proceedings and stating that the originals would not be parted with, was then sent over. Whereupon the advocate for the Countess there put in a plea, in fact denying that the Countess was a party to a suit here, or that any steps such as were stated had taken place at all, the copies of the proceedings being treated as of no value or weight whatever, and the existence of the Master of the Rolls being the only fact admitted. The executors being defeated, and the Countess continuing the proceedings, it was now moved that an injunction be granted to stay them, and that notice served on Mr. Chatfield be good service on the Countess. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The consideration is what can be done. If she had any funds here which the Court could reach, there would be no difficulty.] There are legacies to a large amount, but they are disputed. All we ask is the injunction; how the Court would carry it out is another thing. The same thing was done in Bunbury v. Bunbury (1 Beav. 318). The only difference is, that Bunbury v. Bunbury was the case of a British colony. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—If she violates the injunction, how would you act? You would not punish her agent?] No.

Schomberg, on the same side.—The question is, whether the power of the Court is to be baffled. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The question is not at all that, but how I can help it. When had your clients notice of the Countess's intention to proceed?] On the 18th January last, as soon as Lord Hertford could be consulted, they applied here. He cited Bushby v. Munday (5 Madd. 297).

Turner, contrà.—This is a question of importance. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Yes, and should be carefully considered.] The only ground for the application is the demand made in this court, which will not be satisfied till right is done. The whole difficulty was caused by the executors applying to the foreign court for the papers in question. The matter being thus before the Court, the Countess cannot retire without renouncing her claim entirely. The property is more than the bonds, and by giving up them, she would renounce the rest; the injunction will not be granted. [Kindersley.—We proposed to deposit all the papers in question at Coutts's, but this they refused, saying. We will take the rest, and get the certificates if we can.] They do not dispute her right to the other part of the property there. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—She ought to be put in possession of the others, and give up the papers meantime.] It was then arranged to stand over.

Monday, Feb 10.—Kindersley.—An offer has been agreed to to allow the Countess to receive all effects at Milan except the bonds in question, and to allow them to remain within this jurisdiction, upon her undertaking to take no steps there till the questions here are tried, and then only with the leave of this Court.

FIESTEL v. KING'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

Injunction to restrain payment to a fellow of the College of the emoluments of his fellowship, which he had assigned on trust to pay a sum borrowed, and the surplus to himself.

The bursars are, from the nature of their office, necessary parties to the bill by the assignee.

This was a motion for an injunction by the plaintiff against the College to restrain the payment to Lionel Buller, a senior fellow of the College, now residing in France, of the profits and emoluments of his fellowship, till the plaintiff's debt and costs as mentioned in the bill should be satisfied to him thereout. On the 28th December, 1842, the plaintiff obtained the assignment of the income, &c. of the fellowship, in consideration of an advance of 300*l.* upon trust, to be repaid the same thereout, and the surplus to go to Mr. Buller; and he gave notice of the assignment to

Mr. Peake, the solicitor of the College, and to Messrs. Denton, Annington, and Neale, the bursars for the time being, and the same was by them duly acknowledged. They were requested not to pay Mr. Buller till the debt of 300*l.* was discharged; but, nevertheless, they continued to make the payments as usual to Mr. Maltby, of Broad-street, his solicitor and receiver, under a power of attorney. In the end of 1842 there were new bursars elected, and they also continued to pay the accruing emoluments to Mr. Maltby, and took no notice of the plaintiff's application. A bill was accordingly filed, and an injunction was now moved for to restrain future payments. In the answer of the College it was stated that ever since 1648 the income of the College was divided in certain proportions, therein specified, among the members of the College. That Mr. Buller had been a senior fellow from the time mentioned in the bill, and had enjoyed the emoluments of the office except for a short time during which he was suspended. They stated also that the dividends are voted by the College, but the payments are afterwards made by the bursars, who alone are responsible for the same; that fellows could not reside above a given time out of the College without leave, but that it had been the custom for a long time to dispense with the rule. They also stated that they had the general power of expulsion, but submitted whether they could exercise it for the assignment in question, and whether the emoluments were assignable or not, but they thought it was inconsistent with the intention of, and forbidden by, the founder. They also said that it is usual, though not at all as a matter of right, to pay the emoluments of any absent member to such solicitor as he may name, and that they had done so in this case, first to Mr. Maltby, and then, after the revocation of his authority, to Mr. Pears, of Chesterfield, Cambridge.

Kindersley, for the motion, insisted that the assignment was valid, and consequently that the injunction should issue.

Turner, contrà.—There is a difficulty in the case. If payment was withheld, it might affect the interests of the parties entitled, and create difficulty in the division. The provost has no control over the payments after the vote has been passed, neither is there any direction to the bursars as to the mode of payment. The injunction, therefore, to the College would not affect the bursars, who ought, therefore, to be made parties. They are themselves, moreover, constantly changing. [Kindersley.—They are members of the College, and might be included in the injunction to the College. The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Would it not be enough to restrain the present bursars, and the bursars for the time being? Suppose the injunction to go to the College only. what is there to prevent the bursars continuing the payments?] We don't object to an undertaking that the bursars shall not pay, supposing it stands over for amending as to parties.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Very well; let it stand to next seal, in order to make the bursars parties, they undertaking to make no payments meantime, without the leave of the Court. The parties would do well, however, to avoid coming here if possible.

JOHNSTONE v. BABER.

A petition by a trustee to have an inquiry as to whether it would be beneficial for the parties interested, who have all come to the years of discretion, but do not agree in the object proposed, that an advowson should be sold presently, though directed under the trusts not to be sold till the death of the incumbent, was refused, but, under the circumstances, without costs.

Mr. Johnstone devised to persons represented by Mr. Lloyd, the petitioner, all his lands, &c. excepting an advowson, to sell and divide the proceeds among his children, except the eldest son William; and, after the death of William, he directed the advowson to be sold, and the proceeds to go to the children of William, if any, if not, to his own younger children, in like manner as the other property. William, at the date of the will and at the death of the testator, was incumbent of the living; and the question was, to whom the next presentation would go, if the advowson should be sold at the death of William, as it could not be sold during a vacancy.

Roupell, for the petitioner.—It occurred to the trustee, that it would be prudent for him to relieve himself from probable difficulty hereafter, by presenting a petition for an inquiry, whether it would be for the advantage of the parties interested that the advowson or the next presentation thereto should now be sold. Now, if the parties refused to concur, the Court would not order a sale. Some of the younger children do concur, and others do not. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—Can I depart from the direct words of the will, even if they do consent?] They apply to the advowson, not to the next presentation. [The MASTER of the ROLLS.—The Court always waits till the death, if the question does not arise till then.] The difficulty is created by the testator, and the trustee may be liable for a devastavit, if there be no sale till William's death. The next presentation might be sold now, but not if we follow the exact words of the will.

Lewis, for some of the parties, consented.

Kindersley, for William, and four others out of seven of the parties interested.—The petition was presented without any communication with the parties interested, who are all 50 or 60 years of age; and had taken an opinion of a conveyancer, who declared the right of presentation in William. If the Master should ever so much report it beneficial for the parties that there should be a sale, the Court will not carry that arrangement into effect, for William may have children, who may take the proceeds of the advowson. If the trustee had been discreet, and had applied to my clients, he might not, perhaps, be liable for costs, but as he has not, he ought to pay them.

Osborne, for other parties.

Roupell, in reply.—The suit commenced in 1805, and the trustee only came into the trusts in 1834, and was ignorant of the opinion being taken. He cited Hawkins v. Chappell (1 Atk. 621).

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I have nothing to do with providing for the interests of the parties, for they are all competent. If I had any power to do as I am asked, as on the ground of the parties being infants, &c. I cannot act contrary to the trusts of the will, even if the report of the Master should be in favour of the sale. There is clearly an omission in the will, and one which ought to have occurred to the testator at the time. If what is asked could be done, it might be beneficial. There is a difficulty as to costs. It is an old suit, having commenced in 1805, and therefore this trustee, coming in in 1834, could not be aware of the communications on the subject. It is extraordinary, however, that he should press the matter forward without consulting the parties; but yet his object was good, and I cannot charge him with the costs. It is difficult to arrange as to the fund. [Roupell.—We are satisfied to let them be costs in the cause.] Very well, be it so.

WARING v. LEE.

A power to appoint among such of a testator's nephews and nieces, grand-nephews and nieces, as the donee may think fit, cannot be exercised in favour of any other than the class pointed out, unless there be some indication of the words describing the class having a more extended meaning. Accordingly, an appointment by will to a grand-niece for life, and after her decease to her children, is void as to the children, though the appointment might have been made to her by deed, and a settlement on the children at the same time.

Francis Waring, of Stockwell-common, Surrey, by will, dated 20th Nov. 1826, gave to Anne Waring, his wife, a life interest in his estate and effects, and after her decease he gave and bequeathed all the residue thereof "to such of my nephews and nieces, grand-nephews and nieces, as my wife, Anne Waring, shall appoint;" and in default of appointment, to such persons as at the death of his wife, would, under the Statute of Distributions, be entitled thereto as his next of kin; and he appointed his wife, Richard Cooper, and Peter Earnshaw his executors. Mrs. Waring, by her will, dated Feb. 14, 1829, after noticing the power and making other appointments, gave "3,000*l.* other part thereof, to Mrs. Margaret Shearman, one other of the grand-nieces of my husband," and appointed Peter Earnshaw and Roger Lee executors. By a codicil, dated 4th March, 1836, she revoked the bequest of 3,000*l.* and gave the same to her executors in trust, to lay out in stock, and pay the dividends thereof to Margaret, then the wife of William Jarman Cross, formerly Margaret Shearman, for life, and after her decease to pay the same to all the children of the then late and the then present husband of Margaret Cross who should be living at her death, payable at 21, with benefit of survivorship. Mrs. Waring survived Peter Earnshaw and Richard Cooper, and died 11th August, 1842. Roger Lee proved her will on the 29th of the same month. Mrs. Cross died in the lifetime of Mrs. Waring, leaving children by both her husbands, and the Master found that the husbands had no children by any other wife.

Samuel Waring and Elizabeth Waring, the plaintiffs, are the nephew and niece and only next of kin of Francis Waring, living at the decease of Anne Waring, and they now claimed the surplus of the testator, left unappointed by A. Waring, and also the 3,000*l.*, on the ground that the ulterior limitations were void.

Willcock, for the plaintiff, insisted that the ulterior limitations in favour of Mrs. Cross's children were void, they not being objects of the power. Where there is a total want of persons fully answering the description, there may be an appointment to persons falling short of it (Oxford v. Churchill, 3 Ves. & B. 69; Shelley v. Bryer, Jac. 207; Sanderson v. Bayley, 4 My. & Cr. 56); and parties answering and not answering the description cannot take together, unless there was something in the will to shew that a larger class is meant than that described. (Hussey v. Berkeley, 2 Eden, 194.) That is not the case here.

Turner and Hargrave, for the executor, Mr. Lee.

Kindersley (with him Mitchell).—The gift was good at first, and the codicil only revokes it to give in a particular way. The result is the same as to the children. But if not, the question is whether grandchildren may not include great grandchildren. The case in 2 Eden is the same as Hussey v. Dillon (Ambler, 603), and that is in my favour, that grandchildren means descendants. He cited James v. Smith (3 Law Jour. N. S. 280).

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—No doubt, in cases of this kind, where the power is limited in its exercise to a class, it must not be extended beyond the members of the class, and the question, therefore, is, do the appointees come within the class? Where the terms used by the donor of the power are not well defined, the Court gladly lays hold of any indication of intention to extend its meaning, and this was done in two of the cases cited. I would do the same here, if I saw any thing to justify me, but, in the absence of that, I must declare the appointment void so far as the children are included; the parties to have their costs out of the 3,000*l.*; the executor, as between solicitor and client.

FULTON v. GILMORE.

An executor directed to invest in real or sufficient securities is liable for loss sustained by leaving the assets in a firm even of which his co-executor is a partner.

Dividends received in respect of part of the estate of a testator being in the hands of the agent of one executor, and part of the estate being in a firm of which his co-executor is partner, but which is or is expected to be insolvent, the agent cannot demand a general release as a condition of payment of a share of such estate to a legatee.

This case (of which the principal facts may be found in 4 Law T. pp. 231 and 329) now came on for hearing. It is sufficient to mention, in addition to what is stated in the pages referred to, that the father of the defendant Gilmore was partner in the firm of Gilmore and Co. and at his decease the defendant, as his executor, drew out his own share of his property therein.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KNIGHT BRUCE'S COURT.

Monday, Jan. 27.

HAMMATT v. LEDSAM.

Construction of will—Tenancy in common.

A testatrix gave all her personal estate to a trustee upon trust to pay two annuities, and directed that the sum of 800l. should be raised and invested, and that the same should be held upon trust to pay thereout the two annuities, and she directed her trustee to sell the remainder of her personal estate and the moneys arising therefrom, and the residue of her estate, except the 800l., after paying certain legacies, to pay, distribute, and divide equally unto and amongst A, B, C, and D, or such of them as should be living at her decease; and in case D should not be living at her death, her share of and in her said personal estate and the residue of her property should go amongst D's children. And after the decease of the two annuitants, the testatrix directed her trustee to pay and distribute the said sum of 800l. and all and singular the rest, residue, and remainder of her said personal estate, unto and amongst A, B, C, and D, or unto and amongst such of them as should be then living; and in case D should not be then living, the testatrix directed that her share of and in the said residue should go amongst D's children. At the death of the surviving annuitant, A, B, C, D were dead, but D had left two children, who claimed the whole residue of the testatrix's property.

Held, that they were entitled to the 800l. but that the residue did not go exclusively to them.

Sarah Scragg, of West Bromwich, in the county of Stafford, widow, by her will, dated the 24th of October, 1811, gave certain freehold and leasehold messuages, and all her personal estate, chattels, and effects, to Joseph Priest, upon trust, to pay to her sister, Elizabeth Bickerstaff, the weekly sum of 12s. and after her decease to pay to her niece, Elizabeth Smith, widow, the yearly sum of 10*l.* with a proviso that in case her trustee, or his heirs, or either of them, should sell her said freehold and leasehold messuages, then out of the moneys arising therefrom, upon trust to lay out the sum of 800*l.* upon parliamentary stocks or funds, or upon government or real security, &c.; and she directed her trustee to stand possessed of the sum of 800*l.*, and the stocks, &c. wherein the same might be invested, and the dividends, &c. thereof, upon trust to pay the two several annuities or rent-charges; and her mind and will was, and she thereby directed her said trustee, his executors and administrators, as soon after her decease as conveniently might be, to sell and dispose of her personal estate, chattels, and effects, by public auction, and the moneys arising therefrom, together with all and singular the residue of her property, except the said sum of 800*l.*, to be placed out at interest, as aforesaid, and after payment of the said several legacies thereinbefore given and be-bequeathed, pay, distribute, and divide equally unto and amongst her nephews and nieces, William Baker, Charles Whitmore, Elizabeth Whitmore, and Elizabeth Davies, or such of them as should be living at her (the testatrix's) decease; and in case the said Elizabeth Davies should not be living at her (the testatrix's) death, then she directed that her share of and in her said personal estate, and the residue of her property, should go and be paid and divided amongst her (the said E. Davies's) children, if any, that might be then living, and if but one child, to such only child, his or her executors or administrators. And after the deceases of her said sister E. Bickerstaff and her said niece E. Smith, the testatrix willed and directed that her said trustee, his heirs, executors, and administrators, should pay and distribute the said sum of 800*l.* so to be placed out at interest as aforesaid, and all and singular the rest, residue, and remainder of her said personal estate, chattels, and effects, unto and amongst her said nephews and nieces, W. Baker, C. Whitmore, E. Whitmore, and E. Davies, or unto or amongst such of them as should be then living; and in case the said E. Davies should not be living at that time, then the testatrix directed that her (the said E. Davies's) share of and in the said residue should go and be paid to and divided between and amongst her children, if any, that might be then living, equally, share and share alike, and if but one only child, to such child, his or her executors, or administrators; and the testatrix thereby appointed the said Joseph Priest sole executor of her will. The testatrix died on the 18th of December, 1816; E. Bickerstaff died in the testatrix's lifetime. On the 15th of March, 1818, E. Whitmore died; and in September 1820, C. Whitmore died. Elizabeth Davies died on the 18th of December, 1826, intestate, leaving two children, one of whom was a plaintiff, and the other a defendant, in this suit. W. Baker died on the 4th of April, 1832, and Elizabeth Smith, the annuitant, died on the 15th of February, 1842. The two children of Elizabeth Davies assigned their interest under the will to one of the defendants, Wilford, and a claim was now made on their behalf to the whole residue, as well as to the 800*l.*; it being alleged that they stood in the place of Mrs. Davies, and that the other residuary legatees being dead, the whole residue consequently belonged to them.

Russell and Younge, for the plaintiff.

K. Parker and Glasse, for the defendant Davies.

Spence, for Wilford.

Wigram, G. Simpson, Craig, Temple, and Wetherell, for other parties opposed to the plaintiff's construction of the will, were not heard.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that if the 800*l.* was effectually given separately from the residue, then, in the events which had happened, the residue had been given to the legatees as tenants in common, the words used being such as to create a tenancy in common, and therefore the residue did not go exclusively to the children of Mrs. Davies.

Thursday, Jan. 30.

GOSLING v. CARTER.

Construction—Power of sale—Executors.

A testator directed his debts to be paid out of his estate and effects, and, subject thereto, gave all his real and personal estate to his wife for life, and after her decease directed that his real and personal estate should be sold, with power to the executor to give valid discharges for the purchase-money. The wife, who was an executrix, joined with the other executor in a contract for sale, she consenting to give up her interest under the will, and releasing her dower, and it was held that, upon proof of the existence of debts at the time of the contract, the contract might be enforced.

The testator in this cause by his will directed his debts and funeral expenses to be paid out of his estate and effects, and, subject thereto, he gave all his freehold, copyhold, leasehold, and personal estates, whether in possession, reversion, or remainder, to his wife for her life, for her separate use, and after her decease he directed all his real and personal estate to be sold by auction or private sale, with power to his executor to give valid discharges for the purchase-money, and he directed the proceeds of the sale to be divided in moieties among the persons named in his will; and he appointed his wife and another person executrix and executor of his will. The executors entered into a contract with the defendant for the sale of the real estate, the executrix consenting to give up her interest in the will, and releasing her dower; and a question having arisen as to their power to sell under the will, this bill was filed to enforce a specific performance of the contract. It was alleged by the plaintiffs that at the time the contract was signed there were debts due from the testator remaining unsatisfied.

Wigram and Hardy, for the plaintiffs.

Teed and Goldsmith, for the defendant.

The following cases were cited: Ball v. Harris (4 Myl. & Cr. 264); Shaw v. Borrer (1 Keen, 559); Bailey v. Ekins (7 Ves. 319); and Forbes v. Peacock (11 Sim.)

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that in this case he should give no opinion whether the mere circumstance of a charge of debts upon real estate would or would not confer on the executors a power of sale at law or in equity; because, looking at the whole will, it appeared to be the intention of the testator that the real estate should be sold for the payment of the debts. He could not say, consistently with the current of the authorities, that such was not the intention. The next question was, by whom the sale was to be made. The sale could only be made by the executor and executrix, or one of them, or by the heir-at-law. He was of opinion that, in this will, there was a manifest intention that the heir-at-law should have nothing whatever to do with the sale. The gift to the widow included personal as well as real estate, and the direction for the payment of debts also included personal estate as well as real estate. If it had been intended to defer the sale of the personal estate, it would have been bad, for the creditors would have had a right to an immediate sale. Then the will gave the executor a power to give discharges for the purchase-money, and such words were construed by law to give executors an immediate power of sale. The contract in the present case was entered into by the executor and the executrix, who was the wife, and it was impossible for the Court not to say that the sale was effected by those whom the testator intended should sell. His Honour added that he purposely avoided saying whether or not the concurrence of the heir-at-law was needed; but if it were, such concurrence could be compelled on the application of the executor and executrix and the purchaser. He should declare that, the plaintiffs undertaking to prove that there were debts of the testator owing at the time of the contract, the plaintiffs had full power under the will to enter into the contract for sale, without prejudice to any question whether the heir-at-law would or would not be a necessary party to convey.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

FLETCHER v. CALTHORPE and ANOTHER.

Trespass for false imprisonment.

A conviction under 9 Geo. 4, c. 69 (the Night Poaching Act), ought to shew that the prisoner entered the close with the intent to kill game THERE—Where an act which may be lawful under certain circumstances is made punishable by summary conviction, those circumstances ought to be negatived in the conviction.

This was an action for false imprisonment against the defendants, the justices by whom the plaintiff had been committed under 9 Geo. 4, c. 69, s. 1, the Night Poaching Act. The defendants, instead of pleading the general issue by statute, justified specially, in order to obtain the judgment of the Court upon the legality of their proceedings. The declaration was for assault and imprisonment, with special damage for the costs incurred by the plaintiff in obtaining his release by habeas. (See 1 Dowl. & Lownd. 726.)

The plea set out that on, &c., by night, between the hours, &c., Fletcher unlawfully entered, &c., with nets, for the purpose of taking game contrary, &c.; that he was taken, brought before the justices; that the offence was proved, and that he was then and there convicted, setting out the conviction verbatim, and thereupon committed, setting out the warrant verbatim, with the necessary averments of identity of the person and the offence. To this plea there was a special demurrer.

Gunning, in support of the demurrer.—The argument will turn upon a few of the grounds of demurrer alleged, and those mostly substantial. It will not be disputed that where justices plead specially, the plea must be good in omnibus. Their privilege is waived, and the plea must stand or fall by itself. The conviction then, is bad on two grounds. 1st. It ought to have stated that the plaintiff was on the land for the purpose of taking game THEREON. 2nd. That he was there for the purpose of taking game there by night. 1st. If he had no intention of taking game there, he was only a trespasser. Patteson J. thought this was necessary when the warrant was before him. (Re Fletcher, 1 Dowl. & Lownd. 726, and 13 L. J. M. C.) The marginal note of Reg. v. Gainer (7 C. & P. 231) is to the same effect, and appears to be borne out by the case itself. (See also R. v. Davies, 8 C. & P. 739.) In Davies v. King (10 B. & C. 89), this seemed to have been the opinion of the Court, although the indictment was held bad upon another ground similar to my second objection. The offence must not only be within the express words of the statute, but also within the intention. (Dwarris on Statutes, 711; Chaney v. Payne, 1 Q. B. 712.) 2nd. It ought to have been alleged that he entered by night for the purpose of killing game by night. This was held by this Court in error in the case before cited. (Davies v. King, 10 B. & C. 89.) That was a conviction on 57 Geo. 3, c. 90. The words of the section were the same, at least, no valid distinction can be drawn between that Act and the present. It was held that the words "did by night unlawfully enter divers closes, and were then and there in the said closes," &c. were no averment that they were there by night, and the indictment was held bad. The present is still more deficient, for the words "then and there" are wanting. [COLERIDGE, J.—The going armed by night to take game was the evil at which the statute was aimed. The plaintiff was within the mischief of the statute, although he did not intend to kill game by night.] Many cases may arise in which it would not be so. He might be merely traversing the close that he might reach his own covers by daylight. 3rd. The warrant is bad, even if the conviction be good. It has no date. (See Re Fletcher, 1 Dowl. & Lownd. 726; 2 Hawk. Pleas of the Crown, 119; Dalton's Just. 458; Morse v. James, Willes, 122; Ex parte M'Gee, 6 Mad. 206; Ridley v. Wilson, Barnes's Notes, 420; Whipple v. Manley, 5 Dowl. 100.) There are other objections. It does not appear before whom he was convicted, nor that the committing magistrates were justices of Cambridgeshire, or that they were justices at all. It runs thus—

"Whereas R. Fletcher, &c. is convicted by and before us, Rev. John Calthorpe, clerk, and ———, two of her Majesty's justices of the peace, in and for the said county, &c." At the end is—"Given under our hand and seals, the —— day of October, in the year of our Lord 1843.

"JOSEPH SIDNEY SHARP (L.S.)
"JOHN CALTHORPE (L.S.)"

The authority should distinctly appear as in examinations for removal. (Reg. v. Shipston-upon-Stour, 13 L. J. M. C. 1 Car. Ham. & Al. 239; see 1 Bit. & Sym. 41.) Nor does it shew where the warrant was given. (Hawkins and Dalton, suprà, Year B. 14 H. 6 pl. 16.)

These are also objections in form. The introductory averments are insufficient and ill-pleaded. It does not appear that the plaintiff was properly charged;—that the offence was proved. The oath of the parties ought to have been set out. "Duly" amounts to nothing. (Abbot of Strata Marcella's case, 9 Rep. 25; Everard v. Paterson, 6 Taunt. 625; R. v Lyme Regis, Dougl. 135; Collett v. Lord Keith, 2 E. 261; Ex parte Fuller, 1 Car. Ham. & Al. 284.) It does not appear that the evidence was heard in the defendant's presence. (Re Tordoft, 1 Car. Ham. & Al. 171; 1 Bit. & Sym.)

The 38th objection is, that the pleadings contain much that is superfluous and irrelevant. (Bishton v. Evans, 2 C. M. & R. 12.)

Worlledge, contrà.—The conviction is good. In the statute there is nothing about the intention to take game in the close, or by night. We have followed the form given in the statute. [PATTESON, J.—As "by night" is inserted in the first part of the sentence as to the taking, it would be odd that there should be no similar limitation as to the entry.] That argument may apply both ways. It is inserted in the first, and purposely omitted in the second. We follow the statute. In Reg. v. Ash and Others (not reported), tried before Wightman, J. at the last Staffordshire Assizes, that learned judge, after consulting Mr. Justice Patteson, overruled a demurrer to an indictment on this very point. [WIGHTMAN, J.—We thought that case deserved consideration, and should have overruled the demurrer, that it might be taken into error; but on the intimation of our opinion, Mr. Edwards, the counsel for the defendants, withdrew the demurrer, as, it being a misdemeanor, his clients would have been estopped from pleading after the demurrer. And they were acquitted.] Where the offence is simple, it is sufficient to follow the statutory words. (R. v. Chandler, 1 Ld. Raym. 581; R. v. Speed, 1 Ld. Raym. 584; Paley on Conv. by Deacon, 108.) [Lord DENMAN, C. J.—How in cases of complicated circumstances?] Cases of that kind are distinguishable. In Chaney v. Payne (1 Q.B.) it was necessary to shew the person was party to the offence in addition to the words of the statute. In the cases cited from Carrington & Payne, the form of the indictment was not in question. (He also cited Russell by Greaves, 1, 479.) [COLERIDGE, J.—R. v. Speed is nothing to the purpose.] Then the warrant is good. The dicta as to the date do not say that the warrant is void, but only that it should have the date. This imprisonment dates from the time he arrives in prison. (Dickenson v. Brown, 1 Esp. 217.) The name of one justice is clearly left out. [WIGHTMAN, J.—How are we to make sense of this warrant? PATTESON, J.—There is no description of them as justices.] Elkington's case, 2 Ld. Raym. 978, is in point. [COLERIDGE, J.—Suppose in resistance to such a warrant the officer was killed?] In 2 Hale Pleas of the Crown, it is said that subscription to a mittimus is sufficient. But further, even if warrant is bad, judgment must be given for the defendant, because sec. 7 says "that no warrant of commitment shall be held void by reason of any defect therein, provided it be therein alleged that the party has been convicted, and there be a good and valid conviction to sustain the same. (Daniels v. Philips, 1 C. M. & R. 662.) [Lord DENMAN, C.J.—These are large words, but it is a strong thing to say that any invalid warrant is cured by a good conviction.] This was decided in Costar v. Wilson (3 M. & W. 411); on 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 4. Further, one justice only who convicted need sign the warrant, and here Mr. Calthorpe is shewn to be a justice. As to the formal objections, we were not bound to set out preliminary proceedings, and if insufficiently stated, it is not ground of demurrer. (Williams v. Wilcox, 8 A. & E. 334; Stephen on Pleading; Co. Litt. 303 b.; Com. Dig. "Pleader," c. 28; Hall v. Tapper, 3 B. & Ad. 655.) Surplusage would not vitiate the conviction. But they are sufficiently stated.

Gunning, in reply.—There is no offence set forth in the conviction. Ash's case, as already observed by Mr. Justice Wightman, is no authority. Davis v. King (10 B. & C. 89) does not appear to have been cited. It is a monstrous proposition to say that the bad warrant would be cured. Suppose, an illegal punishment, as whipping, commanded by the warrant, would the party have no remedy?—because here was a good conviction. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN, C. J., now delivered the judgment of the Court. Many important matters were discussed in the argument, but there is only one point to which we find it necessary to advert. The defendant's plea cannot be supported unless the conviction is good in point of law. The plaintiff contends that it is invalid for want of setting forth that he entered the close with intent to kill the game there. The defendant's learned counsel indeed admitted that the conviction as laid could only have been proved by evidence of the intent to kill game there; but he urged that a statement in the conviction of the offence in the terms of the Act creating it was sufficient, though more might be necessary to be proved by the evidence. This proposition is undoubtedly too extensive. The rule laid down in Paley on Convictions, that it is sufficient to follow the words of the Act, unless the offence be of a complicated nature, is open to two objections. It does not rest on any authority, nor does it furnish any criterion by which the justice of peace or this Court can discover what cases are thus complicated. In favour of the more general proposition, Rex v. Marsh (2 B. & C. 717) was cited, but Littledale, J. holds the contrary opinion, declaring that, "generally speaking, a conviction which follows the words of the Act will be good;" which is undoubtedly true, but imports that there are cases in which it would not. The decision there, which dispenses with the word "knowingly," as qualifying the possession of game unlawfully, appears to be founded on the defendant's trade, and the duty imposed upon him by the Act as a carrier. In the case of James v. Phelps (11 A. & E. 483; 3 P. & D. 231), for a malicious prosecution, where the defendant had indicted the plaintiff for felony, in obstructing the works of a mine, a member of the Court expressed the opinion that an obstruction not wilful or with knowledge, could not apply to a felony from the general principles of criminal justice. This I well remember, though the words are not reported in either of the reports. But R. v. Cord·n (2 Burr. 2279) is a distinct and pointed authority for the proposition that the words of the Act are not universally all that must appear on a conviction. There the charge was for fishing in a pond. It was held naught, for want of negation of the owner's consent. The same argument which is here resorted to would have supplied the defect, and was pressed upon the Court, who said, however, "The offence intended in this conviction is fishing in the fishery of Mr. Hayne, being private property. But all this might be, for aught that appears upon this conviction, with the consent of the owner. The fact ought to appear so that the Court may be able to judge whether the conviction be agreeable to law. If the owner had been the complainer, it would have shewn his dissent. But this conviction is upon the complaint of Martha Buxton, and it does not appear that the defendant has been guilty of fishing in any water, being private property, without the consent of the owner. As in that case the consent of the owner was required to be negatived in the conviction, so in the present case, the necessity of its alleging the intent to kill game there is deduced from the enormous consequences which would otherwise follow. For it cannot be disputed that its omission would leave any man open to a summary conviction as an offender against the 9 Geo. 4, c. 69, s. 1, who should enter the land of another at an early hour during that period which the statute defines as the night-time, with the intent to pass over such land in order to arrive at his own, and there shoot his own pheasants. The conviction states, in the terms of the Act, that the plaintiff entered the close "unlawfully." But we do not know in what sense the word is used. The justice of the peace may have thought it unlawful to enter any close with the remotest purposes of killing game; or it may possibly mean that the entry was unlawful as a trespass on the land of another. If such was their meaning, I apprehend that the fact ought to have been averred; and if the ground of illegality was held essential to the offence, the decision in [illegible]rden's case would have proved that the absence of the owner's consent ought also to be averred. Two cases which occurred at the assizes before two of my learned brothers were cited. (Reg. v. Gainer, 7 Car. & P. and Reg. v. Davis, 8 Car. & P.) In the former, the indictment, framed on sec. 9 of the same Act, alleged that three defendants entered a wood armed, with intent to kill game there. My brother Coleridge held, that the strict proof of that precise intent was requisite; observing, that though the intent was to kill game in every other cover in the country, that indictment could not be proved. It was not holden, or even argued that the word there could be rejected as surplusage. The other case occurred before my brother Patteson, who held in the first place that the arming of one of the party was not an arming of all, so as to satisfy the indictment on the same section. This alone secured the defendant's acquittal, and there was no absolute necessity for inquiring whether the intent must be to kill game in the place entered. But the learned judge pointed out the deficiency of such proof as fatal to the prosecution. There were, however, strong reasons for dispensing with such intent in the description of misdemeanor which do not apply to the offence made the subject of summary conviction. In the former case the mischief against which the Act appears to be directed is the danger to the public which is produced by the assemblage in the night of armed numbers in the pursuit of game. The place where the game is to be killed is wholly immaterial, and it is not impossible that these cases now created may deserve more consideration. But when the thing denounced by law is the entry of a close for the purpose of killing game, the words of themselves would convey the ordinary sense, though they do not necessarily import that the intention to kill is, to kill game there; and the probable result of not so restricting the sense of the clause seems pointed out as too monstrous to have been contemplated. The learned counsel, indeed, admitted on the argument that the sense ought to be so restricted, and that it is, in fact, so restricted by the very words employed, and hence that the omission objected to makes no difference. A doubt was felt whether the omission was not too large. On reflection, it seems to us that it depends on the principle in former cases, that principle being, that where a certain act is made punishable by a summary conviction, which act may be lawful, if performed under certain circumstances, those circumstances ought to be negatived in the conviction. None of us doubt that where the proof must negative such circumstances, the allegation in the instrument of conviction ought to do the same. This principle is well expressed in a similar though not exactly the same case (R. v. Baines, 2 Lord Raym. 1269), that proceedings in cases of this nature, which are to deprive a man of his freedom in a summary way, without letting him be tried by his peers, are always construed strictly, and never supplied by intendment of matters of which cannot appear on the face of them. Our judgment must, therefore, be in favour of the plaintiff.

Wednesday, Feb. 12.

FITZBALL v. BROOKS.

An action brought under 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 15, s. 2 (Dramatic Property Act), is an action for "the recovery of a debt" within the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 57, and the defendant is therefore not liable to arrest where the amount is under 20l.

On the last day of Term (suprà) Ogle had moved to rescind a judge's order by which the defendant had been discharged from an arrest, under a judgment for less than 20*l.* in an action upon 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 15, s. 2.

Lord DENMAN, C. J. now said that the rule must be refused, as the Court thought that it was an action for the recovery of a debt within the recent statute, and that therefore the arrest was illegal.

Rule refused.

COBB v. BECKE and ANOTHER.

A gives B, his attorney, money to settle an action, B transmits it to his town agents with directions to pay the money. They acknowledge the receipt, saying it shall be paid accordingly. On their default, an action for money had and received does not lie against them at the suit of A, for want of privity.

Action for money had and received.

It appeared that the plaintiff had paid his attorney (Dalling) in the country a sum of money to settle an action, in which he (Cobb) had been defendant, in which a judge's order had been made to stay proceedings. This had been transmitted to the defendants, his town agents, who acknowledged the receipt, by letter, to the attorney "that the money should be paid accordingly;" but in consequence of the bankruptcy of Dalling, they did not pay the money, and this action was brought for money had and received. The jury found that the defendants had notice that it was the plaintiff's money. Jervis, Q.C. had obtained a rule for nonsuit, against which Martin, Q.C. and Butt now shewed cause. There is now no question that the defendants had notice that it was the plaintiff's money then. Moody v. Spencer (2 D. & R. 6) is an authority for the plaintiff. [PATTESON, J.—There the money was received from the opposite party, here the plaintiff's own attorney hands it to another to pay, and is the receiver liable to this action? Put the case of a private friend.] Yes, if the receiver has notice from whom the money is sent, and agrees to apply it as directed. [PATTESON, J.—That may be so; but is there authority?] In Moody v. Spencer, Bayley, J. put it upon that very ground. He said the defendant, as agent for the attorney in the country, must have known that the money was received for their use. Nor do I see the difference of money being had by the hostile parties, or from his own client. In Collins v. Griffin (Barnes, 37), the attorney was held answerable for the mistakes of his agent, shewing that there is an identity between them. And the town agent has a lien against the client for the costs of the cause, so that there is privity between the agent and the client. [PATTESON, J.—My difficulty is the delegation of the agency.] Bamford v. Shuttleworth (11 A. & E. 926) is distinguishable, because there the auctioneer was held to be the agent for both parties. Lilly v. Hayes (5 A. & E. 548); Williams v. Everett (14 E. 582); Badcock v. Stephens (3 B. & Ad. 354); Edden v. Read (3 Campb. 338), were also cited.

Keating, contrà.—Independent of the fact of knowledge, there is no privity, and that fact makes no difference. It is the ordinary case of client, attorney, and town agent, and there is no privity between the client and the town agent. It appears only portion of the 20*l.* remitted was to be appropriated to the payment of the debt. And who is liable? Would Dalling be discharged here? If this action is supported, innumerable actions may be brought. If money is given to a servant to pay a bill, and he gives it to some one else to pay, the person to whom the bill was due could sue the second messenger, and the first would be discharged. He cited Yates v. Bell (3 B. & Ald. 643); Sims v. Brittain (4 B. & Ad. 375); Sims v. Bond (5 B. & Ad. 380).

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—The facts of this case are as follows: the present plaintiff being defendant in an action at the suit of a Mr. Cutbush, and a Mr. Dalling, of Rochester, being his (the plaintiff's) attorney, and the present defendants being Dalling's agents in London, an order was made for staying proceedings upon payment of the debt and costs. Cobb, the plaintiff, paid the money to Dalling for that purpose, upon which Dalling sent the defendants his own cheque for 20*l.* being somewhat more than the debt and costs, which turned out to be 17*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*; directing them to pay the debt and costs; and they acknowledged the receipt to Dalling by letter, saying, "the money shall be applied accordingly." Afterwards they retained it in satisfaction of a balance of a general account due to themselves from Dalling. Cobb brought this action for money had and received, and on the trial the jury found that the defendants knew the money remitted to be Cobb's. The question is, whether there was sufficient privity between Cobb and the defendant to sustain this action. The general rule is, that where there is no privity between an agent in London and a client in the country, something more is necessary beyond the mere relation of the parties to each other, as above stated, to make the agent in town liable. If he had desired Dalling to transmit it to the defendants specifically, and they had received it from Cobb and not from Dalling, they would then become Cobb's agents, and accountable to him; but it appears that Cobb paid the money to Dalling to pay the debt and costs, but without any special and specific directions through what channel it was to be remitted. The money appears to have been mixed with Dalling's general account: he sent it to the defendants by cheque, and he was at liberty to send the money direct to Cutbush's attorney, or through any channel he chose to select, and unless the party through whom he sent the money became and was employed by Dalling as agent of Cobb, it seems difficult to contend the defendants became so liable. The cases of Walton v. Price (5 A. & E.) and Williams v. Everett (14 East) were quoted, and Baron v. Husband (4 B. & Ad.) and Sims v. Bond (5 B. & Ad.) were cited. Those turn upon the question whether the defendant had entered into any engagement that would lead us to say the plaintiff transmitted the money as payment to a third person. Those cases are not applicable to the present case, in which there has been no direct engagement entered into by the defendant at all. The case of Moody v. Spencer (2 Dow. & Ryl. 6) differs from the present case in this respect, that there the defendant, the London agent, had received the money, in the course of business, from the opposite party for the client, and it could not be said that the London agent received it for the use of the attorney of the country client. It is going very far to say, that an agent can delegate his authority, or that he can, by employing a third person, make that third person an agent of the principal; but it is argued for the plaintiff, that Dalling was merely the hand employed to forward the money to the defendants, to be by them employed for the payment of the debt and costs. If the facts warranted such a conclusion, this action might be maintained; but the facts shew that the plaintiff was employed by Dalling, and that Dalling employed the defendants; and we are of opinion there was no privity established between the plaintiff and the defendants, and the rule for the nonsuit must be made absolute.

Rule absolute.

REG. v. COMMISSIONERS OF EXCISE.

Goods imported from the Channel Islands, under 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 52, are subject to the Excise regulations.

M. D. Hill, Q. C. had obtained a rule nisi for a mandamus to the Commissioners of Excise to grant a permit for transferring into the stock of a dealer named Mr. Howell certain spirits which had been imported from Jersey, and upon which it was contended all duties had been paid.

The Solicitor-General, with whom was Jervis, Q.C. and Waddington, now shewed cause; and M. D. Hill, Q.C. and R. Gurney, appeared in support of the rule.

A preliminary objection was taken, that there was no jurisdiction in the Court to issue a mandamus to the commissioners; but as it was not pressed, and no decision was given upon it, the arguments are here omitted. Upon this point the following cases were cited: R. v. Commissioners of Customs (5 A. & E. 380); Re Baron de Bode (6 D. P. C. 776); R. v. Collector of Customs (2 M. & S. 223); R. v. Commissioners of Excise (2 T. R. 381); Barry v. Arnauld (10 A. & E. 646); Cullen v. Morris (2 Stark. 577); Ashby v. White (2 Lord Raym. 938); Doswell v. Impey (1 B. & C. 163); Harman v. Tappenden (1 E. 555); 6 & 7 Vict. c. 67, s. 3.

The construction of the various statutes, 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 52, s. 40; 2 Wm. 4, c. 16, s. 2; 6 Geo. 4, c. 81, and 4 & 5 Vict. c. 20, was then argued at length. The substance of the arguments is sufficiently stated in the judgment, which was delivered by Lord Denman, C. J. on Feb. 12.

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—This was an application for a writ of mandamus to grant permits to one Howell for certain spirits which had been imported from the island of Jersey. The question was raised, whether the writ should issue; but it is not pressed upon us; nor, from the view the Court takes of the statement decided on the merits, is it necessary to determine that point. The spirits were imported, and the proper duty paid, under the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 52, s. 40, which enacts "that it shall be lawful to import into the United Kingdom any goods of the produce and manufacture of the islands of Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, Sark, and Man, from the said islands respectively, without payment of any duty, except in the cases hereinafter mentioned, and that such goods shall not be deemed to be included in any charge of duties imposed by any Act hereafter to be made on the importation of goods generally from parts beyond the seas, provided always that such goods may nevertheless be charged for any proportion of such duties as shall fairly countervail any duties of excise or any coast duty." The spirits having been so imported, it is contended by the Commissioners of Excise that they are subject to the regulations of the Excise in the same manner as spirits manufactured in England; and among other things, that the delivery of a request note under the 5th and 6th sections of the 2 Wm. 4, c. 16, is necessary; and they further contend that the regulations of the Excise have not been complied with in this case in several particulars. It seems clear that no sufficient request note has been delivered; but the applicant contended that none was necessary. This depends upon the construction to be put on the 52nd section of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 52, the same Act that authorizes the importation of spirits from Jersey. The express object of this section is to place imported goods under such internal regulations of the Excise as are applicable to similar goods manufactured in this country; and we cannot doubt that it is as necessary to obtain a permit from the officers of Excise as far as relates to import goods, as is necessary in the case of goods manufactured here. We are of opinion that the applicant did take those steps enumerated, and that he is not entitled to receive a permit, because he omitted to take other steps required by the Excise, and particularly because he omitted to deliver the proper request note. This rule must, therefore, be discharged.

ADAMS v. ADAMS.

(Argued January 17.)

A devise to trustees and their heirs, to permit and suffer C D to receive the rents and profits, is subject to the same construction as a devise in which the word heirs is omitted, and confers no greater estate upon the trustees.

Special Case.

This was an action which had been tried at the Devonshire Summer Assizes in 1843, and a verdict had been found, subject to a special case. The plaintiff claimed title under John Adams, who had suffered a recovery of the land in 1797; and the question for the Court was, whether at that time, under his father's will, the legal estate was in him or in the trustees. It was now argued for the plaintiff by Hodgson, Q. C. (of the Chancery Bar).—The estate in question was devised to three trustees, "to permit and suffer John Adams, the son of the testator, to take the rents, issues, and profits during his life." All the authorities shew that such a devise gives the legal estate to the person who is to receive the rents. (Barker v. Greenwood, 4 M. & W. 421.) It will therefore be for the other side to distinguish this case from the decisions. It does not come within any of the exceptions. Where there is any thing in the language shewing an intention to effect some purpose for which the legal estate must be in the trustees, then the rule does not apply; as a trust to suffer a married woman to take for her use, for without the trustees, she cannot. So a trust to support contingent remainders, and subject thereto to permit and suffer; and so a devise to trustees to permit the testator's wife and daughters to receive the clear rent to their sole and separate use. (White v. Parker, 1 B. N. C. 573.) So a devise to permit and suffer A to take all the net rents and profits during her life. (Barker v. Greenwood, 4 M. & W. 421.) Yet no one can receive more than net rents. It is doubtful in this devise, whether the words "to permit and suffer John to take the rents and profits, subject with the proviso to pay" the wife of the testator an annuity, do not mean that John is to pay. Subsequently the burden is fixed upon "whoever shall enjoy the land," and "they who enjoy the land shall keep it in repair;" so that there is nothing for the trustees to do. All is to be done by John.

2. Even if the trustees took the legal estate, it could only endure while the widow was living, and she died in 1792, and the recovery was in 1797. This is a clear rule. (Doe dem. Player v. Nicholls, 1 B. & C. 336.) There Bayley, J. said, "It may be laid down as a general rule, that when an estate is devised to trustees for particular purposes, the legal estate is vested in them so long as the execution of the trust requires it, and no longer; and, therefore, as soon as the trusts are satisfied, it will vest in the person beneficially entitled to it. Doe v. Simpson (5 East, 162), and Doe v. Timins (1 B. & Al. 380), are authorities upon that point." The annuity may be only a rent-charge, giving her power of distress, as in Buttery v. Robinson (3 B. 392). At any rate, in 1797 John Adams was seized of a freehold in possession, and the recovery was good.

Crowder, Q. C. contrà.—The question, no doubt, is whether J. Adams took a legal estate or not. Attention has been drawn to particular decisions, and then it is said, because this is not within those decisions, then it is a legal estate. But the result of all those cases is, that where the language is such that the estate might vest in the trustees, then the whole intention of the will is to be looked at, and trust is to be construed trust. (Parkhurst v. Dormer, Willes, 327.) If the words were merely "permit and suffer," then I admit that we are not entitled to the verdict. But the decisions as to "permit and suffer" apply only when there is nothing beyond. (Broughton v. Langley, 2 Salk. 679; Doe dem. Leicester v. Biggs, 2 Taunt. 108.) The Courts will seize any thing to get rid of this construction. (Robinson v. Grey, 9 E. 1; Horton v. Horton, 7 T. R. 652; Gregory v. Henderson, 4 Taunt. 771.) In this last case, Chambre, J. said, "It is true very little is left for the trustees to do during her widowhood, but if it was intended that she should have the legal estate, there would have been no need of any trustees at all." [WIGHTMAN, J.—What is there here for trustees to do?] Then the devise here is to the trustees and their heirs. An express fee is given, and it will not be taken out to give effect to this supposed rule, which may be established in identical cases by authorities, but is not to be extended. It appears from the will that the widow was to have the use of the two chambers over the kitchen, with the household goods; also, the apples of the orchard. The trustees, who were strangers, were put in to protect the widow. If the legal estate was in John, there was nothing for the trustees to do. [PATTESON, J.—Would it be more than an estate for her life?]

Hodgson, in reply.—No doubt the intention is to be looked at, but the words are to be construed by legal rules to discover what the intention was. Then here there is nothing to negative my argument. The clause as to the apples might give a mere profit à prendre. [COLERIDGE, J.—Is there any authority for a profit à prendre of artificial growths?] Perhaps not; but I may even admit the argument, and split the estate. (Doe dem. Noble, 11 A. & E. 188.) Cur. adv. vult.

Friday, Jan. 31.

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN, C. J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—The case argued before us turned upon the question whether John Adams, the recoverer, had a legal or equitable estate when he suffered the recovery, either one or the other. The defendant argued he had only an equitable estate, because the use was executed to the trustees, who were required by will to perform certain duties; and although those duties had ceased at the death of the wife before that recovery, still their estate continued, because originally limited to them and their heirs. He wished for time to consider this argument, which appears now argued for the first time, a circumstance not very consistent with its correctness. If it had been valid, many of the cases might have been affected by it. Parke, B. in the case of Barker v. Greenwood, expressly holds that it makes no difference; his expression is, "There is no doubt the general rule of law is that whenever there is a limitation to trustees by the words of the inheritance, the trustees are to take only so much of the legal estate as the purposes of the trust require." The learned baron refers to no authority for that proposition; but consideration as to the nature of the case proves that he is right; for the manner in which the estate in fee is created is immaterial to this consideration; whether created by implication or by express words, it will equally be executed. The object of giving certain advantages under this will to the widow terminates with her life, and on her death the will becomes the same as if the words effecting that object had not appeared in it. Hence the only objection being removed, we are bound by all the decisions to hold that J. Adams had a legal estate at the time of suffering recovery, and the plaintiff must, therefore, have our judgment.

Judgment for plaintiff.

HOPKINSON v. LEE.

(Argued Wednesday, Feb. 5.)

Where the interest is joint, an action of covenant must be brought in the names of the joint covenantors, notwithstanding that the words state the covenant to be a "distinct covenant."

Martin, Q. C. and Arnold shewed cause against a rule obtained by Knowles, Q. C. for a nonsuit in this case, on the ground that the action should have been brought by the two covenantors jointly. The covenant was by the parties to and with Hopkinson, and also "as a distinct covenant" to and with Caroline Hogg, and on this ground, and the nature of the respective interests, it was contended that the action was rightly brought.

Knowles, Q. C. supported the rule.

The facts are sufficiently set out in the judgment, and the principal cases, which, with many others, will also be found in the note to Eccleston v. Clipsham (1 Wms. Saund.) Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

On a subsequent day the judgment of the Court was delivered by Lord DENMAN, C. J.—The question was whether a nonsuit ought to be entered or not, on account of the action being brought by the plaintiff only, when the covenant, in contemplation of law, was said to be made by the defendant with the plaintiff and Ann Caroline Hogg. That it is so made is argued upon the authority of a large number of cases, of which Slingsby's case is the leading, and by no means the oldest case. That case is more entitled to respect because it is founded upon principles of reason which were admitted and sanctioned, and fully explained by Lord Kenyon in Anderson v. Martindale (1 East), whose comment upon a subsequent decision received the silent acquiescence of the whole Court. That case did not appear to have been overruled or questioned, and was acted upon in the Court of Exchequer by Gibbs, C. J. in 1818, in James v. Emery (5 Price, and 8 Taunt.); and the same principle is laid down by Shepherd in his Touchstone, p. 166; but the last learned editor of that work, Mr. Preston, has originated a doubt whether it is expressed clearly. He refers to several cases, none of which impugn or qualify the rule. What is truly remarkable is, he does not even name the case of Anderson v. Martindale. He cites Salkeld, 383, which gives no countenance to the exception, and 2 Rolles's Abridgment, which relates to wholly different matters. We have looked not only to the 2nd but to the 1st Rolles's Abridgment, under the title "Condition," and also at p. 419, which comprises the head of "Covenant," but in neither place does this doctrine at all appear. Mr. Preston thus concludes his observations. "The general rule proposed by Sir Vicary Gibbs, and to be found in several cases, would establish that there was a rule of law too powerful to be overruled by any intention however expressed." But we think there is no ground for Mr. Preston's apprehension that the words are perfectly plain and unambiguous, confining the contract expressly to one person, and excluding all others from its protection. The true explanation of the rule is rather this, that the whole covenant, taken together, binds both covenantors, although not either of them severally named on the face of the covenant itself. Such being the state of things, a special case was reserved at the assizes for the Court of Exchequer, where certain persons, with whom the covenant was made, sued the covenantors in it. (Sorsbie v. Park, 12 M. & W. 146.) The deed being fully set out, was found to be a covenant with the plaintiff and others by the defendant for himself and others. In Easter Term, 1843, the Court held, in strict conformity with all the cases, that a nonsuit ought to be entered, because those others had not been joined as plaintiffs in bringing the action. But the plaintiff here turns the argument on certain dicta which fell from the late Chief Baron and Mr. Baron Parke, applicable not to that case, but to the converse of it, alleging a variance of the old law. Unluckily, no reference was made to Anderson v. Martindale, and the Court, justly thinking the general rule too clear for argument, stopped the learned counsel who supported it; Lord Abinger thought the rule required no authority. It is correctly stated by Mr. Preston, and then he states the rule with the exceptions. Mr. Baron Parke also thinks the rule clear as laid down by Sir Vicary Gibbs in James v. Emery; still, however, with the qualification expressed by Mr. Preston. Those learned judges could not intend to overrule Anderson v. Martindale, nor if they did, could we be bound by their extra-judicially declared opinion. The instrument proved here recited that the defendant had borrowed of the plaintiff 2,900*l.* part of the money of Ann Caroline Hogg, then in his hands in trust for her, on the security of a mortgage, and the insurance of certain bank annuities and other valuable securities; that the plaintiff then required some further security, and thereupon the defendant promised to enter into this covenant, and the plaintiff and Ann Caroline Hogg were satisfied therewith, and agreed to accept the same, and to advance the same sum of 2,900*l.*; and thereupon the mortgage had been executed in consideration of the said advance; and it is witnessed, in pursuance of the said agreement, in consideration of the premises, and of the advance of the said sum, that the defendant covenanted with the plaintiff, his executors, administrators, and assigns, and also as a distinct covenant, with and to the said Ann C. Hogg, her executors and assigns, in manner following, that is to say, that the plaintiff, his executors, administrators, and assigns, would pay the annual interest upon 2,900*l.* and such part thereof as should remain unpaid, provided this covenant should be only security for such part of the said interest as the dividend or other annual income, or produce of bank annuities as shall from time to time be insufficient to pay and satisfy it; and that as between the two Lees, their heirs, &c. and the plaintiff and Ann C. Hogg, her executors, &c. such part of the aforesaid dividend or income, or annual produce as shall from time to time remain due or payable in satisfaction of the insurance, and shall in the first instance be applied in payment of the interest on the 2,900*l.* A covenant is made with the plaintiff on reciting the security of 2,900*l.* the sole property of the said Ann C. Hogg, and it binds the borrower to pay the deficiency. The money lent in Anderson v. Martindale was the consideration of the covenant to pay an annuity during the life of Elizabeth Wyatt, by the covenant itself was, with the plaintiffs, their executors, &c. and also with the said Elizabeth Wyatt and her assigns, to pay the plaintiff her annuity. This language has entirely confined the covenant to the plaintiff, and makes another and stipulated covenant with Elizabeth Wyatt, as any words not directly exclusive can be. Going back to Slingsby's case, the covenant there was with certain persons named, cum quolibet eorum aut altero eorum. No words can be stronger to give the plaintiff an option to sue all jointly, or each severally; yet in both cases the Court held, by reason of the joint interest in the subject-matter of the suit, the action must be joined. We think it would be a waste of time to argue that the words in a distinct covenant do not furnish any stronger interest than those just stated. From these well-known cases, if they are still law, the present case must be decided against the plaintiff, but we see ground for doubting that they are. I must not conclude without mentioning the case of Foley v. Addenbrooke (4 Q. B. 197), decided in this court in Michaelmas Term 1843, which was not alluded to in Sorsbie and Others v. Park. It is in direct conformity with the decision of that case and this, and contains no doctrine at variance with Anderson v. Martindale and the older authorities.

THE MAYOR OF ROCHESTER v. LEVI.

Debt for tolls—Verdict for the plaintiff—Rule nisi for a new trial.

The questions were—1st. Whether the corporation of Rochester was entitled to tolls at the rate of 4d. per chaldron on all coals brought into the port of Rochester by water. 2nd. Whether it could enforce the right to those tolls against the owners of vessels as well as against the masters.

Channell, Serjt. Espinasse, and Petersdorff, shewed cause.

Deedes and Borill, contrà. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Lord DENMAN, C.J.—We have considered how far there ought to be a new trial, and we are of opinion there is no sufficient ground for one. We have written some observations more at large upon it, but the ground upon which we go is, that the jury were to form their opinion as to the two points now in dispute: whether the plaintiffs made themselves out to be the owners of the port; and, second, whether they proved the payment of the duty. These two questions were most materially connected in proof. There was a payment proved at a very remote period, and which had been taken as far as memory could be expected to go. We think the defendant had not placed himself in a situation to complain; and, inasmuch as this question may be still tried by any other person who thinks he can resist the claim, we do not think that we ought to disturb the verdict, which the plaintiff in the present action has fairly obtained. Rule discharged.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Thursday, Feb. 13.

THOMPSON and ANOTHER v. SMALL.

One G. chartered a vessel, of which the defendant was master and part owner, for a certain voyage, G. undertaking to pay, two months after the vessel had cleared from the Custom-house, a stipulated sum for the hire: G. purchased of the plaintiffs certain goods, to be shipped on board the vessel on G.'s own account, and to be paid for before the vessel left the port. The plaintiffs shipped the goods accordingly, but G. becoming shortly afterwards insolvent, an agreement was made between him and the plaintiffs to rescind the contract of purchase, and an order was signed by G. for a redelivery of the goods to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs accordingly demanded the goods of the defendant, offering to pay all reasonable charges, and every lawful claim in respect of the same. The defendant refused to redeliver, as the goods had been put on board for a particular voyage, and afterwards carried the goods on the voyage. Held, that as G. had not become bankrupt, or taken the benefit of the Insolvent Act, the property in the goods revested in the plaintiffs by operation of the agreement to rescind and the order to redeliver, and that, therefore, the right to the possession was in the plaintiffs at the time of the conversion. Held, also, that as the charterer had a right to take the goods out of the vessel before the stipulated sum for the hire of the vessel had become due, the refusal by the defendant to redeliver the goods after the demand of the plaintiffs was a wrongful conversion.

Trover for goods.

Pleas—first, Not guilty; and, secondly, that the plaintiffs were not possessed.

At the trial of this cause a verdict was found for the plaintiffs, damages 500*l.*, subject to the opinion of the Court on a special case, the facts contained in which sufficiently appear in the judgment of the Court.

The case was argued in Michaelmas Term last by Channell and Byles, Serjts. (Peacock with them), for the plaintiffs; and by Shee, Serjt. for the defendant.

On behalf of the plaintiffs, it was contended that they had the right, as unpaid vendors, of stopping the goods in transitu, or, at all events, that the property in the goods had been revested in them by the agreement to rescind the contract made between Grumbrecht and the plaintiffs. Cases cited: Craven and Another v. Ryder (6 Taunt. 433); Bohtlingk v. Inglis (3 East, 381); and Ruck v. Hatfield (5 B. & A. 632). Also, that there had been a conversion by the defendant, in refusing to deliver the goods after the plaintiffs had demanded them; that Grumbrecht, the charterer, had a right to take them out of the vessel at any time by the charter party, for the vessel had been let to Grumbrecht for the voyage, during which the charterer was to have the whole and entire use of the ship; that, therefore, Grumbrecht was, pro tempore, the owner of the vessel, and would have been entitled to whatever freight the vessel might have earned; and that the defendant had, therefore, no right to insist on the goods being carried on the voyage for which they had been shipped. (Colvin v. Newberry, 1 Cl. & Finelly, 283; Belcher v. Capper, 5 Scott, N. R. 257.)

On behalf of the defendant, it was contended that the possession of the vessel had never been taken out of the owners, the master and crew still being their servants, and that there being a contract for the carrying of the goods, the person who had so shipped them had no right to take them out without paying the price for the hire of the vessel.

Cases cited: Paul v. Birch (2 Atk. 621); Faith v. The East India Company (4 B. & A. 630); Saville and Others v. Campion (2 B. & A. 503); Stevenson v. Blakelock (1 M. & S. 535); Thompson v. Trail (2 C. & P. 334 and 6 B. & C. 36).

The Court now delivered

JUDGMENT.

TINDAL, C. J.—This was an action of trover and conversion of a certain quantity of goods; the first pl a denied the wrongful conversion by the defendant, and the second the possession of the plaintiffs. The material facts appear to be, that on the 3rd of June, 1843, one Grumbrecht chartered the ship Bucephalus, of which the defendant was master and part owner, from London to Sidney, and, if required by him or his agent, to Wellington or New Zealand; the ship to clear from the Custom-house and sail from London on or before the 31st of August, wind and weather permitting; and in consideration thereof the charterer undertook to pay to the broker or the shipowner 1,600*l.* in London two months after the ship had cleared at the Custom-house in London. On the 20th of July the charterer ordered of the plaintiffs the goods in question to be shipped on his own account on board the Bucephalus, and to be paid for before the ship left the port of London. On the 27th of July the plaintiffs shipped the goods accordingly, and they took the mate's receipt for the goods, which receipt they still retain. Upon or about the 29th of August Grumbrecht became insolvent, and unable to pay for the goods, and on the 1st of September the plaintiffs demanded, by a notice in writing, the redelivery of the goods from the defendant, offering at the same time to pay all reasonable charges attending such redelivery; which was refused by the defendant, on the ground that the goods having been shipped for the voyage stated in the charter, he must convey them upon such voyage. On the 14th of September, Grumbrecht agreed with the plaintiffs to rescind the contract of purchase with the plaintiffs, and give up all his interest in the goods to them, and signed an order for the redelivery of the goods to the plaintiffs; and the plaintiffs demanded them of the defendant, offering to pay all reasonable charges and every lawful claim in respect of the goods. The defendant refused to redeliver, on the ground that the goods had been put on board to be taken to Sidney, and he afterwards carried the goods on the voyage. Upon this state of facts we think, as to the last question—the right to possession—that such right was in the plaintiffs at the time of the conversion; for the property was originally in them, and assuming that it passed from them to Grumbrecht by the shipment on board the Bucephalus, on the 27th of July, in the manner above stated, yet as Grumbrecht had neither become bankrupt nor taken the benefit of the Insolvent Act, but continued sui generis up to the time of the making the agreement of the 14th of September, by the operation of that agreement, and the orders given by Grumbrecht to the defendant to deliver the goods, the property in those goods revested in the plaintiffs, either in their original right as vendors, or as a new right derived from the assignment of the vendee; and it becomes therefore unnecessary to decide whether the plaintiffs derived that right from their retaining the mate's receipt and demanding the goods on the 1st of September, upon which there was some argument. Upon the other point, we think the refusal by the defendant, on the grounds stated by him, to redeliver the goods after the demand by the plaintiffs on the 14th of September, and the offer then made of the payment of all reasonable charges and all lawful claims, was a wrongful conversion; for whatever powers Grumbrecht himself had over the disposition of these goods before the agreement of the 14th of September, we think the plaintiffs, after such agreement, had the same. We see nothing in the terms of this charter-party which could in any way restrain Grumbrecht from dealing with the cargo as he thought proper; he had the entire use of the ship under the charter, and there was nothing to prevent him from taking out the cargo before the ship sailed, if circumstances rendered expedient the changing of such cargo, or even from sending the ship empty to Sydney, or from fully loading it with goods of other persons, the freight of which had been paid to him in London, there being no agreement on his part to put a full cargo or any cargo on board, the payment for the hire of the ship being made quite independent of the delivery of any cargo. No question, therefore, arises as to any lien of the defendant on this cargo for freight, for the sum stipulated to be paid is not made payable until two months after the ship had cleared from the Custom-house, and, consequently, it becomes unnecessary to decide whether the possession of the ship was altogether parted with by the ship-owner to the charterer, according to the doctrine laid down in Hutton v. Bragg (7 Taunt. 14). But it was contended, on the part of the defendant, that, under the authority of Thompson v. Trail (2 Car. & P.), the goods having been put on board to be carried to Sidney, the defendant had the right to insist on their being taken on the voyage. In that case Abbott, C. J. is recorded to have said, "If the captain had said, when the goods were demanded, 'I cannot give them up; they are on board, and I must take them to Leghorn;' I should have held that that was no conversion. But instead of that, the captain says he has signed a bill of lading; and a refusal on that ground is, in my judgment, a conversion." But upon this dictum, it is to be observed the case was not decided on this ground: it was no more than an opinion given on a point not then before him, and adduced either by way of illustration than deliberate judgment; and, further, that although such opinion may be perfectly correct in reference to the facts of the case, yet such facts are materially different from those in the case before us. The goods in that case were in a general ship, not, as here, in a ship chartered by the owner of the goods; therefore, there was no tender of freight, which in that case had begun to be earned, nor any compensation for the trouble in getting the goods to Leghorn; and, lastly, the ground of the captain's refusal was, that he had signed a bill of lading to a different person. We cannot think the authority in that case applies itself in any way to the present; and as to the foreign authorities cited, they are not in any way opposed to the construction we have put upon this contract, and amount, in fact, to the proposition that the freight was still stipulated for, notwithstanding the goods were not carried on the voyage by reason of some act of the charterer himself, which prevented their being carried; and there can be no doubt, in the present case, that the gross sum of 1,600*l.*, stipulated to be paid for the use of the ship on the voyage, would have been still recoverable by the ship-owners under the agreement, although the charterer had taken the goods out of the ship. But this doctrine does not militate against the right of the charterer to take the goods out of the ship, or, at all events, before the stipulated sum became due. On the whole, therefore, we think the verdict on both these pleas is to stand for the plaintiffs for the sum of 374*l.* 6s. 2d., the sum agreed upon between the parties.

Judgment for the plaintiffs.

CAMAC, Knt. v. WARRINER.

A plea that certain goods were warranted fit for "roofing or building" is not supported by the production of an invoice at the trial describing part of the goods as roofing and the remainder as material.

This case, which arose out of a rule for a new trial, was argued by Byles, Serjt. and Channell, Serjt. in Michaelmas Term last. The facts and points which arose during the argument will be found in the following

JUDGMENT.

TINDAL, C. J. delivering the judgment of the Court.—In this case, in answer to the declaration by the drawer against the acceptor of a bill of exchange for 25*l.* 11s. the defendant paid 1*l.* 14s. into court, and pleaded as to 23*l.* 17s. part of the sum demanded, that the defendant accepted a bill of exchange in consideration of certain goods called "onopholite," which the plaintiff had warranted as fit for "roofing" or "building," but which were not so, and to which the plaintiff replied de injuriâ, &c. and had a verdict, by the direction of the learned judge, that there was no evidence to be left to the jury in support of the plea. The defendant obtained a rule to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside, and a new trial had, on the ground of misdirection, and, after cause shewn, we are of opinion that the direction of the learned judge was right. The contract for the goods in question is not shewn to have been made with any reference whatever to the treaty for "roofing," which took place in September 1842, proved by the witness Holcroft, nor that a prospectus had been delivered to the same witness. Of the goods in question, one parcel, of the value of 7*l.*12s. was delivered in April 1843, which was described in the bill delivered by the plaintiff as "roofing;" and the other parcel, of the value of 16*l.* 18s. 3d. was delivered in July 1843, and was described in the same bill as "material." There was no evidence of the contract for the goods in question, except this bill, which contained one other item of 1*l.* 14s. for goods delivered in October 1842, and described as "flooring." The word "material" does not express a warranty of fitness for "roofing" or "flooring," and even if a warranty of fitness for any purpose is expressed, as the expression is "flooring" or "roofing," and the word "material" refers to what was sold before, still the evidence falls short of the point to be proved in order to shew that the material was sold for "roofing" rather than "flooring." The plea, therefore, is without any proof as to the 23*l.* 17s. part of the sum to which it is pleaded, and consequently it fails altogether, and the rule for a new trial must be discharged.

Rule discharged.

REGISTRATION APPEALS.

Thursday, Feb. 13.

BOROUGH OF LICHFIELD.

MARSHALL, Appellant, and BOWN, Respondent.

The 7 & 8 Wm. 3, c. 25, passed to prevent the multiplying of votes by dividing tenements, does not apply where the vendor of the estate out of which the votes arise was not cognizant at the time of the conveyance for what purpose the vendees purchased.

The case submitted by the Revising Barrister to the Court stated, that one William Gorton had contracted in his own name for the purchase of a freehold house, in the borough of Lichfield, and had afterwards bonâ fide sold the same house to the respondent, and five others, a conveyance, duly executed, having passed between the vendors and vendees. The purchase-money was paid to the vendors by the hands of Gorton, and the object of Gorton in proposing the purchase of the house to the respondents, was admitted to be that they would by such purchase increase the number of voters in the borough. No stipulation or understanding existed at the time of the sale that the respondents or any of them should vote in respect of the premises purchased in any particular way, or in support of any particular party. The respondents had been in the receipt of 50s. each, in respect of their share of the rents and profits for twelve calendar months next previous to the last day of July, 1844. All the other requirements as to residence, &c. had been complied with. It was objected on behalf of the appellant that this was a void conveyance under the 7 & 8 Wm. 3, c. 25, s. 7, being made to multiply voices, and that under that Act no more than one single voice ought to be admitted for the said house. The Revising Barrister retained the names on the register, subject to the decision of the Court.

Byles, Serjt. (on a former day, Nov. 21, argued the case for the appellant).—This conveyance has been made in direct contravention of the 7 & 8 Wm. 3, c. 25, s. 7, which declares "that all conveyances of any messuages, lands, tenements, or hereditaments, in any county, city, borough, town corporate, port, or place, in order to multiply voices, or to split and divide the interest in any houses or lands among several persons to enable them to vote at elections of members to serve in Parliament, are hereby declared to be void and of none effect, and that no more than one single voice shall be admitted for one and the same house or tenement." The mischief in a small city like Lichfield of upholding the Revising Barrister's decision would be apparent, as the bonâ fide voters would be inundated by those created in the face of the restrictive words contained in this Act of Parliament.

Kinglake, Serjt. contrà.—The statute cited does not apply to bonâ fide conveyances, but to collusive grants of property made to enable parties to go to the poll, with a secret understanding that the qualifying property was to be conveyed back again when the temporary purpose was served. The object of that statute and the 10 Anne, c. 23, was to prevent fraudulent conveyances. The 18 Geo. 2, c. 18, was passed in pari materiâ, and is made applicable to voters in cities and counties.

Byles, Serjt. in reply. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

TINDAL, C.J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—The objection taken against the claim of Bown, and the several other persons mentioned in the case, to the right of voting as freeholders in the election of members for the city of Lichfield, was this:—that the five persons therein named claimed to vote in respect of the same freehold house, and that the conveyance to those persons was void under the provisions of the Act 7 & 8 Wm. 3, c. 25, which enacts that all conveyances in order to multiply voices or to split and divide the interest in any houses or lands among several persons, to enable them to vote at elections of members to serve in Parliament, is hereby declared void and of none effect. The argument before us proceeded on the supposition that the facts of the present case brought it within the enactments of the statute, and we were called upon to give a legal construction of that statute with reference to the abstract question, whether a bonâ fide conveyance, where the money was really paid by the purchaser, and there was no secret trust or reservation in favour of the seller, but where the object of the conveyance was to split and divide the interest, falls within the provisions of the statute. Whenever that question comes before us, we shall be prepared to give our opinion upon it; but as we think the facts stated in this case do not raise the question, it would be premature to do so on the present occasion. But we think the obvious meaning of the statute is, in order to make the conveyance void, the party must be privy to the real object and intention of the conveyance; for it would indeed seem to be an unreasonable consequence, and never to have been in the contemplation of the Legislature, that a person who sold his property bonâ fide to more than one purchaser, having no intention himself and no knowledge of the object of the persons making the purchase to evade the statute, should afterwards, at any distance of time, find the conveyance void and the land thrown back on his hands, and himself liable to refund the purchase-money on account of his having subsequently discovered that the purchase was made by several persons in order to split and divide the interest and to multiply votes. And the necessity of this privity and intention on the part of the seller appears from the subsequent statute, 10 Anne, which, after reciting the statute of the 7 & 8 Wm. 3, c. 25, and that it was made for the more effectually preventing such undue practices, proceeds to make provision for cases in which the object of the conveyance or assignment cannot be known to the party who conveys the estate. That still further appears from the Act 53 Geo. 3, c. 49, which enacts that a device for the same purposes shall be taken to be a conveyance within the meaning of the former statute. Now, looking at the case before us, there is not only no statement of the fact, but no reason to infer that the former proprietors of the house, who were the conveying parties, had any knowledge of the object for which the house was purchased at the time they executed the conveyance to the persons. Gorton contracted in his own name with the then proprietors for the purchase of the house, such proprietors having, as it appears, no knowledge whatever of the five persons to whom the conveyance was afterwards made, up to the time of the conveyance itself. Then Gorton bonâ fide, after entering into the contract, sold the house to Bown and the other five persons, and all the others did was to request Gorton to obtain the execution of the conveyance to him and the other five purchasers. As to the argument on the part of the appellant, that Gorton may be considered the seller, it is clear he is no party to the conveyance which is to be made void, as he had nothing to convey. As the case appears to us not to fall within the statute, we are of opinion that the objection taken before the Revising Barrister never, in fact, arose; and, without giving any opinion on the merits of such objection, we think the names of the claimants are properly retained on the lists, and, therefore, we affirm the decision. Decision affirmed.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Tuesday, Feb. 11.

NEW TRIAL PAPER.

DOE dem. OULTON v. OULTON.

Martin, Q. C. and Addison continued their argument in opposition to the rule in this case; and Knowles, Q. C. and Cowling were heard in support of it. Rule discharged.

POLLETT v. FORREST.

Landlord and tenant—Rent and penalty.

Where the language of an instrument is ambiguous, but the intentions of the parties are plain, it will be so construed ut res magis valeat quam pereat.

This was a rule to set aside the verdict for the defendant, and to enter one for the plaintiff for 3*l.* 3s. 0d. or for judgment non obstante veredicto.

The action was in replevin, and the defendants avowed the taking of the goods, because the plaintiff was their tenant of a farm at 170*l.* rent, under an agreement that he should pay 5*l.* to be recovered by distress, as for rent, for every acre of meadow land which he should plough up, and also 2s. 6d. penalty for every yard of hay produced on the farm which he should remove off the premises, to be recovered as aforesaid. They then alleged that a certain number of yards of hay had been sold off the farm, in contravention of the agreement, whereby a large sum accrued to them, &c. To this the plaintiff pleaded non tenuit modo et formâ. At the trial it was objected by the plaintiff that the agreement produced by the defendants did not entitle them to distrain, as it was not under seal, but a verdict passed for the defendants, subject to the present rule.

Knowles, Q. C. and Cowling now shewed cause.—This sum, though styled a penalty in the agreement, is, in fact, so much increased rent reserved by the defendants, on conditions which were plain and certain. It is obvious that the parties here meant to stipulate for a right to distrain for this penalty as so much rent reserved. A reservation of rent need not be under seal; all that is required is that the rent be reserved. It may be contained in a proviso. [PARKE, B.—It is clear that the parties meant this to be rent. The only question is, whether it be rent, and the difficulty arises in the word "for."] That may be rejected. [ALDERSON, B.—If that be rejected from the agreement, how can the Court reject it from the avowry, which must be taken to have pleaded the agreement according to its legal effect? Your argument is that it is rent reserved in the agreement; but you plead it as a penalty to be recovered in the same way in which rent in arrear may be recovered, i. e. by distress. There would, therefore, be a variance.] Cowling.—That point was not taken at the trial, and the Court will not look too narrowly at these pleadings now. We might have amended had it been taken then.

Cases cited: Rolston v. Clarke (2 H. Bl. 563); Chapman v. Beauchamp (3 Ad. & El. 732); Daniel v. Gracie (13 Law Jour. 309); Co. Lit. 96 a, and 142 a; Gilbert on Rents, 26; Rolfe v. Peterson (2 Brown's Parl. Cases, 436).

Martin, Q.C. and Atherston, in support of the rule.—The right to distrain under this agreement is put upon a forced construction of its terms. It is not rent, but a penalty or liquidated damages for a breach of an agreement, which the defendants claim, and they have not the power of distraining for it, as the instrument is not under seal. The other parts of this agreement speak of the plaintiff's holding the farm at a certain rent and subject to certain stipulations and conditions. If this be rent, then the defendants may put in a distress for every yard of hay sold off the land,—a most oppressive system, and one which the Courts will not encourage.

Cases cited: Davies v. Fenton (6 B. & C. 216); 1 Co. Lit. "Real Service," 213; Bacon's Abr. "Rent.")

PARKE, B.—The Court is inclined to think that, as this could not be distrained for under this agreement, unless it was to be taken to be rent reserved, upon the principle of construction, "ut res magis valeat quam pereat," as the parties decidedly meant to confer the right of distress, the instrument should be so construed. We should thereby carry the intentions of the parties into effect, which we certainly could not do if we were to hold otherwise. The words are ambiguous; and the only question is, whether we shall so construe them as to support the manifest intention of the parties, which no doubt was to get a right to distrain for every yard of hay sold off the farm. It has been suggested, however, that there is a variance between the agreement so construed, and the avowry, which pleads it in its legal effect, and using its very words, implies rather a penalty than rent. This point, however, was not taken at the trial, and as the defendants would be allowed to amend if we were to send down the record in its present case, we think that they ought to have liberty to amend at once, on payment of costs.

Judgment accordingly.

ECCLES v. HARPER.

Knowles, Q. C. and Crompton shewed cause against a rule for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was not warranted by the evidence, and was a perverse verdict.

Martin and Hoggins, contrà.

Rule absolute, without costs.

SMITH v. BOUTCHER.

This was an action for work and labour as a broker in and about the obtaining a charter-party for the defendants, to which they pleaded non assumpsit. At the trial before Cresswell, J. at Liverpool, a variety of letters were put in to prove the plaintiff's case, and ultimately the verdict passed for the plaintiff; afterwards this rule for a new trial was obtained, on the ground that there was no evidence to go to the jury to shew any privity between the parties.

Knowles and Crompton were heard for the plaintiff.

Martin, for the defendant.

Rule absolute on payment of costs.

NEW TRIAL PAPER.

KIRKPATRICK v. TATTERSALL.

A debt which is barred by a bankrupt's certificate under 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 121, may be revived by a promise in writing under the 131st section, whether made before or after the certificate has been obtained, and in either case a simple promise is sufficient.

This was an action for work and labour, goods sold, and the usual money accounts, to which the defendant pleaded non assumpsit.

At the trial, before Cresswell, J. at the last Liverpool assizes, it appeared that the plaintiff, being a creditor to the amount of 73*l.* the defendant became a bankrupt, and a fiat issued against him on the 13th of June, 1840. On the 17th of February, 1843, the defendant entered into a written agreement with the plaintiff to pay him the whole of his debt by instalments, and a few days afterwards obtained his certificate. Under these circumstances the learned judge was of opinion that the certificate operated as a bar to the new debt thus created, as well as to the original one, and the plaintiff was nonsuited. Afterwards, this rule was obtained to enter a verdict for the plaintiff for 73*l.* 4s. and now

Knowles, Q.C. and Cowling shewed cause.—The certificate operates as a statutory release from all existing debts, by virtue of the 121st sec. of 6 Geo. 4, c. 16 (Bankrupt Act). When this new promise was made, the original debt was not barred; but when the certificate was obtained, it and the new promise, which was necessary to it, were both extinguished. It is contended, however, that this debt is revived, notwithstanding the certificate, by the 131st section of the Act, which enacts that no bankrupt having obtained a certificate shall be liable to pay any debt from which he shall have been discharged by virtue of such certificate, or of any part thereof, or any promise, &c. made after the issuing out of the commission, unless such promise, &c. be made in writing signed by him. This, however, does not apply to the cases of promises made before the certificate was obtained. If the promise had been made after the certificate was obtained, no doubt the bankrupt would thereby render himself liable to pay any debt from which he would otherwise be discharged: but whe the promise precedes the certificate, it is extinguished as well as the original debt.

Cases cited: Van Sandau v. Crosby (3 B. & Ald. 13); Freeman v. Fenton (2 Cowp. 544); Crofton v. Poole (1 B. & Ad. 568); Stevens v. Wilkinson (2 B. & Ad. 326); Lewis v. Chace (2 P. Wms. 620); Sumner v. Brady (2 H. Black. 647); Birch v. Sharland (1 T. R. 715); Roberts v. Morgan (2 Esp. 736).

PARKE, B.—There would be no doubt if this promise had been after the certificate; but the question is, whether, being before the certificate, the promise ought not to have been so expressed as to exclude the operation of the certificate,—a promise in fact to pay the debt notwithstanding that the defendant might obtain a certificate. The Act requires a promise to pay, and the doubt is, whether that must not be a promise to pay, at all events, if given before the event, which would exonerate the debtor altogether.

Martin and Crompton supported the rule.—The point now suggested by the Court was not made at the trial, where the sole question was, whether a promise made before the certificate was equivalent to one made after. Taking that point, however, too, it is contended that the plaintiff must recover, for, in either view, the debt is revived, the promise here being all that the Act requires either before or after the certificate. It is beyond all doubt that a debt barred by the certificate may be revived by promise made after it, and that the original debt is a good consideration for such promise. If that be so, a debt not yet barred by the certificate must be a good consideration for a promise before the certificate is obtained. Then as to the peculiar terms of the promise made before the certificate, it is apprehended that if the certificate can be barred by a promise made before it was obtained, the Act does not require any particular form of promise. All that is required is an absolute promise in writing to pay, and as no particular form is required after, so none ought to be insisted on before the certificate is obtained.

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

PARKE, B. now delivered judgment.—In the case of Kirkpatrick v. Tattersall, which was argued yesterday, the plaintiff sued in debt for work and labour, to which there was a plea of "never indebted" and "bankruptcy." On the trial of this case, which was before my brother Cresswell, it appeared the defendant after the fiat issued against him, and three days before the certificate was signed, gave the plaintiff a memorandum, whereby, in consideration of the plaintiff's services before his bankruptcy, the defendant promised to pay him the debt due to him by instalments of 76*l.* 13s. 4d. at future dates. The learned judge referred the question to the consideration of this Court whether the defendant was liable in this action, directing a nonsuit, with liberty to enter a verdict for the plaintiff for the instalment due before the action. There was no plea alleging any illegality, nor does the consideration appear to be illegal. The only question is whether, assuming the contract to be without illegality, it is valid. There can be no question that a debt, though barred by a certificate, is a sufficient consideration for a promise to pay;—that is established by many cases. It is equally clear and admitted that if the promise is made after the certificate is obtained, it is binding, though there is no other consideration than the old debt; but it is contended that if the promise was made before the certificate was obtained, that then the rule does not apply; that the old debt is not sufficient, and that to make the promise binding, there must be some new consideration; but whether the promise is made before, or after the certificate, it is agreed it must be distinct and unequivocal, and by the provisions of 6 Geo. 4, c. 50, s. 18, and the 5 & 6 Vict. it is enacted that it must be in writing. We are all of opinion there is no distinction in this respect between the case of a promise before certificate and one after certificate, and that both are equally binding, though the only consideration be the old debt; but then the promise must be one binding the bankrupt personally to pay, notwithstanding the certificate. It must be a promise that he, and not his estate, would pay; for a mere acknowledgment of a debt, and a promise to pay, would amount to no more than an account stated; and though that might be in writing, it would be a promise which the certificate would bar. The only difference between a promise to pay before and after the certificate is, that in the former case it would be more doubtful whether the debtor meant to pay notwithstanding he was discharged under his bankruptcy; but it is clear that the promise is equally binding. The promise before certificate is more open to suspicion, and more likely to be void; but that does not arise in this case. The only question is, whether there was a distinct and unequivocal promise by the bankrupt, binding him to pay notwithstanding the certificate, and whether it was so expressed in the memorandum. That it was meant to be so, is clear, from the circumstances attending it; and whether it is clearly expressed in writing is the only point in discussion. But we are all satisfied by the arguments urged, that it is sufficiently expressed; it is a positive and absolute promise that the bankrupt will pay at certain times, and therefore it is necessarily a promise to pay, though he may have obtained his certificate before those times. When we refer to the date of the promise, and find it was only three days before the meeting, when the bankrupt's certificate might be granted or not, it is impossible to entertain the least doubt upon it. We are, therefore, all of opinion that the promise was sufficiently expressed, and therefore we think the rule must be made absolute.

Rule absolute.

COOMLEN v. THE EASTERN COUNTIES RAILWAY.

Shee, Serjt. and Lush shewed cause against a rule to enter a verdict for the defendants on one of the issues to the first count.

Peacock, contrà.

Rule absolute.

CHARRINTON v. JOHNSON.

Where a collector of highway-rates refuses to hand over the surplus arising from a distress on demand, he is liable to an action at common law for money had and received, and no notice of action need be given under the General Highway Act 5 & 6 Vict. c. 50, s. 109. In such a case the demand ought to be personally made by the plaintiff or an agent having written authority to receive the surplus.

Assumpsit for money had and received to the plaintiff's use. Non assumpsit by statute.

At the trial before Alderson, B. at the last Cambridge Summer Assizes, it appeared that the action was brought to recover the sum of 2*l.* 15s. as the balance remaining in the hands of the defendant, a collector of highway-rates, after the sale of a distress for rates. Soon after the sale, a friend of the plaintiff went to the defendant and demanded the balance, which the defendant placed on a chair, offered to allow the witness to take it up if he produced a written authority from the plaintiff to receive it. This the witness, who seemed to have been a stranger to the defendant, was unable to do, and the defendant thereupon refused to pay him the money. It was then objected that the refusal to hand over the balance, being an act done under the statute 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50, the defendant was entitled to twenty-one days' notice of action; and 2ndly, that the demand ought to have been either personally made by the plaintiff, or by an agent, clothed with a written authority to receive the overplus. Alderson, B. being of opinion that both the objections were fatal, nonsuited the plaintiff, whereupon this rule was afterwards obtained for a new trial, and Byles, Serjt. and Worlledge now shewed cause.

This action arises out of a distress for highway-rates, the collectors of which have the same powers as the overseers of the poor, under the 27 Geo. 2, c. 20, which enacts, that the overplus, if any, shall be returned on demand; whereas the 43 Eliz. c. 2, simply provides that the surplus shall be rendered to the party. There must, therefore, be a demand, and that demand ought to be by the party, or an agent duly authorized by him, and in writing. The defendant being a public officer, has a right to the receipt of the party, or if the plaintiff does not demand the overplus in person, his agent must be clothed with a written authority. Then the plaintiff was properly nonsuited for want of a notice, under the 109th section of the Act. If the defendant was bound to pay over this surplus, his omission to do so was a breach of duty, a tortious act done in pursuance of the Act, and the plaintiff cannot, in order to get rid of the protection of the Act, waive the tort, and bring assumpsit.

Cases cited: Simpson v. Routh (2 B. & C. 682); 2 Sugden's Vendors and Purchasers, 437; Solomons v. Davies (1 Esp. 81); Cour v. Calloway (1 Ves. 115); Roe v. Davis (7 E. R. 364); Attwood v. Mannings (7 B. & C. 283); Waterhouse v. Keene (4 B. & C. 200); Oakley v. Salter (Yeld. 176); Wright v. Cuthill (5 E. R. 491); Greenway v. Hurd (4 T. R. 553).

O'Malley and Wells, contrà.—The defendant is not entitled to any notice under this Act; for the action is not brought for any breach of duty under the Highway Act, but on the common law liability of the defendant to pay over the surplus to the plaintiff; and if, after demand or notice, the defendant refused, it then became money had and received to the plaintiff's use in the defendant's hand. The cases go to shew that where the thing done is a mere nonfeasance, the Act does not apply; but where it is a misfeasance it does. In that case tort is the remedy, and notice is necessary. The next question is, whether the demand in this case was sufficient;—the defendant contending that the words "in writing," should be added to the language of the Act. But that is not so; any demand is sufficient, and it need not be made by the plaintiff in person. (Irving v. Wilson, 4 T. R. 87.)

By the COURT.—There is considerable doubt whether any notice of action was necessary in this case. The defendant had properly distrained on the plaintiff, and had regularly sold the distress, there being a surplus in his hands, which, according to the Act, he was to pay over to the owner on demand; and we think that this case has been properly distinguished from the cases cited by the defendant. Looking at the statute and those cases, there is strong reason for saying that no notice was requisite here, as it was, in fact, a mere money demand between the parties. With respect, however, to the other point, it is clear that the demand was not a reasonably sufficient one, and that the defendant was justified in refusing to give the surplus to the agent or friend of the plaintiff without a written authority. On that ground, therefore, the nonsuit is correct.

Rule discharged.

SLADE v. HAWLEY.

Special demurrer—False return—Sheriff—Demurrer to declaration.

This case was argued last Term by Kennedy for the plaintiff, and Peacock for the defendant, and turned altogether upon points of special demurrer.

JUDGMENT.

PARKE, B. now delivered judgment.—The case of Slade v. Hawley, which stood over, and which was argued by Mr. Peacock, on the one side, and by Mr. Kennedy, on the other, was an action against the sheriff for improper execution of fi. fa. and for a false return. The declaration is in the usual form, so far as relates to the delivery of the writ to the sheriff, and it is averred that the writ was indorsed to levy 66*l.* 9s. 8d. besides 16s. for the writ, officers' fees, sheriffs' poundage, and all incidental expenses, and being so indorsed, and afterwards, and before the execution thereof, was delivered to the defendant, who was sheriff of the county of Kent, and afterwards the defendant seized and took in execution divers goods and chattels of the debtor of great value, and of greater value than the moneys so indorsed on the said writ, and directed to be levied as aforesaid; and then could and might have, and ought to have levied the whole of the moneys thereout, but the defendant, being such sheriff, and so forth, did not, nor would levy out of the goods and chattels so seized and levied as aforesaid, the whole of the moneys so indorsed on the writ and directed to be levied as aforesaid, but levied thereout only a portion of the said moneys, to wit, the sum of 60*l.*; and the defendant afterwards, further disregarding his duty as sheriff, falsely and deceitfully returned that the goods and chattels of the debtor only amounted to the sum of 43*l.* 15s. 9d. besides officers' fees, sheriff's poundage, and other incidental expenses, which sum the defendant was ready to produce before the Barons of her Majesty's Exchequer, and that he, the debtor, had not any further or more goods or chattels in the sheriff's bailiwick to satisfy the residue of the debt, damages, and interest, or any part thereof, as demanded; whereas, in truth and in fact, the defendant, as such sheriff as aforesaid, had levied, under the said writ, a larger sum of money than the said sum of 43*l.* 15s. 9d. mentioned, to wit, the sum of £ , which, after the payment of the sheriff's poundage and other incidental charges, ought to be paid in satisfaction of part of the moneys directed to be levied as aforesaid, by means of which premises the plaintiff was injured and deprived of recovering his debt. Then to this count there is a demurrer, assigning a variety of special causes. On the argument of this case Mr. Peacock urged several objections to the first count of the declaration. One was, that if the word "moneys" was taken to mean "debt" only, the first breach was imperfect, because though the defendant might have levied the whole debt, there being sufficient to satisfy it without the officers' fees, &c. yet that he was not guilty of a breach of duty in not doing so. We think, however, that the true construction of the declaration is, that the word "moneys" embraces the debt, officers' fees, sheriff's poundage, &c.—in short, all the items indorsed on the writ. The objection then assumes another shape, namely, that the first breach is insufficient, because, though it alleged the defendant did not levy the whole of the moneys, it does not follow that he could have done so in the reasonable discharge of his duty to both parties, or that a reasonable time elapsed for converting the goods seized into money. And this objection appears to us to be tenable. The plaintiff then alleges that the second breach is properly laid, and that to make a return of nulla bona to any part was a false return, because there were goods sufficient; and we are of this opinion. This view of the case makes it unnecessary to consider whether the allegation which follows the statement of false return—the statement of damage—is well pleaded or not: that may be rejected. For these reasons we think the second breach was well assigned, and that on that breach our judgment must be for the plaintiff.

DE BERNARDY v. GRIMSTON.

The attorney for the plaintiff having been called as a witness for the plaintiff, and having, amongst other evidence, expressly sworn that he was retained by the plaintiff, a verdict for the plaintiff having been obtained:

Held, That the defendant might properly move for a new trial, upon an affidavit of the plaintiff himself, contradicting that fact.

M. Chambers and Ogle shewed cause against a rule obtained by Channell, Serjt. upon affidavits, to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and for a new trial. The attorney for the plaintiff had been examined as a witness, and among other evidence had sworn that he was retained by the plaintiff to conduct this action. The defendant now sought a new trial upon the affidavit of the plaintiff himself, who denied that he ever did retain the attorney, and entirely disavowed him. It was now contended that a new trial, at all events, could do the defendant no good, and that it was not the proper application. The attorney will be no more retained the second time than he was the first. [ALDERSON, B.—Does it not go to his credit? It is a direct contradiction of his evidence by his own supposed client. The defendant will be entitled to use the affidavit at the second trial to contradict him.]

Channell, Serjt. and Wordsworth, contrà.

By the COURT.—The rule must be absolute, without costs on either side. Rule absolute.

PARRY v. NICHOLSON.

In an action upon a bill of exchange, the bill, when produced, appeared to have been originally drawn and accepted on the date alleged in the declaration, but there appeared to have been a subsequent alteration. Held, that that defence could not be relied upon under non accepit, but that it should have been specially pleaded that the bill had been avoided by the alteration.

M. Chambers and Hayes shewed cause against a rule obtained by Peacock to set aside the verdict for defendant, or for a new trial.

The action was on a bill of exchange.

Plea—Non accepit.

The bill, as originally drawn, corresponded with the bill set out in the declaration, but when produced at the trial it appeared to have undergone an alteration by the substitution of one date for another.

It was now contended that before the new rules there was no doubt that an alteration on the face of a bill of exchange called on the plaintiff to account for it, and shew how it occurred, and if he could not do so he was non-suited. It is submitted that the new rules make no distinction.

Shee, Serjt. and Peacock, contrà.—All that is denied by non accepit is that the defendant ever accepted the bill in the declaration mentioned. If he did once accept, but means to rely upon a subsequent avoidance, he ought to plead that as much as he ought to plead any other plea in confession and avoidance. (Mason v. Bradley, 11 M. & W. 590; Calvert v. Baker, 4 M. & W. 417.)

PARKE, B.—The case in 11 M. & W. is quite decisive, and the reasons given by the Court there for their judgment govern the present one. It may, however, be part of the rule that the defendant have leave to amend on payment of costs, and also that the plaintiff, after he has seen such amended plea, may, if he chooses to withdraw, have the costs of the cause, excepting the costs of the trial.

Rule accordingly.

UTHWAITE v. ELKINS.

An agreement having been entered into between the owner of land and the churchwardens, overseers, and surveyors of the highways, for the letting to those officers of certain land for the purposes of parish gardens and allotments to labourers, which agreement purported to bind the said churchwardens, overseers, and surveyors of the highways, their executors, administrators, and assigns, and successors in office, and under which the land had been used for the above purposes:

Held, that the interest in the land was not such as the churchwardens and overseers could take, under the 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 17, as a quasi corporation, and that they became liable for rent in their personal capacity.

Byles, Serjt. and O'Malley shewed cause against a rule which had been obtained by Gunning, to set aside the verdict for the plaintiff, and enter a nonsuit.

Action for use and occupation.

Plea—Never indebted.

It appeared at the trial that the plaintiff and defendants had entered into the following agreement, under which the lands therein mentioned had actually been used for the purposes therein specified:—

"At a public vestry of the parish of Great Linford, held the 8th day of February, 1833, it was agreed, on the part of Mr. Thomas Kemp and Mr. Benjamin Pavyer, churchwardens; and Mr. Wm. Thos. Tomkins and the said Mr. Benjamin Pavyer, overseers of the poor; and Mr. Eli Elkins and Mr. Thos. Lines, surveyors of the highways; that they, the said churchwardens, overseers of the poor, and surveyors of the highways, their executors, administrators, and assigns, and successors in office, should take to rent of Henry Andrews Uthwait, esq. his executors, administrators, and assigns, for the term of twenty-one years, from the 11th day of October, 1832, a grass field called the Grove, and also a certain portion of the Town Green, to be properly fenced off and quicked, and hereafter to be called the Parish Gardens, being intended for the use of the poor; and also, for such further purpose, a piece of ground lying south of the Wood House Cottages, at and after the yearly rent of 2*l.* 7s. 6d. per acre, for the whole quantity which might be so taken. These proportions of ground are now measured, and amount altogether to 8a. 1r. 36p. and 10¼ square yards: the annual rent is, therefore, 20*l.* 2s. 8d.; and the said churchwardens, overseers of the poor, and surveyors of the highways likewise agree for themselves, and also for their executors, administrators, and assigns, and successors in office, to rent of the said H. A. Uthwait, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, a cottage, late in the occupation of H. Goss, for the term of eighty-four years, from the 6th April, 1833, at the annual rent of 2s.; the rents herein reserved to be paid by quarterly instalments; if so demanded; and they also agree to pay all rates, tithes, dues or duties, impositions and assessments, charged on the said premises, the land-tax only excepted, which is agreed to be paid by the said H. A. Uthwatt: and lastly, the said churchwardens, overseers of the poor, and surveyors of the highways, agree to sign the counterpart of a lease, drawn up in proper form, of this demise, in case the above writing shall be deemed insufficient at any future period.

"ELI ELKINS, }
"THOS. LINES, } Surveyors,
"BENJ. PAVYER, }
"THOS. KEMP, } Churchwardens,
"THOS. TOMKINS,
"HENRY ANDREWS UTHWAIT.
"JOHN BAGLEY SHARP, Witness.
"March 12, 1833."

The defendants, who signed the agreements as churchwardens and overseers, had since gone out of office. It was contended at the trial on the part of the defendants, that as regarded the churchwardens and overseers, at all events, the contract was only binding upon them in their official capacity, and as a quasi corporation under the 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 17. The learned judge, however, thought that the interest in lands was not such as they were empowered by that statute to take as a quasi corporation. The plaintiff had a verdict, subject to leave to move to enter a nonsuit.

Gunning having obtained a rule accordingly,

Byles, Serjt. and O'Malley now shewed cause.—What would have been the effect of this document at common law and independently of any statute? The personal representatives of the parties are mentioned as well as successors in office. But the statute 59 Geo. 3 will be relied upon on the other side. The 12th and 17th sections are those which are relied on, but neither of them applies to this case. The purpose to which the land was to be applied is not such as was contemplated by the statute, nor was it intended that the parish officers should take any joint estate with other parties.

Gunning and Wells, contrà.

Cases cited: Doe dem. Jackson v. Hiley (10 B. & C. 885); Alderman v. Neate (4 M. & W. 704); Attorney-General v. Lewin (8 Sim. 366).

PARKE, B.—I think nothing can pass to the parish officers under that statute except property over which they would have entire control. In this case the contract becomes a personal contract of their own, and they are responsible for the due payment of rent during the whole term.

The rest of the COURT concurred.

COURT OF REVIEW.

Tuesday, Feb. 18.

Ex parte MEYER, Re SOLLY.

Equitable mortgage—Interest.

In pursuance of an arrangement between trustees and their cestuis que trust, an equitable mortgage was given to the latter for sums due by the trustees, and the trustees paid interest on the sums up to the time of their bankruptcy. The Court allowed interest at the same rate to be continued from the date of the bankruptcy, although no mention of interest was made in the memorandum given by the trustees upon the equitable mortgage being made.

This was the petition of James Meyer and others entitled to an equitable mortgage on certain freehold and leasehold estates, praying the ordinary relief; and the only question which arose was as to the allowance of interest upon the debt. The claim of the petitioners arose out of the will of Elizabeth Solly, by which certain legacies were bequeathed to them. By this will, which was dated the 22nd of September, 1818, Isaac Solly, the elder, one of the bankrupts, Thomas Solly, since deceased, and Sir William Domville, were appointed executors.

By an order dated the 28th of July, 1826, and made in a suit instituted by Sir W. Domville against the other executors, they were required to pay into court by a certain day the sum of 31,500*l.* due from them to the estate of the testatrix. A compromise having been effected between the parties interested under the will and the executors, an equitable mortgage was made by Isaac Solly and Thomas Solly, as part of that compromise, to secure various sums to the legatees under E. Solly's will; at the same time, by a memorandum dated the 12th of February, 1827, it was agreed by Isaac Solly and Thomas Solly that the freehold and leasehold estates therein mentioned should be charged with the several sums set forth in the schedule to the memorandum, and that a regular and sufficient mortgage should be executed to or in trust for the parties interested when required, but no mention was made of interest on the sums. This fiat was issued on the 20th of March, 1837, against the firm then representing the partnership of Isaac Solly and Thomas Solly. Some of the legatees' claims had been satisfied by other means, and the estates subject to the mortgage having been sold, and a sufficient sum realized to pay all the remaining claims, with interest, it was now sought to have five per cent. interest allowed from the time of the bankruptcy. The mortgagors had paid five per cent. upon the sums secured, and had used those sums in their business.

Bacon, for the petition.

Rogers, for the assignees, said that they were willing to allow five per cent. up to the time of the bankruptcy, but that the arrangement upon which the mortgage was given was a mere family arrangement, the debts not being caused by a breach of trust. He, therefore, submitted that interest from the time of the bankruptcy ought not to be allowed. He cited Anon. (4 Taunt. 876); and Page v. Newman (9 Barn. & Cr. 378).

Macnaghten, for the legatees whose claims had been discharged.

The CHIEF JUDGE.—An equitable mortgage is given for a debt, in its nature carrying interest, and a memorandum is given in which interest is not mentioned; afterwards interest is paid by the party owing the money. I am of opinion that the debt is one which carries interest.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

Saturday, Feb. 15.
(Before Mr. Commissioner FANE.)
Re MARGARET PARRY.

Punishment for vexatiously defending an action—Refusal of the Court to order an insolvent's discharge.

This insolvent was in custody at Bury St. Edmund's Gaol, and having petitioned the Court of Bankruptcy, this day was appointed for the detaining creditor to shew cause why she should not be discharged out of custody until her first hearing, pursuant to the new rules.

T. B. Hughes appeared for the opposing creditor.

A clerk to Messrs. Johnson, Son, and Weatherall, solicitors, attended on behalf of the insolvent.

Hughes took the objection that the clerk could not be heard, and the Court so decided.

The insolvent was described as a straw plait manufacturer, and it appeared she had become a party to an accommodation bill with a person named Mackham, and that the same had been discounted by Mr. Bousfield, the opposing creditor. On the bill arriving at maturity it was not paid, and an action was commenced against the insolvent, to which she pleaded she did not accept the bill. The cause was set down for trial, and only two days before it would have been decided, a summons on order was obtained to withdraw the plea. The opposing creditor's costs amounted to 21*l.* 19s. 3d. being upwards of 12*l.* more than if a judgment had been suffered to go by default.

The COMMISSIONER, on inquiry, finding she had been in custody two months, thought she was not sufficiently punished for the vexatious defence, and refused to discharge her, fixing a day for her to be heard in a month's time.

Re MALTWOOD, Insolvent.

Clerks (not being Solicitors) cannot be heard.

In this case the insolvent was opposed by Buchanan, solicitor; a clerk to an attorney appeared on behalf of the insolvent. Buchanan took the objection that a clerk could not be heard in this court, but afterwards offered to waive it; but the Commissioner said, Certainly not, we can only hear counsel, solicitors, and the parties themselves; the objection cannot be waived.

Wednesday, Feb. 19.
(Before Mr. Commissioner SHEPHERD.)
Re C. J. MATHEWS.

Where part of consideration of claim was the debt under a former Insolvency Court, creditor can be inserted in the schedule for amount of the new claim only—Assignees can take the same objection as insolvent himself.

This was a dividend meeting for adjustment of claims and distribution of the fund in court, being the whole amount of his first instalment paid in by the insolvent, agreeably to his undertaking on a former occasion.

Phinn appeared on behalf of a creditor named Silk, in support of his claim, which had been inserted in the schedule for 213*l.* being the full amount of several bills of exchange given by the insolvent to the claimant, for securing moneys due from him under his former insolvency, and a new claim for professional services of 43*l.* together with an additional 50*l.* over and above the actual sum due. The learned counsel was ready to concede that unless he could distinguish this case from that of Sherborne v. Osborne (11 Ad. & El. 1027), in which the authorities on the subject were collected, his claim would fall to the ground, excepting so far as related to the 43*l.*, the new consideration. It was quite clear that under the present law a man might give 50 bills for 1*l.* and that it was no usury. In support of this claim he should cite the case of Philpott v. Aslett (1 C. M. & R. 85), where, after taking the benefit of the Insolvent Act, a debtor contracted a new debt, and accepted a bill of exchange for the balance of the old and new debt. Being sued upon the bills, he gave a warrant of attorney for the amount, and judgment being entered up on the warrant of attorney, the Court refused to set it aside. The moral consideration runs over the whole transaction, although it would be impossible to say but that the 43*l.* was the moving cause; but it is submitted that the only person who can take advantage of the circumstance is the debtor himself, and he has not and does not claim to do so. The creditors dispute Mr. Silk's right of claim, and the question is, has the Court power to reject debts contained in the schedule? He then referred to the before mentioned case of Philpott v. Aslett, and contended that, in analogy therewith, the insolvent having, as it were, neglected to plead the statute, he was entitled to claim the full amount.

Mr. Lewis, the solicitor on behalf of the creditors, in reply, referred to the Act of Parliament 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, and a case in Dowling, in which a like instrument was held to be invalid, and under the 31st section of the Act lastly referred to, any party being a creditor might object to the claim; for, supposing it was otherwise, any fraudulent claim might arise by collusion with the insolvent. The document is void.

The COMMISSIONER.—I think the assignees can take any objection insolvent could have taken, and the claim must be inserted in the schedule for the 43*l.* the new consideration only.

The learned counsel then submitted that after the present creditors were paid twenty shillings in the pound, he should be entitled to be paid the residue of the claim if there should be any assets.

The Solicitor for the insolvent, objected that the securities were void, and there could be no claim.

The COMMISSIONER.—The insolvent will then have paid his creditors according to his undertaking, and it will be for him to object or not, as he has the power to do so.

Claim amended to 43l. accordingly.

COUNTRY COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

BRISTOL DISTRICT BANKRUPTCY COURT.

(Before Mr. Commissioner STEVENSON.)
Wednesday, Feb. 12.
Re DRURY.

The choice of assignee under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, cannot be adjourned without an adjournment of the first hearing.

This insolvent came up to-day for his first hearing, when Mr. Higgins, of Bath, solicitor, on behalf of several creditors, appeared to oppose. On examination the insolvent admitted that some years ago he had taken a lease, or agreement for a lease, of some premises, jointly with his brother; that his brother had since given up the whole of the premises to insolvent; that the lease was in the possession of the lessor's attorney, but that he believed his brother had a copy.

Higgins asked for an adjournment, on the ground that he was unable to enter fully into his case until a copy of the lease was filed.

Homes, for the insolvent, suggested that the first hearing should not be adjourned, but that his Honour might name a day for the final order, and reserve leave for Higgins to oppose then as fully as he could do now. The objection as to the omission to file a copy of the lease was only raised for the purpose of delay. The lease was mentioned in the schedule, though no copy was filed, and the insolvent's interest in the premises was not of any value.

Higgins said he relied upon the adjournment, otherwise his clients would have attended to vote in the choice of assignee, or he would have brought letters of attorney. At present he was not prepared, although he represented a sufficient number of creditors to carry the assigneeship.

Homes.—Perhaps your Honour will adjourn the choice of assignee without adjourning the first hearing.

His HONOUR.—I cannot do that. By the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, sec. 3 the choice of the creditors' assignee must take place at the sitting for the first examination, or at some adjournment thereof, i. e. at some adjournment of that sitting. The first hearing must be adjourned. Adjournment accordingly.

(Before Mr. Commissioner Serjeant STEPHEN.)
Re ACRAMAN and Co. Bankrupts. Ex parte MILES.
Evidence.

Where a witness has had ample opportunity to attend and be personally examined, an affidavit from him will not be received, if objected to.

This was a sitting for the examination of witnesses in opposition to a heavy claim of certain creditors under this bankruptcy.

Rolt and Homes appeared for the assignees; Palmer, for the claimants; and Stone, for the assignees under a separate fiat against D. W. and E. Acraman.

Rolt asked leave to file an affidavit of Mr. Holroyd, who had left this country for Calcutta. The affidavit was sworn on the 17th of January.

Palmer objected.—This is a matter entirely in the discretion of the Court, and, under the circumstances of this case, the affidavit should be rejected. Its object is to contradict the evidence of a witness who has been personally examined. Mr. Holroyd has been several times lately in Bristol, and might easily have attended and given his evidence vivâ voce, and submitted himself to cross-examination.

His HONOUR.—When was it first known that Mr. Holroyd's evidence would be required?

Haberfield, solicitor to the assignees.—The point was known in December. I wrote to Mr. Holroyd, requesting him to attend the Court, to be examined vivâ voce, but he said he was engaged in many other matters, and could not possibly attend. This was before the 3rd of January, and he has been in Bristol since.

His HONOUR.—Under these circumstances, I cannot allow the reception of the affidavit. Mr. Holroyd might have been summoned to attend. There was ample time, and as his evidence is for the purpose of contradicting the testimony of another witness, he should have submitted himself to cross-examination in the usual manner.

Affidavit rejected.

ARCHES COURT.

Tuesday, Feb. 18.
The office of the Judge promoted by HOMER and BLOOMER v. JONES.
Practice.

The bishop in whose diocese an offence is committed by a clerk holding preferment in another diocese, may issue a commission of inquiry, and if the commissioner report that there is primâ facie ground for the complaint, the bishop of the diocese in which the defendant holds his preferment is to proceed.

This was a question as to the admissibility of the articles in a proceeding against a clergyman for incontinence. The bishop of the diocese had, under the Church Discipline Act, issued a commission of inquiry, and the Commissioners had reported that there was primâ facie ground for proceeding, upon which the case was sent by letters of request to this court.

Dr. Addams, on behalf of the party proceeded against, objected to the articles, that one of them imputed an offence committed in another diocese, which rendered that article inadmissible, at least, and might extend to the whole, since the proceeding was founded entirely upon the report of the Commissioners, who might have been mainly influenced by that particular charge.

Dr. Phillimore, for the promoter, contended, that there was nothing in the Act which prohibited the Court from entertaining the charges relating to both dioceses. In the case of a clerk holding no preferment, the Act provided that the bishop of the diocese in which the offence was committed should proceed; but there was nothing to shew that if a clerk holding preferment in one diocese, committed an offence in another, he might not be proceeded against by his own bishop.

By the COURT.—Then he may be proceeded against twice for the same offence, for the bishop in whose diocese the offence is committed may proceed.

Dr. Addams.—And if the offence be committed at Paris, there could be no proceeding at all under the Act.

Sir H. JENNER FUST.—The bishop in whose diocese the offence is committed by a clerk holding preferment in another diocese, may issue a commission of inquiry, and if the commissioners report that there is primâ facie ground, the bishop of the diocese in which the party holds preferment is to proceed. In this case, the inquiry of the commissioners, and consequently the articles founded upon their report, must be limited to the diocese in which the party holds preferment; and this Court is confined by the letters of request from the bishop of that diocese, who can only proceed in respect to acts of immorality within his own diocese. The article pleading an offence without the diocese in which the party holds preferment must, therefore, be rejected.

BAIL IN CRIMINAL CASES.

THURSDAY.—The LORD CHANCELLOR obtained leave to bring in a Bill for empowering bail in error to be taken in criminal cases—by which he meant cases of misdemeanor.—To be read a second time on Thursday next.—Lord CAMPBELL asked when the Bill as to the challenge to the array would be ready—The LORD CHANCELLOR answered it was now in a state of preparation.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.

MARRIAGES IN ENGLAND.—It appears from very elaborate tables, prepared by the Register-General of Births, Deaths, and Marriages, and on Tuesday laid before Parliament, that the total number of marriages in 1842, in England and Wales, was 118,825; of these 17,689 were in the metropolis alone. Of this number 26,198 were persons who had been married before, the proportion being, 15,619 widowers, and 10,579 widows. Thus the proportion per cent. of those who were re-married was 11·02 for the whole of England, and 12·34 for the metropolis. The proportion of annual marriages to persons of all ages was 1 in 130 in all England, 1 in 102 in London: the annual marriages were to the persons aged from 20 to 40, nearly as 1 to 40 in England, 1 to 37 in the metropolis; or, more exactly, 2·515 per cent.; and 2·675 (as regards London). There was, altogether, 1 marriage to 136 males and females living in 1842, but only 1 person married for the first time to 76·3 persons living, which may be considered equivalent to 1 first marriage to 153 persons living: 11 per cent. of the persons married had been married before, and had been enumerated in the returns of previous years. In 1839 the number married out of 100,000 males was 1,625: and of 100,000 females 1558; in 1840, 1,597 males, and 1,626 females; in 1841, 1,574 males, and 1,504 females; and in 1842, 1,506 males, and 1,439 females. Thus, it will be perceived, there has been a yearly decrease during that period. The annual average has been, however, 1 in 64 males out of 100,000, and 65 females.

MILLWORK AND MACHINERY.—An account of the declared value of all millwork and machinery exported from the United Kingdom in each quarter of the years 1841, 1842, 1843, and 1844, has just been laid before Parliament in the shape of a printed return, by order of Mr. Cardwell. We find, on examining this paper, that the declared value of the millwork and machinery exported in 1841 amounted to 551,361*l.*, of which 470,133*l.* consisted of legal exportations, and 81,228*l.* of licensed exportations, by warrants of the Treasury or the Privy Council. In 1842 the total value amounted to 554,653*l.*, of which 465,829*l.* consisted of legalized, and 88,824*l.* of licensed exportations. In 1843, the total value amounted to 713,474*l.*, of which 616,399*l.* consisted of legal, and 97,075*l.* of licensed exportations. In 1844 the total value of the machinery and millwork exported from the kingdom amounted to 773,187*l.*, consisting altogether of exportations allowed by law.

COURT OF CHANCERY.—The annual accounts from the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, presented under an Act of the fifth year of the Queen, were issued, shewing the state of the several funds in his name, called the Suitors' Fund, and the Suitors' Fee Fund, and the charges thereon. It appears that on the Suitors' Fund, the payments in the year amounted to 85,494*l.* 0s. 2d. The balance on the account on the 1st of October last was, in cash, 11,803*l.* 8s. 3d.; on stock, 3,207,650*l.* 13s. 5d. On the Suitors' Fee Fund account the charges for the year ending the 24th of November last amounted to 143,992*l.* 15s. 6d., and the excess of fees above the charges amounted to 11,517*l.* 12s. 4d. The public salaries, &c. were 173,434*l.* 2s. 5d., and the fees paid into Court in the year amounted 154,662*l.* 2s. 7d. The cash amounted to 234,125*l.* 7s. 4d., and the stock to 111,781*l.* 1s. 7d. The fees received in the Masters' offices were 38,632*l.* 11s. 6d., and by the Taxing-Master 32,430*l.* 2s. 2d.

POOR AND COUNTY RATES.—A Parliamentary return has been issued, which was procured by Sir James Graham, shewing the total amount of money levied for poor-rates and county-rates in England and Wales, and the amount expended thereout for the relief and maintenance of the poor for the years ended Lady-day 1813 to 1844 inclusive. The total amount of money levied for poor-rates and county-rates in the years mentioned was 238,153,571*l.* and the sum expended for the relief and maintenance of the poor, 190,369,632*l.* The largest sum levied was in the year 1818, when the amount reached 9,320,440*l.* and the smallest in 1820, when it was only 3,719,655*l.* The poor-rates and county-rates in 1844 amounted to 6,848,717*l.* The largest sum expended for the relief and maintenance of the poor was in the year 1818—7,516,702*l.*; and the smallest in 1837, when it was 4,044,741*l.* The following figures exhibit the money levied and the sum expended thereout, for the last four years—from 1840 to 1844 inclusive.—In 1840, money raised, 6,014,605*l.*; expended, 4,579,965*l.* In 1841, 6,351,828*l.*; expended, 4,760,929*l.* In 1842, 6,552,890*l.*; expended, 4,911,498*l.* In 1843, 7,085,595*l.*; expended, 5,208,027*l.* And in 1844, 6,848,717*l.* and the sum expended, 4,982,096*l.*

BIRTHS, DEATHS, AND MARRIAGES.—The annual report of the Registrar-General has recently been issued. The number of marriages entered in 1842 was 111,825; of births, 517,739; and of deaths, 349,519, shewing an excess of births over deaths of 168,220. In the same year (1842), there occurred 10,881 violent deaths and suicides. "The violent deaths in England appear to be nearly twice as frequent as in the other countries of Europe from which returns have been procured, and this is an attempt to determine the causes of the excess, so far as that could be done from the coroners' information, which, although not made at present upon a uniform plan, furnish many valuable facts, and when compared with the occupations and other circumstances recorded in the registers, or ascertained at the census, become doubly interesting." The Registrar-General, in his report to the Home Secretary, alludes to the Act 3 & 4 Vict. c. 92, enabling courts of justice to admit non-parochial registers as evidence of births or baptism, deaths or burials, and marriages. The registrar states "Regulations have been made, with the approbation of one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, for permitting searches, and granting certified copies or extracts from these registers, and the public are entitled to have access to them every day, except Sunday, Christmas-day, and Good Friday, paying for each search 1s., and for a certified copy 2s. 6d. When the facility thus afforded becomes more generally known than it is at present, I anticipate that great numbers will avail themselves of it, and have recourse to this central office, in which are now deposited the registers and records of more than 4,000 religious congregations dissenting from the Established Church." The number of illegitimate children registered in 1842 amounted to 31,796, which is an admitted increase. The baptisms and births returned in 1830 amounted to 399,324; illegitimate children, 20 039. Births registered in 1842, 517,739; illegitimate children, 34,796. The number of boys born is in all countries greater than the number of girls, and it has been generally observed that the excess of males is greater among legitimate children, but in England the difference appears at present to be inconsiderable, or not more than 8 to 10,000. In the lowest terms that express these relations, there were 20 boys to 19 girls among legitimate, and 21 boys to 20 girls among illegitimate children, born alive.

REDUCTION OF CHANCERY FEES.—A return has just been made to an order of the House of Lords of the 17th of February, 1845, showing the dates and substance of all orders of Court for the reduction of fees in the Court of Chancery, made since the passing of the Court of Chancery Offices Abolition Act in 1842; and of the amount per annum of such reductions. According to that return the following important reductions have been made:—An order of the 22nd of March, 1844, reduced the charge upon copies in the office of the clerks of records and writs from 10d. to 8d. per folio, which reduction amounts to 5,884*l.* 15s. 6d. An order of the 15th of April, 1844, reduced copies in the office of the examiners from 1s. 2d. to 8d. per folio; and this reduction amounts to 854*l.* 11s. 6d. An order of the 21st of June, 1844, reduced the charge upon copies in the two before-named offices from 8d. to 6d. per folio; and these reductions amount, in the first office to 5,884*l.* 15s. 6d., and in the second to 284*l.* 17s. 2d. An order of the 13th of November, 1844, reduced the charge upon copies in the same offices from 6d. to 4d. per folio; and these reductions amount to a further sum of 6,169*l.* 12s. 8d. An order of the 12th of February, 1845, reduced the per centage upon the amount of bills of costs as taxed, which, by an order of the 26th of October, 1842, was made payable in the Taxing-master's office, from 4*l.* to 3*l.* per cent.; this reduction amounts to 5,596*l.* 2s. 8d. Thus the total amount of reductions is 24,674*l.* 15s. per annum; the reductions being calculated upon the business done last year.—H. J. Perry, Principal Secretary.

ORDERS OF REMOVAL.—Mr. Tatton Egerton, M.P. for North Cheshire, has obtained an abstract of the returns of appeals made to the Courts of Quarter Sessions against orders of removal during the years 1841, 1842, and 1843. It appears, that in England the total number of appeals amounted in 1843 to 1,751 (1,550 in the counties and 201 in boroughs); that the number of orders confirmed amounted altogether to 101, and the total number quashed to 1,049, of which 547 were quashed on the merits, 371 on points of form, and 94 by consent. The number of appeals not proceeded with amounted to 607. In 1842, the total number of appeals amounted to 1,437, the total of orders confirmed to 97, and the total number quashed to 802. The grand total (inclusive of Wales) shows, that in 1843 there were altogether 1,847 appeals, and that there were 104 orders confirmed, and 1,118 quashed.

PUBLIC PETITIONS.—The first Report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons on Public Petitions has been printed and distributed. The following petitions have already been laid upon the table of the House by various hon. members, viz. two petitions for arranging the existing differences in the Church of England (caused by recent innovations and attempts to establish a system of priestly domination), signed by 162 persons; a petition signed by 192 persons, against the contemplated union of the dioceses of Bangor and St. Asaph; 94 petitioners against a reduction of the sugar and coffee duties; 2 125 petitioners (all of the city of Bath) for a repeal of the window-tax; 1,240 petitioners against the practice of sending troops abroad; 229 petitioners for an alteration of the Medical Practice Bill of 1844; 32 petitioners against the Parochial Settlement Bill of 1844; and 1,298 petitioners for diminishing the number of public-houses. There are various minor petitions, but signed by very few individuals; we therefore pass them over sub silentio.

No. 10. Warrant to apprehend.

SETTLEMENT LAW.—APPEALS.

A VERY interesting and instructive return has just been made to an order of the House of Commons "of all Appeals to Quarter Sessions against Orders of Removal in 1841, 1842, and 1843, distinguishing how many have been quashed on merits, or on points of form."

Returns have been made and are given for every county (except Bedford) and borough in England, and the aggregate result is as follows:—

ruptcy, but that the arrangement upon which the mortgage was given was a mere family arrangement, the debts not being caused by a breach of trust. He, therefore, submitted that interest from the time of the bankruptcy ought not to be allowed. He cited Anon. (4 Taunt. 876); and Page v. Newman (9 Barn. & Cr. 378).

Macnaghten, for the legatees whose claims had been discharged.

The CHIEF JUDGE.—An equitable mortgage is given for a debt, in its nature carrying interest, and a memorandum is given in which interest is not mentioned; afterwards interest is paid by the party owing the money. I am of opinion that the debt is one which carries interest.

COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

(Before Mr. Commissioner FANE.)
Re MARGARET PARRY.

Punishment for vexatiously defending an action—Refusal of the Court to order an insolvent's discharge.

This insolvent was in custody at Bury St. Edmund's Gaol, and having petitioned the Court of Bankruptcy, this day was appointed for the detaining creditor to shew cause why she should not be discharged out of custody until her first hearing, pursuant to the new rules.

T. B. Hughes appeared for the opposing creditor.

A clerk to Messrs. Johnson, Son, and Weatherall, solicitors, attended on behalf of the insolvent.

Hughes took the objection that the clerk could not be heard, and the Court so decided.

The insolvent was described as a straw plait manufacturer, and it appeared she had become a party to an accommodation bill with a person named Mackham, and that the same had been discounted by Mr. Bousfield, the opposing creditor. On the bill arriving at maturity it was not paid, and an action was commenced against the insolvent, to which she pleaded she did not accept the bill. The cause was set down for trial, and only two days before it would have been decided, a summons on order was obtained to withdraw the plea. The opposing creditor's costs amounted to 21*l.* 19*s.* 3*d.* being upwards of 12*l.* more than if a judgment had been suffered to go by default.

The COMMISSIONER, on inquiry, finding she had been in custody two months, thought she was not sufficiently punished for the vexatious defence, and refused to discharge her, fixing a day for her to be heard in a month's time.

Re MALTWOOD, Insolvent.

Clerks (not being Solicitors) cannot be heard.

In this case the insolvent was opposed by Buchanan, solicitor; a clerk to an attorney appeared on behalf of the insolvent. Buchanan took the objection that a clerk could not be heard in this court, but afterwards offered to waive it; but the Commissioner said, Certainly not, we can only hear counsel, solicitors, and the parties themselves; the objection cannot be waived.

Re C. J. MATHEWS.

Where part of consideration of claim was the debt under a former Insolvency Court, creditor can be inserted in the schedule for amount of the new claim only—Assignees can take the same objection as insolvent himself.

This was a dividend meeting for adjustment of claims and distribution of the fund in court, being the whole amount of his first instalment paid in by the insolvent, agreeably to his undertaking on a former occasion.

Phinn appeared on behalf of a creditor named Silk, in support of his claim, which had been inserted in the schedule for 213*l.* being the full amount of several bills of exchange given by the insolvent to the claimant, for securing moneys due from him under his former insolvency, and a new claim for professional services of 43*l.* together with an additional 50*l.* over and above the actual sum due. The learned counsel was ready to concede that unless he could distinguish this case from that of Sherborne v. Osborne (11 Ad. & El. 1027), in which the authorities on the subject were collected, his claim would fall to the ground, excepting so far as related to the 43*l.*, the new consideration. It was quite clear that under the present law a man might give 50 bills for 1*l.* and that it was no usury. In support of this claim he should cite the case of Philpott v. Aslett (1 C. M. & R. 85), where, after taking the benefit of the Insolvent Act, a debtor contracted a new debt, and accepted a bill of exchange for the balance of the old and new debt. Being sued upon the bills, he gave a warrant of attorney for the amount, and judgment being entered up on the warrant of attorney, the Court refused to set it aside. The moral consideration runs over the whole transaction, although it would be impossible to say but that the 43*l.* was the moving cause; but it is submitted that the only person who can take advantage of the circumstance is the debtor himself, and he has not and does not claim to do so. The creditors dispute Mr. Silk's right of claim, and the question is, has the Court power to reject debts contained in the schedule? He then referred to the before-mentioned case of Philpott v. Aslett, and contended that, in analogy therewith, the insolvent having, as it were, neglected to plead the statute, he was entitled to claim the full amount.

Mr. Lewis, the solicitor on behalf of the creditors, in reply, referred to the Act of Parliament 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, and a case in Dowling, in which a like instrument was held to be invalid, and under the 31st section of the Act lastly referred to, any party being a creditor might object to the claim; for, supposing it was otherwise, any fraudulent claim might arise by collusion with the insolvent. The document is void.

The COMMISSIONER.—I think the assignees can take any objection insolvent could have taken, and the claim must be inserted in the schedule for the 43*l.* the new consideration only.

The learned counsel then submitted that after the present creditors were paid twenty shillings in the pound, he should be entitled to be paid the residue of the claim if there should be any assets.

The Solicitor for the insolvent, objected that the securities were void, and there could be no claim.

The COMMISSIONER.—The insolvent will then have paid his creditors according to his undertaking, and it will be for him to object or not, as he has the power to do so.

Claim amended to 43l. accordingly.

COUNTRY COMMISSIONERS' COURTS.

BRISTOL DISTRICT BANKRUPTCY COURT.

(Before Mr. Commissioner STEVENSON.)
Wednesday, Feb. 12.
Re DRURY.

The choice of assignee under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, cannot be adjourned without an adjournment of the first hearing.

This insolvent came up to-day for his first hearing, when Mr. Higgins, of Bath, solicitor, on behalf of several creditors, appeared to oppose. On examination the insolvent admitted that some years ago he had taken a lease, or agreement for a lease, of some premises, jointly with his brother; that his brother had since given up the whole of the premises to insolvent; that the lease was in the possession of the lessor's attorney, but that he believed his brother had a copy.

Higgins asked for an adjournment, on the ground that he was unable to enter fully into his case until a copy of the lease was filed.

Homes, for the insolvent, suggested that the first hearing should not be adjourned, but that his Honour might name a day for the final order, and reserve leave for Higgins to oppose then as fully as he could do now. The objection as to the omission to file a copy of the lease was only raised for the purpose of delay. The lease was mentioned in the schedule, though no copy was filed, and the insolvent's interest in the premises was not of any value.

Higgins said he relied upon the adjournment, otherwise his clients would have attended to vote in the choice of assignee, or he would have brought letters of attorney. At present he was not prepared, although he represented a sufficient number of creditors to carry the assigneeship.

Homes.—Perhaps your Honour will adjourn the choice of assignee without adjourning the first hearing.

His HONOUR.—I cannot do that. By the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, sec. 3 the choice of the creditors' assignee must take place at the sitting for the first examination, or at some adjournment thereof, i. e. at some adjournment of that sitting. The first hearing must be adjourned. Adjournment accordingly.

Evidence.

Where a witness has had ample opportunity to attend and be personally examined, an affidavit from him will not be received, if objected to.

This was a sitting for the examination of witnesses in opposition to a heavy claim of certain creditors under this bankruptcy.

Rolt and Homes appeared for the assignees; Palmer, for the claimants; and Stone, for the assignees under a separate fiat against D. W. and E. Acraman.

Rolt asked leave to file an affidavit of Mr. Holroyd, who had left this country for Calcutta. The affidavit was sworn on the 17th of January.

Palmer objected.—This is a matter entirely in the discretion of the Court, and, under the circumstances of this case, the affidavit should be rejected. Its object is to contradict the evidence of a witness who has been personally examined. Mr. Holroyd has been several times lately in Bristol, and might easily have attended and given his evidence vivâ voce, and submitted himself to cross-examination.

His HONOUR.—When was it first known that Mr. Holroyd's evidence would be required?

Haberfield, solicitor to the assignees.—The point was known in December. I wrote to Mr. Holroyd, requesting him to attend the Court, to be examined vivâ voce, but he said he was engaged in many other matters, and could not possibly attend. This was before the 3rd of January, and he has been in Bristol since.

His HONOUR.—Under these circumstances, I cannot allow the reception of the affidavit. Mr. Holroyd might have been summoned to attend. There was ample time, and as his evidence is for the purpose of contradicting the testimony of another witness, he should have submitted himself to cross-examination in the usual manner.

Affidavit rejected.

ARCHES COURT.

Tuesday, Feb. 18.
The office of the Judge promoted by HOMER and BLOOMER v. JONES.
Practice.

The bishop in whose diocese an offence is committed by a clerk holding preferment in another diocese, may issue a commission of inquiry, and if the commissioner report that there is primâ facie ground for the complaint, the bishop of the diocese in which the defendant holds his preferment is to proceed.

This was a question as to the admissibility of the articles in a proceeding against a clergyman for incontinence. The bishop of the diocese had, under the Church Discipline Act, issued a commission of inquiry, and the Commissioners had reported that there was primâ facie ground for proceeding, upon which the case was sent by letters of request to this court.

Dr. Addams, on behalf of the party proceeded against, objected to the articles, that one of them imputed an offence committed in another diocese, which rendered that article inadmissible, at least, and might extend to the whole, since the proceeding was founded entirely upon the report of the Commissioners, who might have been mainly influenced by that particular charge.

Dr. Phillimore, for the promoter, contended, that there was nothing in the Act which prohibited the Court from entertaining the charges relating to both dioceses. In the case of a clerk holding no preferment, the Act provided that the bishop of the diocese in which the offence was committed should proceed; but there was nothing to shew that if a clerk holding preferment in one diocese, committed an offence in another, he might not be proceeded against by his own bishop.

By the COURT.—Then he may be proceeded against twice for the same offence, for the bishop in whose diocese the offence is committed may proceed.

Dr. Addams.—And if the offence be committed at Paris, there could be no proceeding at all under the Act.

Sir H. JENNER FUST.—The bishop in whose diocese the offence is committed by a clerk holding preferment in another diocese, may issue a commission of inquiry, and if the commissioners report that there is primâ facie ground, the bishop of the diocese in which the party holds preferment is to proceed. In this case, the inquiry of the commissioners, and consequently the articles founded upon their report, must be limited to the diocese in which the party holds preferment; and this Court is confined by the letters of request from the bishop of that diocese, who can only proceed in respect to acts of immorality within his own diocese. The article pleading an offence without the diocese in which the party holds preferment must, therefore, be rejected.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

BAIL IN CRIMINAL CASES.

THURSDAY.—The LORD CHANCELLOR obtained leave to bring in a Bill for empowering bail in error to be taken in criminal cases—by which he meant cases of misdemeanor. To be read a second time on Thursday next.—Lord CAMPBELL asked when the Bill as to the challenge to the array would be ready —The LORD CHANCELLOR answered it was now in a state of preparation.

PARLIAMENTARY PAPERS.

MARRIAGES IN ENGLAND.—It appears from very elaborate tables, prepared by the Register-General of Births, Deaths, and Marriages, and on Tuesday laid before Parliament, that the total number of marriages in 1842, in England and Wales, was 118,825; of these 17,689 were in the metropolis alone. Of this number 26,198 were persons who had been married before, the proportion being, 15,619 widowers, and 10,579 widows. Thus the proportion per cent. of those who were re-married was 11·02 for the whole of England, and 12·34 for the metropolis. The proportion of annual marriages to persons of all ages was 1 in 130 in all England, 1 in 102 in London: the annual marriages were to the persons aged from 20 to 40, nearly as 1 to 40 in England, 1 to 37 in the metropolis; or, more exactly, 2·515 per cent.; and 2·675 (as regards London). There was, altogether, 1 marriage to 136 males and females living in 1842, but only 1 person married for the first time to 76·3 persons living, which may be considered equivalent to 1 first marriage to 153 persons living: 11 per cent. of the persons married had been married before, and had been enumerated in the returns of previous years. In 1839 the number married out of 100,000 males was 1,625: and of 100,000 females 1553; in 1840, 1,597 males, and 1,626 females; in 1841, 1,574 males, and 1,504 females; and in 1842, 1,506 males, and 1,439 females. Thus, it will be perceived there has been a yearly decrease during that period. The annual average has been, however, 1 in 64 males out of 100,000, and 65 females.

MILLWORK AND MACHINERY.—An account of the declared value of all millwork and machinery exported from the United Kingdom in each quarter of the years 1841, 1842, 1843, and 1844, has just been laid before Parliament in the shape of a printed return, by order of Mr. Cardwell. We find, on examining this paper, that the declared value of the millwork and machinery exported in 1841 amounted to 551,361*l.*, of which 470,133*l.* consisted of legal exportations, and 81,228*l.* of licensed exportations, by warrants of the Treasury or the Privy Council. In 1842 the total value amounted to 554,653*l.*, of which 465,829*l.* consisted of legalized, and 88,824*l.* of licensed exportations. In 1843, the total value amounted to 713,474*l.*, of which 616,399*l.* consisted of legal, and 97,075*l.* of licensed exportations. In 1844 the total value of the machinery and millwork exported from the kingdom amounted to 773,187*l.*, consisting altogether of exportations allowed by law.

COURT OF CHANCERY.—The annual accounts from the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, presented under an Act of the fifth year of the Queen, were issued, shewing the state of the several funds in his name, called the Suitors' Fund, and the Suitors' Fee Fund, and the charges thereon. It appears that on the Suitors' Fund, the payments in the year amounted to 85,494*l.* 0s. 2d. The balance on the account on the 1st of October last was, in cash, 11,803*l.* 8s. 3d.; on stock, 3,207,650*l.* 13s 5d. On the Suitors' Fee Fund account the charges for the year ending the 24th of November last amounted to 143,992*l.* 15s. 6d., and the excess of fees above the charges amounted to 11,517*l.* 12s. 4d. The public salaries, &c. were 173,434*l.* 2s. 5d., and the fees paid into Court in the year amounted 154,662*l.* 2s. 7d. The cash amounted to 234,125*l.* 7s. 4d., and the stock to 111,787*l.* 1s. 7d. The fees received in the Masters' offices were 38,632*l.* 11s. 6d., and by the Taxing-Master 32,430*l.* 2s. 2d.

POOR AND COUNTY RATES.—A Parliamentary return has been issued, which was procured by Sir James Graham, shewing the total amount of money levied for poor-rates and county-rates in England and Wales, and the amount expended thereout for the relief and maintenance of the poor for the years ended Lady-day 1813 to 1844 inclusive. The total amount of money levied for poor-rates and county-rates in the years mentioned was 238,153,571*l.* and the sum expended for the relief and maintenance of the poor, 190,369,632*l.* The largest sum levied was in the year 1818, when the amount reached 9,320,440*l.* and the smallest in 1820, when it was only 3,719,655*l.* The poor-rates and county-rates in 1844 amounted to 6,848,717*l.* The largest sum expended for the relief and maintenance of the poor was in the year 1818—7,516,702*l.*; and the smallest in 1837, when it was 4,044,741*l.* The following figures exhibit the money levied and the sum expended thereout, for the last four years from 1840 to 1844 inclusive.—In 1840, money raised, 6,014,605*l.*; expended, 4,579,965*l.* In 1841, 6,351,828*l.*; expended, 4,760,929*l.* In 1842, 6,552,890*l.*; expended, 4,911,498*l.* In 1843, 7,085,595*l.*; expended, 5,208,027*l.* And in 1844, 6,848,717*l.* and the sum expended, 4,982,096*l.*

BIRTHS, DEATHS, AND MARRIAGES.—The annual report of the Registrar-General has recently been issued. The number of marriages entered in 1842 was 111,825; of births, 517,739; and of deaths, 349,519, shewing an excess of births over deaths of 168,220. In the same year (1842), there occurred 10,881 violent deaths and suicides. "The violent deaths in England appear to be nearly twice as frequent as in the other countries of Europe from which returns have been procured, and this is an attempt to determine the causes of the excess, so far as that could be done from the coroners' information, which, although not made at present upon a uniform plan, furnish many valuable facts, and when compared with the occupations and other circumstances recorded in the registers, or ascertained at the census, become doubly interesting." The Registrar-General, in his report to the Home Secretary, alludes to the Act 3 & 4 Vict. c. 92, enabling courts of justice to admit non-parochial registers as evidence of births or baptism, deaths or burials, and marriages. The registrar states—"Regulations have been made, with the approbation of one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, for permitting searches, and granting certified copies or extracts from these registers, and the public are entitled to have access to them every day, except Sunday, Christmas-day, and Good Friday, paying for each search 1s., and for a certified copy 2s. 6d. When the facility thus afforded becomes more generally known than it is at present, I anticipate that great numbers will avail themselves of it, and have recourse to this central office, in which are now deposited the registers and records of more than 4,000 religious congregations dissenting from the Established Church." The number of illegitimate children registered in 1842 amounted to 34,796, which is an admitted increase. The baptisms and births returned in 1830 amounted to 399,324; illegitimate children, 20,039. Births registered in 1842, 517,739; illegitimate children, 34,796. The number of boys born is in all countries greater than the number of girls, and it has been generally observed that the excess of males is greater among legitimate children, but in England the difference appears at present to be inconsiderable, or not more than 8 to 10,000. In the lowest terms that express these relations, there were 20 boys to 19 girls among legitimate, and 21 boys to 20 girls among illegitimate children, born alive.

REDUCTION OF CHANCERY FEES.—A return has just been made to an order of the House of Lords of the 17th of February, 1845, showing the dates and substance of all orders of Court for the reduction of fees in the Court of Chancery, made since the passing of the Court of Chancery Offices Abolition Act in 1842; and of the amount per annum of such reductions. According to that return the following important reductions have been made:—An order of the 22nd of March, 1844, reduced the charge upon copies in the office of the clerks of records and writs from 10d. to 8d. per folio, which reduction amounts to 5,884*l.* 15s. 6d. An order of the 15th of April, 1844, reduced copies in the office of the examiners from 1s. 2d. to 8d. per folio; and this reduction amounts to 854*l.* 11s. 6d. An order of the 21st of June, 1844, reduced the charge upon copies in the two before-named offices from 8d. to 6d. per folio; and these reductions amount, in the first office to 5,884*l.* 15s. 6d., and in the second to 284*l.* 17s. 2d. An order of the 13th of November, 1844, reduced the charge upon copies in the same offices from 6d. to 4d. per folio; and these reductions amount to a further sum of 6,169*l.* 12s. 8d. An order of the 12th of February, 1845, reduced the per centage upon the amount of bills of costs as taxed, which, by an order of the 26th of October, 1842, was made payable in the Taxing-master's office, from 4*l.* to 3*l.* per cent.; this reduction amounts to 5,596*l.* 2s. 8d. Thus the total amount of reductions is 24,674*l.* 15s. per annum; the reductions being calculated upon the business done last year.—H. J. Perry, Principal Secretary.

ORDERS OF REMOVAL.—Mr. Tatton Egerton, M.P. for North Cheshire, has obtained an abstract of the returns of appeals made to the Courts of Quarter Sessions against orders of removal during the years 1841, 1842, and 1843. It appears, that in England the total number of appeals amounted in 1843 to 1,751 (1,550 in the counties and 201 in boroughs); that the number of orders confirmed amounted altogether to 101, and the total number quashed to 1,049, of which 547 were quashed on the merits, 371 on points of form, and 94 by consent. The number of appeals not proceeded with amounted to 607. In 1842, the total number of appeals amounted to 1,437, the total of orders confirmed to 97, and the total number quashed to 802. The grand total (inclusive of Wales) shows, that in 1843 there were altogether 1,847 appeals, and that there were 104 orders confirmed, and 1,118 quashed.

PUBLIC PETITIONS.—The first Report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons on Public Petitions has been printed and distributed. The following petitions have already been laid upon the table of the House by various hon. members, viz. two petitions for arranging the existing differences in the Church of England (caused by recent innovations and attempts to establish a system of priestly domination), signed by 162 persons; a petition signed by 192 persons, against the contemplated union of the dioceses of Bangor and St. Asaph; 94 petitioners against a reduction of the sugar and coffee duties; 2,125 petitioners (all of the city of Bath) for a repeal of the window tax; 1,240 petitioners against the practice of sending troops abroad; 229 petitioners for an alteration of the Medical Practice Bill of 1844; 32 petitioners against the Parochial Settlement Bill of 1844; and 1,298 petitioners for diminishing the number of public-houses. There are various minor petitions, but signed by very few individuals; we therefore pass them over sub silentio.

Summary.

ALL matters of interest to Magistrates that have occurred during the past week will be found collected below.

It will be seen that two more of Mr. SYMONS'S Bastardy Forms are now ready.

No. 9. Information and complaint of non-obedience to the order.
No. 10. Warrant to apprehend.

SETTLEMENT LAW.—APPEALS.

A VERY interesting and instructive return has just been made to an order of the House of Commons "of all Appeals to Quarter Sessions against Orders of Removal in 1841, 1842, and 1843, distinguishing how many have been quashed on merits, or on points of form."

Returns have been made and are given for every county (except Bedford) and borough in England, and the aggregate result is as follows:—

	1841.	1842.	1843.
Orders confirmed . . .	63	97	101
Quashed on the merits . .	369	448	547
Quashed for formal defects .	127	230	371
Quashed by consent . .	57	69	94
Appeals not proceeded with .	347	532	607
Total number quashed . .	574	802	1,049
Total number of appeals . .	984	1,437	1,751

These figures do not exactly tally, owing, in some measure, to the appeals "quashed by consent" being in some counties again classed as quashed on the merits or on points of form. Some counties, also, have returned appeals as quashed both ways.(a) These irregularities prevent any accurate analysis of the subject, but they scarcely detract from the value of the return as affording a general glance of the progress of appeals, and the tendency of the results.

We confess our surprise that appeals are so rapidly on the increase. They have increased, it appears, by upwards of 77 per cent. in three years! There is one obvious reason for some increase, namely, in that of pauperism during the same time. But, by a return also laid before Parliament last week, it appears that the sums expended for the relief and maintenance of the poor in 1841 were 4,760,929*l.*; in 1842, 4,911,498*l.*; and in 1843, 5,208,027.(b) Here is, therefore, an increase of little more than nine per cent.; which cannot account for that of appeals. The counties in which the increase of appeals is the most marked are those of Cornwall, Durham, Salop, Wilts, Stafford (where they have risen from 25 to 104), and the West Riding. In Cheshire and Lancashire the increase took place in 1842, and in Middlesex, where the increase has been but slight, it is confined also to 1842. We should be obliged to our correspondents in these counties, if they who are versed in these matters would communicate to us the means of throwing light upon the phenomenon of so sudden an explosion of parochial litigation.

The return clearly shews the necessity of appeals under the present system, and affords a complete answer to the objection, that the power of appeal gives rise to vexatious and groundless litigation, for of the total number of the appeals of which the result is known, scarcely one out of twenty-five of the orders have been confirmed, and of those quashed, by far the greater part have been quashed on the merits. In this respect there has, it will be observed, been a marked change of late. The disproportion between these two grounds of quashing has been much diminished during the three years. Whereas one only out of fo r was quashed for defect of form in 1841, the proportion in 1843 had grown to about three out of seven. We observe that in the West Riding, where there are far more appeals than either in Lancashire or Middlesex, this has been peculiarly the case: also in Middlesex, Staffordshire, and Cornwall.

We are very far from lamenting this as an evil. It is a ve great benefit to parishes so to insist on plainness and fulness of statement, that there may be no possibility of mistaking the nature and legality of the proceedings taken. We have always set our faces against the ingenious devices put forth for the succour of slovenliness and the protection of a paltry economy in the management of these matters.

We, however, regret to see the increase of appeals on any point, because it would appear that the experience of the last ten years has been less profited by than we hoped had been the case, and that the law was beginning to be tolerably understood. True it is that the commercial crisis of the period in question may have in some measure tended to the augmentation of removals, but we cannot well reconcile this to the very small comparative growth of poor relief. People must become chargeable before they can be removed. There is, upon the whole, some mystery in the matter, of which we must look to the country for a solution.

WHAT IS TO BE DONE WITH MR. LUMLEY'S ORDERS?

This is a question which the Queen's Bench, or in all probability the House of Commons, can alone finally set at rest. In what we are about to say, we must be understood to speak with very great diffidence on a subject so thoroughly complicated, obscure, and difficult. The difficulty arises not only from the positive badness of the orders, and the obvious impossibility of acting with any safety upon them, but from the anomalous character of the proceedings taken under the Act, which divests the case of that light and aid which is derived from established law or recognized decisions of an analogous character. There is nothing parallel to the difficulty in question.

First and foremost, have the magistrates power to make another order, proceeding de novo, and merely treating the former order as a nullity —in point of fact, making an amended order? We believe that they have no such power. In cases of convictions it has been held both legal and laudable to do so. (Rex v. Barker, 1 East, 186.) But the distinction in this respect between convictions and orders was expressly taken in the case of Rex v. JJ. Cheshire (5 B. & Adol. 439). There an informal order had been made, ordering R. O. to pay 72*l.* 5*s.* being double the value of goods fraudulently removed to defeat a distress under 11 Geo. 2, c. 19. The defendant appealed, and on the first day of sessions the justices caused a new and amended order to be filed with the clerk of the peace, giving notice of it on the same day to the appellant. The sessions then persisted in confirming the amended order. A mandamus was, however, granted, compelling the sessions to enter continuances, and hear the appeal on the first order. Parke, J. said, "The moment the justices have put their hands and seals to it, meaning it to be an order, it is one, and must be subject to the same rules." Lord Denman, C. J. also said, "If an order of removal were absurd, could a new one be filed at the sessions? The absurdity of the instrument cannot increase the power of the justices. * * The document here is only an order; and the consequence is, that the party affected by it had a right to appeal against it in the form in which it was made."

Thus, where the putative father has appealed, the order cannot be amended, and must be quashed; and we are clear that no fresh order upon the same charge can be made. The only question arises where the man has not appealed. In such case, instead of proceeding upon the bad order, we are inclined to think that the justices who made the order have the power of issuing a supersedeas and so nullifying it. We are also disposed to think that in giving notice to the man that his costs of the second hearing would be allowed to him, it would, under the circumstances of the case, be permissible to summons him again and proceed de novo. The great objection to the proceeding would be got over by the notice of allowing the costs, for the grievance to the man is in being twice tried upon the same charge. We must again express the entire absence of confidence with which we throw out this not unimportant suggestion. The most experienced lawyers are at a loss how to remedy the mischief of this case. We confess we should like to see this plan tried. The necessity of the case would afford a strong ground of justification were the proceeding brought, as it may probably be, before the Court of Queen's Bench.

Though certainly not strictly analogous, the case of a supersedeas to an order of removal affords at least some degree of support to the course we have suggested. Where an order of removal had been abandoned, and a supersedeas issued before an appeal was entered, the Court of Queen's Bench strongly upheld the sessions in refusing afterwards to hear the appeal, so as to conclude the respondents upon the bad order, and shut them out from the power of obtaining a better. (Reg. v. JJ. West Riding, 2 Q.B. 785.)

We learn that Sir James Graham has given an intimation that an Amendment Bill will be introduced, which may perhaps remove the difficulty.

THE LAWYER.

Summary.

The legal events of the week are few, and none demand particular notice.

The following indignant letter on the subject of some recent promotions has appeared in the Morning Chronicle:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MORNING CHRONICLE.

Sir,—A job and injustice are about to be, if not already, perpetrated. The papers announce that Messrs. Humfrey, Gurney, Hayward, and Butt, are about to be made Queen's Counsel. This is true, and no possible objection can be made to any of those gentlemen. But it is also announced that Mr. Montague Chambers is to be promoted to that rank. This is not true, and a ranker job and grosser injustice never were attempted, even by Lord Lyndhurst. Mr. Chambers is senior to all the four gentlemen who are to be honoured with a silk gown, except Mr. Humfrey, and has certainly triple the practice of two of them, and as much as either of the others; moreover, he is universally esteemed and respected by the bench and bar, and is every way deserving the honour he aspires to. Nor is there any local objection on the ground of his circuit (the Home), as Mr. Gurney, who is his junior on it, is to be favoured with the silk gown. Why, then, is Mr. Chambers refused?

The best way to find that out will be to look to the result. By giving a silk gown to Mr. Gurney and not to Mr. Chambers, Mr. Gurney will lead the Home Circuit, including Mr. Chambers; by giving it to Mr. Chambers, he would lead Mr. Gurney and the Home Circuit. But why favour Mr. Gurney? Lord Lyndhurst's love of a job may be cause enough for this; but there are certain coincidences which are very remarkable; though, suffice it to say that this case is very like the Northern Circuit job, when Mr. Wortley took rank. There it was not granted to any one else for some time, and then to a member of Parliament, and also to a near connection of a then high legal officer; while it was refused to a gentleman senior to Mr. Wortley, and one of the others, and equal to them all in the amount of practice, but who did not possess either of the recommendations I have referred to, or the still stronger one of being son of the President of the Council. To make the present job more palpable, Lord Lyndhurst is about to confer a patent of precedence on a learned serjeant not on the Home Circuit, and to refuse it to two who are, and who have ten times his practice; the object being to put Mr. Gurney over their heads. It is a gross job, and a grievous injustice, not merely to the feelings of a very legitimate ambition, but a pecuniary injustice to Mr. Chambers, nearly amounting to a robbery. If you cannot stop it, at least expose it.—I am, Sir, yours obediently,

A Constant Reader.

Temple, Feb. 17.

Knowing nothing of the merits, we offer no opinion; but a complaint is always entitled to a hearing, and therefore we give to it a place, as we shall do to any explanation or reply.

Mr. Baron Platt.—The members of the Home Circuit held a meeting last week, at the chambers of Mr. Serjeant Channell, at which it was resolved that the learned Baron should be invited to a most magnificent entertainment, as a mark of the high esteem in which he is held by the Bar. The learned Baron has accepted the invitation, and the dinner will consequently take place at the Albion Tavern, on Friday evening next. Mr. Russell Gurney is to preside as chairman in his new capacity as leader of the circuit. The banquet will be of the most costly description, and the tickets are two guineas each.—Times.

Bankruptcy Court at Hull.—It is said to be in contemplation that one of the commissioners of the Leeds district shall hold a court in Hull on one day in every week.

LAW APPOINTMENTS IN N. S. WALES.—In consequence of the lamented death of Sir James Dowling, the Solicitor-General, Mr. A'Beckett has been temporarily appointed by the Governor of New South Wales as judge of the Supreme Court, and Mr. William Montagu Manning has been appointed, also pro tem. to the Solicitor-Generalship. Mr. Manning has filled the situation of Chairman of the Quarter Sessions for New South Wales during the last seven years, to the satisfaction of the whole colony, and various congratulatory addresses have been presented to him from the magistrates. He was the coadjutor of Mr. Neville in the series of Reports in the Queen's Bench, known as Neville and Manning, and is a nephew of Mr. Serjeant Manning. Both these appointments will, we hope, be confirmed by the Home Government, as the long experience which both these gentlemen have had of the colony and its peculiar population, as well as their high character, eminently fits them for the position which they now hold until the Queen's pleasure be known. [We are authorized to state that Serjeants Manning and Channell have been honoured by the grant of patents of precedency under the Great Seal.]

Messrs. Butt and Hayward, of the Western Circuit, and Mr. Russell Gurney, of the Home Circuit, have been appointed Queen's Counsel.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Richard Gibson, of Wigan, in the county palatine of Lancaster, gent.; James Blake, of Croydon, in the county of Surrey, gent.; Henry Yorke, of Oundle, in the county of Northampton, gent. to be Masters Extraordinary in the High Court of Chancery.

WHITEHALL, Feb. 12.—The Right Hon. Sir Nicolas Conyngham Tindal, Knt. Lord Chief Justice of her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas, has appointed Francis Soames, of Workingham, in the county of Berks, gent. to be one of the Perpetual Commissioners for taking the acknowledgments of deeds to be executed by married women, in and for the county of Berks, and also in and for the counties of Wilts, Surrey, Hants, and Oxford.

COURT PAPERS.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

8th Victoria—20th February, 1845.

This Court will, on Saturday, the 1st day of March next, at ten o'clock, A.M., hold a sitting, and will deliver judgment in cases that have been argued.

BY THE COURT.

FURTHER REDUCTION OF CHANCERY FEES.

ORDER OF COURT,

Wednesday, 12th Feb. 1845.

The Right Honourable John Singleton, Lord Lyndhurst, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, by and with the advice and assistance of the Right Honourable Henry, Lord Langdale, Master of the Rolls, the Right Honourable Sir Lancelot Shadwell, Vice-Chancellor of England, the Right Honourable the Vice-Chancellor Sir James Lewis Knight Bruce, and the Right Honourable the Vice-Chancellor Sir James Wigram, do hereby, in pursuance of an Act of Parliament passed in the fifth and sixth years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled "An Act for Abolishing certain Offices of the High Court of Chancery in England," and in pursuance and execution of all other powers enabling him in that behalf, order and direct in manner following, that is to say:—

That the Taxing Masters and their clerks shall, in lieu and instead of the fee of four pounds for per-centage on the amount of every bill of costs as taxed, mentioned in the third schedule to the order of court of the 26th Oct. 1842, receive and take the fee of three pounds for such per-centage, and no more, upon all bills of costs brought in for taxation after the 13th Feb. instant.

That this order be entered with the registrar of the High Court of Chancery.

LEGAL INTELLIGENCE.

WIGNEY'S ESTATE.—The dividends just declared are as follows:—Joint estate, 5d.; I. N. Wigney's separate estate, 4s. 3d.; and C. Wigney's separate, 5s. 3d. in the pound.—Brighton Guardian.

SUBMISSION OF THE ROYAL COURT, JERSEY.—The States met on Tuesday and Wednesday, and discussed with closed doors the subject of Mr. Wilson and the habeas. It was decided, after a rather stormy debate, that the writ should be obeyed under protest; and Mr. Dupré, the solicitor-general, and Mr. Godfray, constable of St. Saviour's, were directed to proceed to London to represent the interests of the states and the Royal Court. They will leave the island this day by the Monarch, and Mr. Wilson will go in the same vessel. Colonel Le Couteur left this island, by the Transit, on Wednesday last.—Jersey Times, of Feb. 7.

IRELAND.

Dublin, Wednesday evening, Feb. 19.

The following gentlemen having been previously admitted members of the Honourable Society of the King's Inns, were sworn in as attorneys of the Court of Exchequer, before the Right Hon. Baron Lefroy, on the last of the eight days after last Hilary Term:—Berkeley Edgar Whitestone, Robert King Piers, Perry Nicholl Bolger, Robert Ross Todd, A.B., Trin. College, Dublin, William Humphrey Browne, Stephen Frewen, John Rowan, Leonard Monogh, William Leeds, William Morris Tandy, James Ansdell Leech, Michael Morony, Leonard Prendergast, William O'Driscoll, Abraham Powell, A.B., Trin. Coll., Dublin, Francis Donagh Henzell, Patrick James Mooney, Ffrench Keogh, —— Kelly, Piers Gale, William Courtenay, Wellington Shegog, and William Colbourne, Esqrs.

THE BENCHERS OF THE KING'S INNS.—MR. HARDY'S CASE.—The Committee (Mr. Commissioner Macan, Q.C., Serjeant Stock, LL.D., and Mr. Gilmore, Q.C.) appointed by the general body of the Benchers to examine into and report upon the facts and circumstances of this case, have at length concluded their laborious investigation, after having sat for eighteen successive days. Their proceedings have been conducted, from the commencement, with extraordinary privacy, no person whatever, not even Mr. Hardy, nor any of his counsel, having been permitted to be present at their meetings, and until their report is laid before the general body of the benchers, which I understand cannot be done until the judges return from circuit, or more probably until the commencement of next term, when a special meeting of all the members of the bench will most probably be summoned for the purpose; under these circumstances, of course, no official information can be expected on the subject at present. I may, however, as the subject is one of great public and professional interest, and that an impression has been for some time gaining ground in the hall of the Four Courts (and I believe there is no doubt that it is founded upon authentic though non-official information) state that the investigation will terminate in a manner highly favourable to the feelings and character of Mr. Hardy, at whose special instance and request, it will be remembered, the inquiry was entered upon; and it is a circumstance strongly confirmatory of this impression, that of several witnesses who were ready to attend and give evidence on behalf of Mr. Hardy before the committee, and whose names were sent in to them by Mr. Hardy for that purpose, it was not deemed necessary to examine a single one.

PROCEEDINGS OF LAW SOCIETIES.

SOCIETY OF ATTORNEYS AND SOLICITORS, IRELAND.

The following petition has emanated from this society, and has been extensively signed by the attorneys of Ireland.

To the Right Honourable and Honourable the Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses in Parliament assembled.

The humble Petition of the undersigned Attorneys and Solicitors, practising in that part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, called Ireland, on behalf of themselves, and the other Attorneys and Solicitors of Ireland.

Sheweth,

That by an Act of Parliament passed in the 46th year of the reign of King George 3, c. 64, the following annual certificate duties were imposed upon every attorney and solicitor practising in Ireland, viz.:—

If not admitted three years, 1*l*.

If more than three years, 3*l*.; and which duties were confirmed by two subsequent Acts, one passed in the 47th year, c. 50, and the other in the 52nd year, c. 87, of King George 3.

That by another Act passed in the 55th year of King George 3, c. 78, the said annual duties were increased, and the following were then imposed in lieu thereof, viz.:—

If admitted for three years and upwards, 8*l*.

If not admitted three years, 3*l*.; and which increased duties were confirmed by a subsequent Act passed in the 56th year of King George 3, c. 56.

That by another Act passed in the 5th and 6th years of the reign of her present Majesty, c. 82, the said duties were further increased, and the following were then imposed, viz.:—

If resident in the city of Dublin, or within three miles thereof, and admitted three years or upwards, 12*l*.

If not admitted so long, 6*l*.

If resident elsewhere in Ireland, and admitted three years or upwards, 8*l*.

If not admitted so long, 4*l*.

That by the said last-mentioned Act, the Stamp Duty upon all articles of clerkship or apprenticeship to an attorney or solicitor (which had been previously 100*l*.) was increased to 120*l*., and a further sum of 1*l*. 15*s*. was imposed on the counterpart thereof, and a duty of 25*l*. is payable upon the admission of an attorney, amounting altogether to the sum of 146*l*. 15*s*. previous to each admission, producing an average annual revenue to the Crown of nearly 20,000*l*., in addition to the duty on the certificate.

That the duties on articles of apprenticeship or clerkship in Ireland for ten years from Hilary Term 1835, to Hilary Term 1845, amounted to about 128,863*l*. 10*s*.; and on admissions for the same period, to 41,830*l*.; making in that period no less a sum than 170 693*l*. 10*s*.

That the profession of attorney and solicitor is the only one in which an individual is subject to an annual tax for liberty to employ his time and talents.

That petitioners do not complain of the duty on indentures of apprenticeship, because it is calculated to exclude persons not likely to be properly qualified.
